Mrs. Rosie Barnes: Does not the hon. Lady accept that in cases such as Thalidomide or Opren there would be one court case between the board and the company instead of the hundreds or thousands that are going on at the moment? That would be a great improvement for everyone involved.

Mrs. Currie: It is worth pointing out that well over 2,000 of the Opren claimants have been paid. It was shown yesterday that some of those claimants had failed to make a claim within the reasonable time limit, which is six times the limit suggested in the Bill.

We should not abrogate people's legal rights. However, the introduction of a no-fault compensation scheme in which the board could initiate action may well result—in fact, I am certain that it would result—in more such cases and not fewer.

The Bill also does not avoid people having to prove fault. To make a successful case under the no-fault compensation scheme suggested in the Bill a patient would need three things: a problem; a medical event; and a proven link between the two. Without those requirements, spurious claims would be paid. Even in New Zealand where the pay-out is based on accidents, people still have to show that the problem was caused by an accident and did not have a natural cause.

Mr. Jim Lester (Broxtowe): Surely it is one thing to prove fault, but another to prove negligence. So many of us feel strongly about the need to prove negligence, not fault.

Mrs. Currie: The process of proving fault is similar to the process of proving that someone caused that fault. In practice the evidence must still be obtained.

Ms. Harriet Harman (Peckham): The difference in the Bill is not the difference between proving fault and proving negligence—this is a no-fault Bill. The difference in the Bill is that instead of having to produce causal links and negligence, one need only prove the causal links. The hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) has not understood that. She certainly is not addressing that point.

Mrs. Currie: It is very difficult to prove fault. For example, 1,500 babies a year are born with cerebral palsy —[Interruption.] The hon. Member for Peckham is not listening so she will not understand what I am saying.

It is extremely difficult in most of the cases involving those babies born with cerebral palsy to prove that that condition is anyone's fault. It is in the nature of medical events that most of what happens is caused by the nature of the disease or the risk associated with the treatment or by some natural process. Most cerebral palsy is caused by congenital problems. The tragedy is that when people try to prove fault, they must still go through a similar process. Although it may not be so complete as pinning it on an individual, they must still show fault.

Mr. Kenneth Hind (Lancashire, West): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mrs. Currie: If my hon. Friend will forgive me, I will not give way. I have already given way more than any other speaker and it might be helpful if I make progress.

If the Bill or something like it is enacted, there will be a serious danger that if we do not try to prove negligence, bad doctors might get off. What is so terrible about proving fault and negligence? I can understand that the British Medical Association and our doctors might think that it was terrible, but we must bear in mind the confidential enquiry into peri-operative deaths—CEPOD—which showed that 21 per cent. of deaths within 30 days of surgery were caused by anaesthetists and surgeons. There are obviously a lot of serious medical faults around. That confidential inquiry was produced only after a battle was waged; many doctors refused to co-operate with it. Of course, doctors want a no-fault compensation scheme because some of them do not want their fault to be identified.

Doctor Tobias at University College hospital has stated:

"in cases of minor head injury, it is increasingly felt unwise for a clinician to discharge a patient from hospital after clinical examination has revealed no apparent damage. Instead there is a growing reliance on skull X-rays and even brain scans, since these provide 'hard evidence' should the patient later become unwell, sue the hospital and the case be brought to court."

If I had had a bang on the head, I would want the brain scan and the X-rays not because I might sue, but because I might die or suffer brain damage otherwise. If defensive medicine leads to better medicine, I am all in favour of it.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State should consider research in Florida that was reported in the British Medical Journal on 29 September 1990. It was found that, in the medical group, 85 per cent. of pay-outs on medical negligence cases were sustained on behalf of only 3 per cent. of doctors. When those doctors' history was checked, it was found that the high payment group had had a large number of complaints against them, particularly in the period four to five years previously. We put up with bad practice far too much. Bad doctors should be tackled. That job is partly for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the General Medical Council, and it is a jolly good job that the British Medical Association may like to take it on board.

I now refer to the point about patient-doctor relationships suffering in the existing system. I am not sure about that. A patient who thinks the world of his doctor does not sue. The patient-doctor relationship has broken down before anybody starts to make a complaint, and the usual problem is precisely that. All the cases that were described so movingly this morning have evolved not from there being a need for no-fault compensation but from the need for better communication between patients and their doctors. In that sense, the new consent form, which was brought in recently and which is so bitterly resented by some doctors, is a step in the right direction towards getting informed consent.

The main problem is costs. The hon. Member for Greenwich has suggested a figure, the BMA has suggested a figure—everyone has suggested a figure. Again, the British Medical Journal, on 29 September 1990 made an effort. One in 25 patients in this country admitted to hospital experiences harm as a result of their stay in hospital. A fifth of all deaths in hospitals may be caused by something going wrong. We know that that is true of surgery. About 300,000 patients in the United Kingdom a year therefore might experience harm, and 45,000 deaths may be caused by that harm, and that would give rise to 75,000 potential cases of negligence from hospital admissions alone. That does not count out-patients attending for surgery—it would be many times that number—and it does not count attendances for general practice.

If we had 75,000 cases at the current average pay-out rate, which is about £17,000, we would be talking not about a couple of hundred million, but about £1·2 billion. That is not far-fetched. The New Zealand scheme costs more than £300 million a year, and that is 1·4 per cent. of their gross national product. In this country we would be talking about several billion pounds for an equivalent figure. If hon. Members think that £1 billion might be far-fetched, let me remind them that, in 1979, we thought that it would be a wonderful idea to give substantial social security payments to old people living in private residential care. The cost in 1979 was 10 million quid. The cost last year was £1·1 billion. We are talking about a potentially enormous amount of money. An effective scheme would cost the earth, and the money would be better spent on improving health care.

Therefore, I do not feel that we should be aiming to introduce no-fault compensation. We should be aiming at fewer faults. We should be aiming at having fewer cases that might lead to such complaints, and we should be indulging in a vigorous pursuit of those at fault and of improvements to reduce the damage that potentially they can do. That would be a lot easier if we were not spending enormous sums of money on thousands of relatively modest claims.

12.3 pm

Mr. Frank Doran (Aberdeen, South): I listened carefully to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie). She seemed to have some difficulty in appreciating the difference between fault and negligence. That is at the root of the system of tort in England and Wales and delict in Scotland—the requirement to prove negligence and the causal link between the incident and the harm.

As a practising solicitor, I have come across many cases in which fault has been alleged, but it has been impossible to prove negligence. There is a real sense of grievance and injustice on the part of an individual in that situation, particularly when he or she has had to go through the hoops and hurdles of the legal system before a case can get into court. Most people find it necessary to apply for legal aid. There is difficulty in receiving legal aid. Also, a prior test is required and, thereafter, there are long delays before cases come to court.

The biggest problem for people who must go through that process after an injury has been caused to them and the change that inevitably occurs to their lives is the complete uncertainty in the system and what it means to them. They can be recovering from the trauma of physical damage but be left with the stress and strain of uncertainty for many years while cases work through our legal system. It is not uncommon for cases to take seven, eight or more years to be heard before the original incident is dealt with. For that and many other reasons, I have long been a supporter of a no-fault liability scheme, not just in cases of medical evidence but for other matters covered by, for example, the New Zealand scheme or the Canadian and Saskatchewan schemes, which were pioneers.

[Mr. Frank Doran]

The hon. Member for Derbyshire, South made much of the cost of the New Zealand scheme. She omitted to mention that it covers not only medical negligence but a range of insurance matters, including road traffic liability and third-party liability under their traffic legislation. Of course it is expensive—so would ours be if all those matters were lumped together.

When I read the Bill, I was struck by the compromises that would have to be made if we set up a no-fault scheme. Clearly, many aspects are left out of the Bill, but they should be an essential part of any scheme. One point that worries me is protection for patients. Legal assistance for patients who have to present cases should be provided. Other hon. Members have mentioned the problem of full access to medical records and assistance in understanding and interpreting them. We should also consider how to deal with the problem of assessing the damages required to be paid. The board that would be set up by the Bill would be a self-perpetuating body which would require some outside influence in determining what damages should be paid. If it had a monopoly, how would it make such an assessment? What comparisons would it make? There are gaps in the Bill. Again, that is part of the inevitable compromise.

There is opposition across a broad range of the establishment, not just on Conservative Benches—I know that it exists on my side of the House also—to the principle of no-fault compensation. One thing that strikes me most is that the Bill focuses on the national health service. In many respects, that service is in a unique position because it is a public body and is directly answerable to the Secretary of State for Health. There are many advantages of the scheme, particularly for the national health service.

We have heard about the potential cost of the scheme. The hon. Member for Derbyshire, South gave grossly inflated figures concerning the likely consequences. Not every incident will result in a claim and not every incident that results in a claim will result in a claim worth the average figure of £17,000. That is certainly not the experience of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): According to a parliamentary question that was answered by the Scottish Minister with responsibility for health, the sum paid out last year in Scotland in cases of compensation amounted to £1·364 million. That was based on an average claim, including claimant's costs, of £17,000. For our country we are not talking about a great deal of money, are we?

Mr. Doran: My hon. Friend makes his point very well, and I shall develop it. What is not included in the costing of the scheme is the court time involved, legal aid costs, which are all costs to the state, the problems within the health service that are created by any litigation, and the cost of running legal services. I have already mentioned the legal costs across the board.

The distraction of the staff is also important. The involvement of any member of staff in a legal claim is a fairly major event for that individual. A whole department may be involved in a claim. I was involved in a complaint brought by one of my constituents recently. It will not result in a claim against the health service, but there appeared to have been negligence. For many months the staff of one department in my local hospital were caught up and distracted. Many of them were worried and stressed by the implications of that complaint. The cost of such stress is never assessed and taken into account when we examine the cost of the present system.

The present system results in several costs both within and outside the system. One is the worry and stress on individuals who are the subject of the fault or negligence claim. That in itself can create costs for the state such as extra industrial injuries benefit or social security benefits for someone who cannot return to work quickly or may suffer illness brought about by the stress and strain of the legal process which they must pursue.

As I said, the NHS is in a unique position because it is a public body through and through. Opposition Members, who support the NHS, want to see it continue to be a public body through and through. The Government are worried about the cost of insurance against negligence and brought in the system of Crown indemnity. That is a step in the right direction because it has taken central control, at least through the various health boards, of health service insurance. The service is becoming self-insured. I have some experience of that because I worked in public bodies—one nationalised industry and a local authority —which made exactly the same decision in respect of their insurance claims. They discovered that they were paying an enormous amount in insurance premiums and that the return from them did not make economic sense. So they decided to become self-insured. They spent the £50,000 premium on setting up their own insurance.

It is common practice now throughout the public sector to pay the equivalent of the insurance premium into a fund that slowly builds up and allows bodies to meet all their insurance claims. I am not sure whether there is a similar practice in the health service. The practice means that bodies can carry their own insurance and keep control of it. They are not in the hands of an insurance company when deciding whether a claim should be settled. They can meet claims or fight them if they decide that they want to do so. They can make decisions on a case-by-case basis.

Administrative costs were cut dramatically by adopting that practice. With on-going payments into the fund, bodies have control of a substantial fund to meet all their liabilities. There is no reason why something similar should not be introduced into the health service. As we heard earlier, the health service spends about £75 million on direct payments of costs. My hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) gave us the example from Scotland. That is an enormous amount of money and I am sure that there is scope for making savings.

The Health Secretary could examine how the system of Crown indemnity might be extended. It would not necessarily require legislation. It could be done administratively. Why not consider the possibility of an experiment in one health board and see what could be done?

The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board was introduced administratively and has operated for 20-odd years. It is subject to delays and there are real criticisms about the way in which it operates, but at least it provides compensation in an area where no compensation was previously available in practice although technically it was always available. There is no reason why the same could not be done in the health service.

The Secretary of State could introduce a scheme whereby an area board did away with the concept of legal challenges and assessed claims on their merits, not necessarily, in the first instance, on the basis of fault, but on the usual legal basis of legal liability for damage caused by negligence. The Secretary of State could experiment and see what effect that scheme had on the area. I am convinced that there would be practical savings which would be extended to the patients making the claims. It would remove from them the uncertainty and fear of the legal process, which I mentioned earlier. Such an experiment would be a valuable test of whether such a scheme could be extended beyond the area of the experiment.

No matter what hon. Members on both sides of the House say about the Bill—we know that the Government have called in the troops to vote against the Bill, so we know their position—there is great anxiety about the way in which compensation claims are dealt with in the health service. It is not good enough to bat down the measure and say that it is inappropriate. Clearly, such measures will be introduced regularly in the House. We want to hear something from the Government about what they propose and how they see the way forward. Shall we be stuck with the rigidities, inequities and inconsistencies of the present system, or does the Secretary of State have some practical proposals to put to the House to show us the way ahead and give us something against which we can test the present system? I do not expect an immediate answer on my idea of an experiment, but I should like the Secretary of State to consider whether it is possible to introduce a scheme administratively as an experiment somewhere in the country.

The Secretary of State for Health (Mr. William Waldegrave): I found the speech of the hon. Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Doran) interesting. I shall come back to some of his suggestions for improving the present position by administrative means. There are some ways of doing that and I have one suggestion which I hope will interest the House later. However, we should be a little careful about analogies with the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board because it has the advantage of having settled beyond peradventure all questions of fault. Criminal liability has been established. It settles the causation in pretty well all cases. It establishes only a small amount of damages. Although it is a useful board, one must be careful with the analogy the health service. It is certainly not analogous with the type of board proposed by the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes).

Dr. Kim Howells (Pontypridd): I remind the Secretary of State that some industries have similar boards which have dealt well with complicated cases where bitterness may arise out of the board's decision. For example, in the coal industry a large number of cases is dealt with. The greatest hardship is taken out of the compensation case before the case comes to court. In certain cases the company is taken to court, but not in all cases, and therefore the courts are not clogged up.

Mr. Waldegrave: There may be arrangements to deal with certain categories of cases in comparable ways, but I shall come back to the matter.

I thank the hon. Member for Greenwich for bringing the House back to an important, interesting and difficult subject. It is not a party subject as such. I have no doubt that the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman), with her usual skill, will attempt to make it so. The begetter of the no-fault compensation lobby, which goes back to the 1950s, was the late lamented Member and great friend of mine, Sir John Foster, who badgered me when I was in the civil service long ago in the 1970s on no-fault compensation schemes. He found a Government more susceptible than ours to his arguments in New Zealand. I am not sure that the New Zealand Government are universally pleased that they allowed themselves to be so badgered by Sir John.

There are supporters and opponents on both sides of the House of the principle of a no-fault compensation scheme. So far in the debate few people have been willing to say that the operation of the law is satisfactory in respect of medical negligence cases and the definition of who is responsible for what at present. I count myself among that consensus, and therefore I shall try to meet some of the points made by my hon. Friends and by the hon. Member for Greenwich.

I repeat that although this is not a party matter, it is a matter on which no Government can stand back and simply allow things to fall out where they may. Immensely important issues are involved. We are being asked to change the relationship between the victim of harm and the person who caused it. That relationship has developed over many years in common law. I believe that the first claims against doctors go back 600 years.

There is nothing to say that the House should not, from time to time, have a go at overturning long-established principles, and we do. However, we must have a strong case to prove that our actions are right.

If we were to overturn the present relationship between someone whose damage is caused by the fault of a doctor in the NHS—it is important to remember that we are talking about only one sector of the medical profession —there would be major implications for such relationships in many other sectors. I must warn the House about that. However much it is legitimate for the hon. Member for Greenwich to say that she cannot solve all the problems at once in one Bill, it is also the duty of the House, and certainly the Government, to consider the implications of the Bill across the board.

Dr. Godman: I know that it is no answer to the problems suffered by someone who experiences massive negligence at the hands of a consultant during an operation, but would not it put the mind of the public at ease slightly if the Government introduced a more efficient disciplinary procedure for the conduct of consultants?

Mr. Waldegrave: Some important comments have been made on that matter today. My hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), in her characteristically robust style, drew the attention of the General Medical Council to the unease that still exists, although I accept it has addressed some of the problems. We all share that feeling. I remind the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) that, with the support of the House and the leaders of the medical profession, various things have been done in terms of a peer-group review of the skills of doctors—a medical audit. In common with all self-governing professions, the GMC has a tremendous duty to relieve public unease by ensuring that the inevitable solidarity that exists in the profession does not overpower the need for justice and accountability. Accountability is an important theme and I am not sure that we heard enough about it in the lead-up to the Bill, although important comments have been made about it today.

We should make such a fundamental change in an important area of our public life only if we have before us a most compelling and coherent case. Preferably we should be able to study exemplars from abroad to see how to do it. We should make that change only when there has been a clear and practical exposition of not just the principle in the broadest sense, but of how it will work. That is what a Second Reading debate is for. Some hon. Members have suggested that we can push the Bill into Committee to sort out the details, but we need to know whether the majority of the House has agreed on a clear principle on which the Committee and experts in my Department can work to make practical.

People have gathered round the no-fault compensation banner for many years, but it is a banner with many different emblems. I read the accounts of the press conference of the hon. Member for Greenwich and I have read the letters from organisations expressing support for the Bill's principle. It is noticeable how differently they render that principle and how few of those organisations are willing to say that they are in favour of a Bill—be it the one introduced today by the hon. Member for Greenwich or that introduced by the hon. Member for Peckham. At that point the House has the right to ask whether those differences exist because it is not easy to produce a Bill embodying that principle which works. I do not believe that the Bill's ability to embody that principle has been demonstrated today and I shall try to explain why.

Mr. Chris Mullin (Sunderland, South): No one is suggesting that it is easy, but we believe that what is proposed is better than what has gone before. Unless the Minister has any better suggestions—we should have heard them before this debate and they should not be tagged on to the end of his speech—he should allow the Bill its Second Reading.

Mr. Waldegrave: Although it was put in the hon. Gentleman's characteristically emollient way, his point is fair. I believe that I shall be able to demonstrate that the desire for change would not be met by the Bill and that, in a number of crucial respects, the Bill would make things worse. That also goes for all the other Bills that have attempted to embody the principle of no-fault compensation. Perhaps the principle is easy to state in the highest level of generality, but not so easy to carry into law. As a result of the Second Reading the House must know that it is submitting to the Committee something that can be made into reasonable law that will improve matters.

The hon. Member for Greenwich listed the criteria that the Bill is designed to meet and we are all agreed on those criteria. The hon. Lady is seeking to improve on the unfairness of the present system and I agree that, in many respects, the present arrangements are perceived as unfair. There is a basic perception that such compensation claims are a lottery. The family of one baby who has suffered may receive £1 million, but another baby with a similar injury may get nothing or only social security support. The new system will involve major changes to principles that have existed in law for many years and we must be certain that it will produce a better system with less unfairness.

We all respect the concern that the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) has expressed on this matter, and on other similar matters, but it is no good saying that it is disgraceful of me to oppose something if the origin of my opposition is my belief that the Bill will make matters worse. I must try to persuade the right hon. Gentleman of that.

Would we have less unfairness as a result of the Bill? Clearly not. We would still have negligence claims—I plead with hon. Members to remember that. The hon. Lady played down the fact that people may not like the compensation offered by the board—the hon. Lady and the hon. Member for Peckham have rightly said that such compensation must be cash limited and the hon. Member for Peckham has reiterated that the Labour party is committed to cash-limiting the health service—because the awards will not be very big. Comparison has been made with the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board—we should not follow that comparison too far—but it deals only in awards of between £2,000 and £3,000.

Under the most analogous foreign systems—although none of them approximates closely to the system that we would obtain under the Bill—the sums awarded would be between £10,000 and £20,000. On the advice of their lawyers many people will refuse such awards, thinking that they will get more by suing for negligence and damages through the courts. So many of the most heart-rending cases will continue. The hon. Member for Greenwich offered a most moving example in her speech today and at her press conference—of a woman who took her case through all the courts and finally lost, on the issue of causation I believe. Costs were awarded against her and the whole episode was a terrible disaster. Her solicitor, who was also present at the press conference, said, as I understand it, that this Bill would make no difference to such cases: the woman would have been likely to pursue her case in any event. So this is one category of unfairness that would persist under the Bill——

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: The lady in question has made her case well known and she has made it clear that she pursued the case through the courts in the first place to get to the bottom of what happened and to be given a proper explanation. She is, of course, devastated by the £150,000 costs awarded against her, but she is less worried about having lost her award. It must be forcibly stated that the courts are sometimes used to get explanations that are otherwise unobtainable.

Mr. Waldegrave: That is a fair point, but the solicitor, Mr. Body, said that since the woman ultimately lost on causation she would not have got compensation from the board either—so her case would not have been helped at all.

Miss Emma Nicholson: Does my right hon. Friend agree that the Access to Health Records Act 1990 was drafted a little more narrowly than it should have been and that the way to get increased access to medical information for patients might lie in re-examining that Act and perhaps other measures of that nature, instead of following the proposal of the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes)?

Mr. Waldegrave: The hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) greatly assisted the progress that we have made on medical records, although the Act has not yet come into force and we must see how it works when it does.

There would be new unfairnesses under the Bill. In the past few days large compensation claims have been paid to children involved in tragic car accidents. Clear fault was established and I expect that the insurance companies ultimately paid the people involved. Such cases will also persist. Similar cases involving brain-damaged children and damage done by other public services will be settled with no change from the present system. No one could claim that that would be fairer than what happens now. If a person is hit by a British Rail train and full negligence is not shown, that person will receive no compensation; but people who are the subject of accidents in the health service will have an automatic right to some compensation. Of course, the hon. Member for Greenwich says that she cannot deal with everything at once, but she is pushing us in the direction of what happens in New Zealand, although everyone, including the hon. Members for Peckham and for Greenwich, now agrees that the New Zealand system is cracking up. It does not work and New Zealanders are backing away from it. The hon. Member for Peckham may say that the Labour party is committed to introducing such a Bill; if so, she is committing her party to another £300 million or £400 million of expenditure. She should talk to some of the lawyers in her party—they may not be as keen as she is. We do not want to land ourselves in a frightful muddle.

Mr. Terence L. Higgins (Worthing): Does my right hon. Friend agree that in all the cases that have been mentioned it is probably possible to obtain redress through the courts, but that the group who have been really unfairly treated are the nuclear test veterans who cannot take action through the courts?

Mr. Waldegrave: That runs well outside my departmental responsibilities, but I agree with the first part of my right hon. Friend's intervention.

Yet another extraordinary unfairness would arise under the Bill. Let us imagine that the board pays compensation in a case but then comes to the conclusion that it should take the case forward for negligence, even though the person involved has not, possibly because he is satisfied by the quicker process. The board might win its case for compensation and, having awarded the victim £50,000, win £1 million. In that case the person concerned would get no more money; other claimants with less good cases would get it, because it would spread among other cases under the regime of the Bill. That would not be right. People would claim strongly that the money that had been won was theirs. Perhaps that anomaly could be removed in Committee, but there are signs that the problem has not been thought through.

Mr. Doran: The board's claim would be limited to its own loss. It is not a case of the injured person's loss being transmitted and that being the test. The test is what the board has paid out.

Mr. Waldegrave: If the board fought a negligence case, it would gain what the individual would have received if the case had been fought by that individual. The individual would have won, just as the board had won. The individual would then receive compensation on the usual basis. The hon. Gentleman cannot escape from that conclusion.

The procedure involves acute unfairness to doctors. There is a double jeopardy. The doctor is asked to co-operate with the board. He is asked to apologise. Dubious causation is established. Then a negligence claim is made by the board against him. I do not believe that a doctor should be put in that position.

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: It is not intended that the board should enter into negligence actions against NHS employees, including doctors. The intention is to take action against third parties—NHS suppliers whose products may have caused a problem through being faulty. The intention is to recoup that money. We do not intend to pursue the doctors through the courts. We want to refer to the appropiate authority only matters that are not being dealt with.

Mr. Waldegrave: This is a new and fundamental principle—that only one category of negligence claims is to be pursued by the board. Such a new idea would be difficult to uphold. There would be cases under the criteria set out by the hon. Lady where it would be right for the board to sue a doctor for negligence. If the intention is to sue only Eli Lilly, which, rather to my astonishment, is in alliance with the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South because it is in favour of the Bill, I am told by one of my hon. Friends—it must be the first time in history that that particular alliance has been forged—that would be a new source of unfairness. Only one form of negligence case would be pursued, not others. That is why I am willing to debate with the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South my view that my opposition is not inhuman; I am just trying to find out whether the Bill would improve the position. I believe that it does not do away with unfairness. It introduces much more unfairness.

The second criticism of the present system relates to accountability. The hon. Member for Greenwich made the point at her press conference that if the case is settled out of court there will be little accountability. The Bill does nothing about that. The best negligence cases that the hon. Lady's Bill will not exclude—although the Bill introduced by the hon. Member for Peckham would have excluded them—will continue to be settled out of court, just as they are now. Therefore, the Bill provides no help in that direction. However, together with the presidents of the royal colleges, we should try to draw explicit lessons from court cases. I shall return to the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Sir. M. McNair-Wilson) about gathering information centrally to draw lessons that can be fed into our growing means of improving medical standards, audits and so on, based on existing cases.

Difficulty over access to the ordinary court system often prevents an explanation of and the disentangling of tragic events. Above all, in my constituency experience, people want to know whether negligence could have been avoided. We want people to be able to gain quicker and better access to the courts.

Unusually for a Secretary of State standing at the Dispatch Box, I have to say that I am alarmed by the degree of power that is given to me and my successors by the Bill. At two crucial points in it, important matters are left to the Secretary of State for his guidance. Causation, which could often be proved before the board only with great difficulty, will not accord with the usual legal definition, because I am to make my definition

"having regard to the difficulties in establishing causation in law."

My new definition, which will be more intelligent and sensitive than that developed over hundreds of years by lawyers, will be compared with the definition used by the courts when dealing with the same case. That would be extremely odd. The board may pursue a case in the High Court and a verdict may be reached according to the normal definitions of law, but that will be compared with a wholly different definition used by me. If there is no difference, what is the point of a new definition? If I establish a new definition, it will create a fresh set of problems and conflict with the existing legal system.

The Bill would also allow me, under schedule 2, to do all sorts of unnamed things in relation to disciplinary bodies. That is not something that should be sorted out later in Committee. If I were to come to the House and ask for such powers, I would be met with a good deal of uproar from the Opposition, and certainly my hon. Friend the Member for Tiverton (Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop) would find such a proposal intolerable.

The pig in the poke that we are being asked to buy will, by its very nature, diminish accountability. That is the nature of no-fault schemes—and part of their merits in the eyes of their proponents. They do not seek to lay blame. If one wants to do that, there is no escape from the much-maligned adversarial court system. If one wants to put the blame on someone, that individual must be allowed to defend himself—and will therefore place himself in an adversarial position, of the sort that I find myself adopting towards the hon. Gentleman to whom I give way.

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Secretary of State introduces a new dimension that runs counter to an argument that the Minister for Health, who is seated next to the right hon. Gentleman, will recall from the Committee debates in 1989 on the National Health Service and Community Care Bill. Then, the right hon. Gentleman's predecessor took upon himself power upon power, without as much as an apology or a blush. Is the Secretary of State announcing a policy change? If he is worried about the time taken by courts to deal with cases, do his calculations about bureaucracy and costs take into account the abuse of the existing system? Will not the Bill give the right hon. Gentleman an opportunity to do something about that?

Mr. Waldegrave: A private Member's Bill comes to the House with the major and difficult issues left for the Secretary of State to address. On Second Reading, we should be debating matters such as the nature of causation and the sort of no-fault concept that we have in mind.

I refer to the point about double jeopardy made by the hon. Member for Peckham. Schedule 2(6) states:

"Where the Board pursues any legal claim which it has passed to it, the value of that claim shall not be restricted to the level of compensation that the Board has paid to the claimant, but shall be assessed by reference to the damages that would have been awarded to the claimant had he pursued the legal claim himself."

I thought that my earlier remarks were correct, so it seems that the hon. Member for Peckham has not read to the end of the Bill. I only argue with the hon. Lady because she has been making inflammatory remarks from a sedentary position and occasionally I must be allowed to strike back.

There is a consensus in the House that cases should be dealt with by the courts more quickly and in a fairer way. However, there is the danger of litigiousness and a horror of the sort of cases that arise in America. The hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) is bound to be in favour of this revolutionary change, on principle. [HON. MEMBERS: "He is a reformer."] Yes, he is a genuine reformer. However, would the dramatic reform that we are being asked to consider limit litigiousness? That is a prefectly reasonable question for the hon. Member for Greenwich, as it is one of the reforms which she claims for her Bill. It will not do so, for the following reasons. There would be bound to be more cases against the NHS under this proposal, because a lower level of proof would be required to get compensation, as no fault is involved. If I am allowed the powers granted in the Bill there will be a lower test of causation than the reasonable test that the courts use at present which will result in many more cases. There would be more claims against the national health service than against any other service, because claims against other services would still be dealt with using the recognised legal concept of causation.

With all respect to my hon. Friends and to Opposition Members who are lawyers, the legal profession will not turn down the chance of a whole new industry of bringing cases against the NHS. One sees advertisements for solicitors in newspapers now. I saw such an advert in a Hampshire paper last week which said, "Do you feel you have a negligence claim against the NHS?" I suppose that that is fair enough, and that solicitors should be able to publicise, but the Bill would result in a great deal of pressure to bring cases because of the lower criteria required.

American litigiousness has produced a new phenomenon called defensive medicine, although there is more anecdote than proof of it. As a result of this Bill there will be a new form of defensive medicine. The present form —if it exists and whether or not it is a bad thing—would remain and ordinary negligence cases would continue as at present. The Bill does not exclude that. However, a new form of defensive medicine would emerge.

All medicine has risks attached to it. As a result of the Bill, doctors would not only take steps to avoid pressure from negligence claims—although sometimes those steps are a good thing and we should take more of them—but would move away from any medical practice which has risk attached. All medicine involves some risk, but doctors would not wish to go before the board or to be constantly involved in inquiries, and so would decide to move away from any medicine with a slightly higher risk factor. That would be wrong, partly because no medical practice is entirely without risk, and partly because medical decisions should be made as a result of proper clinical judgments and should not be influenced by other considerations such as boards.

Mr. Couchman: Does my right hon. Friend agree that the Bill will also militate against innovative procedures and treatment?

Mr. Waldegrave: That is probably so. If a doctor followed that route he would probably end up before the board.

Defensive medicine is a serious matter, which must be considered. There is a lot of loose talk on the subject and as I said earlier, some defensive medicine can be a good thing. For example, the King's Fund report of 1988 showed that much defensive medicine in the United States was concerned with closer monitoring of patients and better record-keeping. I believe that one of the midwives at the press conference given by the hon. Member for Greenwich gave an example of unsatisfactory defensive medicine—the electronic foetal monitor. I was jolly pleased that there was electronic foetal monitoring for all four of my children and I would not wish to do anything to diminish that modern good practice.

I am trying to persuade the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South that the Bill will not make things better. It might do away with existing defensive medicine —whether that is good or bad—and it would introduce a new type.

Mr. Ashley: I appreciate what the Secretary of State is saying and although I do not agree with his objections to the Bill, I know that he puts them forward in good faith. What are his alternatives to the present scandalous situation?

Mr. Waldegrave: Hon. Members will be united in pressing me on that. First, let me finish my explanation of why I think the Bill does not help and why we must therefore look to some other proposals.

My last objection is on grounds of cost. At present, most cases—about 95 per cent—are settled below £100,000, although some headline cases, usually involving children, result in much higher settlements. Surely it is naive to think that if the Bill is enacted, there will not be a very large increase in the number of claims. Unless the awards are extremely small—at the level of criminal injuries compensation type awards of £2,000 or £3,000—most people are bound to go for negligence and, if they are not, the cost will be very great. The BMA says £100 million; the King's Fund used to say £300 million to £400 million and is now saying about £230 million. At any rate, considerable sums will be involved. Nobody really knows, but there would be rapid expansion.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: Is not it the case that although people in Sweden and Finland have the right to use the courts, an extremely small percentage exercise that right, and that most are satisfied with what the compensation board offers?

Mr. Waldegrave: I know more about Sweden than about Finland, although I suspect that the arrangements are rather similar. The trouble with an analogy with Sweden is that the scheme represents a small top-up to a very generous disability system, which would be the delight of many hon. Members on both sides of the House if we could afford it. I fear that that is the answer to my hon. Friend's question and we looked into the matter to see why that was so.

Sir Barney Hayhoe (Brentford and Isleworth): The Secretary of State is about to explain what he thinks could be put in place of the proposals in the Bill. Many of us who have studied the subject carefully do not accept that just because the present situation is bad—we all accept that it is—we should necessarily adopt the proposals of the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes). Many of us agree with my right hon. Friend's case, which is that those proposals would make matters worse. I want to make that absolutely clear before we reach what I hope will be my right hon. Friend's constructive proposals for improving the present arrangements.

Mr. Waldegrave: That is the structure of my argument and I am grateful for my right hon. Friend's endorsement of it.

We have problems with each of the matters that the Member for Greenwich and the supporters of the Bill, have, honestly and straightforwardly, sought to address, but which I argue are not addressed effectively in her approach. First, we have a problem with access to health records—a point to which hon. Members have referred. The Access to Health Records Act 1990, introduced by the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North, comes into action on 1 November and will be of considerable help in terms of enabling justified cases to be brought.

A whole battery of matters—described by the hon. Member for Peckham as a smokescreen, which they are not—arise from the civil justice review started by Lord Hailsham in 1985. Some of the most distinguished experts in the field—for example, Roger Pannone and Lord Griffiths—took part in that review and a large number of the 91 recommendations are either in train or about to be set in train. I shall mention them because, if we are criticising the tort system, we should know what is being done to make it better.

The review looked into three main areas—matching cases to judges, what the lawyers call the cards-on-the-table approach, and changes to reduce delay. New arrangements for the allocation of business between the High Court and the county court will ensure that cases are heard by the appropriate level of judge. Smaller value cases will be heard, for the most part, in the county courts, thereby reserving the High Court for the cases in which it should properly be involved. To achieve that, county courts will be given unlimited jurisdiction and all personal injury claims involving amounts below £50,000 will be required to start in the county court. All cases set down to trial will be scrutinised and decisions will be made on the appropriate forum for trial based on the criteria of substance—the value of the claim and the importance and the complexity of the case. District judges' trial jurisdiction will be increased to £5,000 in line with that of circuit judges and the limit for the automatic reference to arbitration will be increased from £500 to £1,000.

Then there is the so-called cards-on-the-table approach. The aim is for parties to provide each other with information at an early stage of the proceedings to clarify the issues, encourage settlements and shorten trials.

Since last June, a plaintiff with a personal injury claim has been required to provide a medical report and statement quantifying the losses he has suffered, or continues to suffer as a result of his injuries, with his particulars of claim. A further rule change requires the defendant to inform the plaintiff of any facts on which he intends to rely to contest the damages claim. Those rules give each party important information at the outset of proceedings rather than closer to the trial.

From July—this has not been introduced in the debate —parties in defended actions will be required to exchange the statements of witnesses on whose evidence they intend to rely. That will lead to better-informed settlement at an earlier stage of the action. Where a case goes to trial, the length of the hearing should be shortened as issues will have been identified and the need for oral evidence reduced.

Changes to reduce delay have been introduced. A period for serving a writ or any other originating process has been reduced from 12 to four months. A defendant will therefore have speedier notice of an action being taken against him and the overall period between issue and trial should be reduced accordingly.

Courts now have more power to split trials—to say that a question of liability be heard in advance of an assessment of damages. Previously, an order for split trials could be made only on application by one of the parties. A further change is the introduction of automatic directions in the county court which provides parties with a timetable of standard directions leading to trial. That means that the parties need not go to the High Court for such a direction.

A county court can now order provisional damages in similar circumstances to the High Court. That allows a plaintiff to receive damages while maintaining his right to claim further damages if his injuries deteriorate.

Since 1985, a number of county court trial centres have been established that can offer continuous hearings. There are 74 such centres and a further four are planned. The Lord Chancellor will next consider steps to allow courts to adopt an interventionist role in ensuring that cases progress.

The House will be aware that, as I have shifted to a legal brief, I am, in a sense, speaking with the permission of the Lord Chancellor. This important battery of changes and reforms are aimed exactly at the target that we should be aiming at.

Mrs. Currie: Is my right hon. Friend aware that, following my visit to Sweden in 1987, my right hon. Friend the Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton) and I, who were then serving at the Department, instead of accepting a no-fault compensation scheme decided to recommend certain changes to the Lord Chancellor's criminal law review committee? I must place it on record that I am delighted to hear the changes that he has announced, particularly the improvement in the county court procedure, which will help all the claims of which he has spoken today.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am delighted that my hon. Friend was involved in the conception of these matters with the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Lester: Surely all these improvements, which are welcome and which we appreciate, do not help where negligence must be proved but where, as a result of advice that it cannot be proved, the person is not given legal aid. All these improvements will not bring the cases that concern many of us to fruition.

Mr. Waldegrave: My hon. Friend makes the point that if one has no case in law one will not get legal aid. That is, indeed, the truth. I have attempted to argue that the no-fault scheme does not solve that, but causes the range of separate problems that I have tried to describe.

Mr. Nicholls: Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Waldegrave: I must press on. The hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow is rightly pointing at the clock.

I have something new to put before the House which may be of some interest. The Pearson commission discussed arbitration procedures. More recently, Lord Griffiths proposed that we should offer an arbitration procedure for cases in which negligence must be proven. He suggested a panel of two doctors and a lawyer agreeable to either side. They would work entirely on paper and would have full access to case notes and hospital records. There would be no appeal. The panel would apply the normal principle of negligence under common law.

I am aware that there may be many cases—I am trying to meet a point made by the hon. Member for Greenwich—in which speed and simplicity of solution may be acceptable to the claimant in exchange for losing the ultimate right to bigger damages. I am willing to examine that, although I am not committing the Government today. However, we should have discussions with those who are interested.

One benefit of the debate started by the hon. Member for Greenwich is that attention is now focused on the issues and people are now thinking about them. I should be willing to discuss with groups who are concerned whether such an arbitration prodecure, which we could offer administratively in the national health service and which would not need primary legislation, could provide a second string to the general court bow. The key objective would be to provide quicker, cheaper and simpler avenues for the informal resolution of disputes. I put that suggestion to the House in good faith, but without final commitment. The suggestion needs to be discussed, costed——

Mr. Peter Griffiths (Portsmouth, North): Will my right hon. Friend give way on that point?

Mr. Waldegrave: I must proceed. I apologise to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: On that point.

Mr. Waldegrave: I will give way, but this really is the last time.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: If I heard my right hon. Friend correctly, he was foreshadowing the composition of an arbitration tribunal as being one lawyer and two doctors. Is not it rather difficult to conceive of a decision having to be reached on the legal concept of what constitutes negligence when the majority representation on the panel would not consist of lawyers?

Mr. Waldegrave: I do not think that we should now debate that point, suggested by Lord Griffiths. If it is thought to be acceptable by those who are interested, we should consult on it.

We need to know a little more about defensive medicine. We have heard anecdotes and we have seen the study by the King's Fund which seemed to suggest that, in one sense, defensive medicine may be good. We have also seen the evidence published in a recent edition of the British Medical Journal which shows that the number of American claims is falling. When we talk about America in the House, we are often out of date about what is happening. There is now a distinct downward turn about which we need to know.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury that it is odd that we do not have proper central information about the matter. We should review the incidence of medical accidents and carry out a proper analysis of claims so that we know what we are talking about. Two research projects are needed before we launch ourselves into uncharted territory. What do we mean by defensive medicine? Is it a good or a bad thing? We must investigate that, as I propose to do with the help of the presidents of the royal colleges. We should have proper evidence about the extent of existing cases.

The hon. Member for Greenwich said—and I have some sympathy with this—that there is something odd about enormous lump sums claims that are based on the principle that the person in question will have the most expensive Harley street treatment. The Bill simply reverses that and says that damages should be awarded on the basis that people have to have NHS treatment. That is not right either. The reason why Aneurin Bevan put such a provision in the original legislation was that he accepted the civil liberties case that one cannot compel someone to have national health service treatment. People must have the option to go elsewhere, especially if they have been damaged by NHS treatment. However, it seems wrong that a person can be given damages on the basis that he will use extensive private medicine, but may not actually do so.

We have discussed the level of damages in relation to the lifetime of the patient concerned. The damages may be too low because, as the hon. Member for Greenwich said, there has been medical progress, or they may be too high. I have had discussions with my noble friend the Lord Chancellor. He has authorised me to tell the House that he has been discussing with the Law Commission the possibility of instituting a new inquiry into personal injury damages which would consider, among other matters, the issue of so-called "structured payments". That is right.

I must advise the House that, even with such measures, the Bill would involve considerable costs for the national health service. The most charitable and positive way to put the matter is to say that the argument that the new principles that we are being asked to endorse are either practical or would improve the position is not proven. I must ask the House to vote against the Bill on Second Reading.

1.4 pm

Ms. Harriet Harman (Peckham): I welcome the Bill. The hon. Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes) has taken up the cudgel in a worthy cause, which has long been the subject of campaigns by my right hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) and numerous others on both sides of the House. The Labour party supports no-fault compensation and I will certainly vote for the Bill's Second Reading.

I agree with everything that was said by the hon. Member for Greenwich, who set out the arguments extremely well. A service must be judged by what happens when things go wrong as well as what happens when they go well. Although the Government pay lip service to patients' rights, patients are treated shamefully when problems arise. The current compensation system adds insult to injury: it is a cruel lottery, in which a very few people receive large sums and most receive nothing—not even an explanation or an apology.

The Secretary of State spoke of a "perception" of unfairness. Patients do not "perceive" that the system is unfair; it is indeed monstrously unfair and the right hon. Gentleman's response completely failed to recognise the scale of the injustice that we shall continue to allow unless we make changes. Even those who win compensation must fight in the courts for up to eight years before they are given their entitlement, and justice delayed is justice denied. That is certainly true for the parents of a child who, having gone into hospital for a routine operation, comes out brain-damaged: those parents must spend eight years of their child's life struggling on the bread line. They need the money at the time when they must give up their jobs and move house, not eight years later, after experiencing all the risks and stress of a legal struggle to prove negligence.

When things go wrong, the odds are stacked against the victim. There will be no compensation at all unless the victim can show that someone was at fault. That is the key point of the Bill, which removes the need to prove negligence and fault. It is very hard to prove that a doctor was negligent. The hon. Member for Northampton, South (Mr. Morris) was right in saying that medicine was an inexact science. It is not just a question of the difficulty of proving fault; it is also difficult to know whether someone was at fault. But we can all tell when something has gone badly wrong. We want a system that compensates people when things have gone badly wrong, without the need to prove negligence.

Mr. Michael Stern (Bristol, North-West): I am listening to the hon. Lady with interest. Does she believe that, if the need to prove negligence were removed, the result would be more or fewer cases in which negligence was identified for the protection of other patients of a practitioner who might be negligent again? I accept that the Bill would remove the delay involved in proving negligence, but what about those other patients?

Ms. Harman: I intend to deal with questions of accountability and discipline later.

No one would deny that something went badly wrong for the AIDS haemophiliacs who were victims of a terrible mishap. The Secretary of State, who has come here to defend the current legal system, says that it would give them no compensation. That is one of the best arguments for changing the current system of compensation. If the Government's legal advice is right—if, had there been no publicity campaign and if the Government had not used their discretion, those haemophiliacs would have been left with nothing—the system is clearly all wrong.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is rather difficult to show how this Bill would make a difference. The haemophiliacs were offered sums equivalent to the amounts likely to come from the proposed compensation board. They were offered about £28,000 and they refused it as they were free to, just as they would have refused an offer made by the compensation board. They then pursued their case in the courts and they would have a similar right to do that under the Bill. The Bill would make no difference to the haemophiliacs.

Ms. Harman: That is not the case [HON. MEMBERS: "Why?"] The Government had to make a special discretionary award in response to public pressure. That shows why the system must be changed. Although the haemophiliacs were able to mobilise public pressure to bear on the Government, there are thousands of individuals who, because they are alone in suffering the consequences of a particular accident, receive nothing, despite the fact that their personal tragedies may be as grave as that of the haemophiliacs.

What about people who contracted HIV as a result of infected blood transfusions, but who are not haemophiliacs? The haemophiliacs have organised themselves and have been offered compensation because of their pressure on the Government. However, women who contracted HIV when they were given a blood transfusion after child birth do not get compensation. How can we possibly defend a system that allows that to happen?

Mr. Robert G. Hughes (Harrow, West): The Bill would not change that.

Ms. Harman: Yes it would. As that woman had entered hospital expecting to have a baby, but came out HIV positive, the Bill would ensure that she was entitled to compensation. At the moment she cannot receive that compensation unless she can go to court, live long enough to see the case come to court and finally prove negligence.

Somone cannot begin the battle for compensation through that court unless he or she is poor enough to qualify for legal aid. The Secretary of State did not consider the fact that only 55 per cent. of the population qualifies for legal aid. People cannot begin to go to court and take advantage of the so-called speeded-up procedures, which, by the way, have yet to materialise, unless they are poor enough to qualify for legal aid or rich enough to risk the thousands of pounds involved in legal costs in order to prove negligence.

Mr. Nicholls: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Ms. Harman: No, I will not give way. My experience of the interventions that I have allowed is that I was about to reach the point raised in the intervention and to demolish it. It is not worth giving way.

No system of compensation can be fair when it rules out from the outset most people who should be entitled to compensation and prevents them from even making a claim. How can we justify a system under which more than half the population cannot even begin to make a claim? The Bill's opponents who support the current system should tell us how they can justify that. They have not justified such a system so far.

Most people who claim against the NHS for negligence receive legal aid. However, that does not mean that the only people who suffer accidents in the NHS are those who fall below the legal aid eligibility limit. It simply shows that hardly anyone else can afford to sue. The only people who benefit from the current system are the lawyers. How can we tolerate a system in which for every £100 awarded by the court, £50 to £70 is swallowed up in legal fees? The Secretary of State referred to speeding up the process. I welcome those proposals, but we should bear it in mind that speeding up the process will not change the enormous amount of resources that are diverted away from compensation and into lawyers' pockets. The money will simply end up in their pockets sooner.

Mr. Nicholls: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Ms. Harman: I give way to the hon. Gentleman who is a lawyer.

Mr. Nicholls: The hon. Lady is making a better point than she realises. As one lawyer to another, I assure her that if the Bill is enacted, we will still do okay, if not better. What the hon. Lady says about legal aid is absolutely right. It must have been her experience, as it has been mine, that once an insurance company backing a defendant realises that the plaintiff does not have legal aid, it simply uses its superior financial position to launch a war of attrition against that plaintiff. The Government may not accept it, but the way of dealing with that within the context of the present system is to do something about legal aid. That would be an intelligent point to put to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, though he might not agree to it. However, we do not need this edifice of a Bill which does not begin to identify the real problems.

Ms. Harman: Obviously, I should welcome an announcement by the Secretary of State for Health that we are to have a comprehensive legal aid system, but, even if we had one, and there is no whisper of a suggestion, we would still have the problem of proving negligence.

The Secretary of State argued against the Bill on the ground of cost, but he does not know the cost of the current system. I have repeatedly tabled parliamentary questions to successive Secretaries of State, asking how much is paid in court orders and out-of-court settlements, how much legal fees cost health authorities and how much it costs in legal aid and court time. The Government have not begun to add up the different items of expenditure that lead our present system to be not only terribly unfair but terribly expensive. The Secretary of State says, "Let us not have this scheme because it is more expensive than the current scheme," when he does not know the cost of the current scheme and has not proposed a tariff on the future no-fault scheme. That is pathetic. He should come up with a few answers. He knows that, for years, we have been asking about the cost of the current scheme. He has not done his homework, but he asks us to reject the Bill. We know that the current system is expensive and unfair. Arguments about cost are spurious.

Mr. Higgins: The hon. Lady has announced that the Bill is official Labour party policy. She has, therefore, presumably discussed with the shadow Chancellor an estimate of the cost of the Bill. Will she confirm that he has agreed to her undertaking?

Ms. Harman: We should like a system that takes the resources that are currently wasted in court time and lawyers' fees and devotes them to the victims. That is the whole point of a no-fault scheme. Before we even start talking about whether the scheme is based on no change in resources or whether resources will be added, the current system is monstrously structurally unfair.

Mr. Waldegrave: The hon. Lady is making an important new commitment. She is saying that the present money, which I suspect is about £70 million, is now to be spread among no-fault compensation claimants. Of course, the hon. Lady will end up with tiny claims for each one.

Ms. Harman: It is a bit much for the Secretary of State to say that, when he has not provided information that his own Department should be able to obtain. We should have information about how much the current system is costing. It is no good the Secretary of State saying that the problem is that the money would be spread too thinly. He does not even know how much is in the pot. However, we know the percentage in the lawyers' pot and how much is wasted on court time.

Some opponents of the Bill argue that it does not address disciplining the medical profession. The Secretary of State mentioned accountability of the medical profession and giving the patient an explanation or apology. Those issues must be considered. However, the Bill is principally about compensation. For heaven's sake, compensation is also important. It is not fair to say, "Let's not talk about money—people want somebody to say sorry." They want both. Let us not undermine the case for compensation by saying that we can smooth matters with an explanation and by everybody being sorry. Both compensation and an explanation are important.

To reject the Bill because it does not include other measures that we also want would be to cut off our noses to spite our faces. Those who argue in that way do not understand that the adversarial system does not provide accountability, contrary to the Secretary of State's suggestion. The adversarial system is one of the main reasons why everyone clams up and the patient cannot get an explanation or apology.

Mr. Waldegrave: The proposed scheme is still adversarial.

Ms. Harman: The Secretary of State says that the system proposed in the Bill is still adversarial. It is not; it is a no-fault scheme.

Mr. Waldegrave: But negligence continues.

Ms. Harman: I shall not be distracted by the Secretary of State's sedentary interventions. If we remove the need to prove negligence, we shall go a long way to removing the need for a cover-up.

Let us quickly run through the Secretary of State's arguments against the Bill. First, he said that the current system has operated for 600 years, although he acknowledged that that is not a terribly good argument. Secondly, he said that it would be the thin end of the wedge and that we would end up in the same position as New Zealand. That is an odd argument. We are dealing with whether we should have no-fault compensation in the NHS. To say that the system will get out of control and that we shall end up covering other matters such as road traffic accidents and goodness knows what else is not a creditable argument.

Thirdly, the Secretary of State said that we need to have a coherent case set before us. We have a coherent case set before us and, what is more, the public support the change. There is no public support for the current system. The case is made outside, even if the Government cannot recognise it.

Fourthly, the Secretary of State said that we needed exemplars and we could not take a leap in the dark. But why did he not offer, as my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Doran) suggested, to set up a no-fault compensation scheme in one regional health authority? People who claim that there has been a mishap could choose whether they wish to go to the board or to court. They could make a contractual agreement to choose the path of no-fault compensation or go to the courts. If the Secretary of State believes that the scheme would not work, why did he not offer to set up an example? We have had no such suggestions. All we have had is, "No, let us chuck the whole thing out."

The Secretary of State said as a criticism—[Interruption.] I wish that the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) would listen to this point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. The Secretary of State was given a fair hearing. I hope that hon. Members will give an equally fair hearing to the Opposition Front Bench speaker.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: It is not a fair speech.

Ms. Harman: The hon. Member for Harrow, West might care to note that I have avoided the cheap party political points which, unfortunately, the Secretary of State directed at my hon. Friend the Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin). I intend to continue to do so.

The Secretary of State said that the problem with the Bill was that it would not exclude negligence claims. But that is not the point of the Bill. It does not seek as its principal objective to exclude negligence claims. We seek not to exclude people who cannot prove negligence. The evil is not the negligence claim itself. The evil and the injustice is that people who cannot prove negligence cannot go to court.

The Secretary of State also said that the board would get more money than the victim and that that would be unfair. That is a Committee point on clause 4(8). It is not a point of substance. He also talked about double jeopardy, but all the professions are well used to the idea of civil jeopardy running alongside professional disciplinary action.

The Secretary of State also said that doctors would avoid high-risk areas. It is exactly the other way round.

Mr. Waldegrave: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Ms. Harman: No. I shall press on.

Mr. Nicholls: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I have been in the House only seven years but in that time I have never witnessed the Opposition Front-Bench spokesman refuse to give way to the Government Front-Bench spokesman. Is it in order to do that?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is one of the conventions of the House, but to whom the hon. Member who has the Floor gives way is entirely a matter for that Member.

Ms. Harman: The Secretary of State spoke for more than half an hour. He has had his opportunity to make his case. I am trying to put my case as quickly as possible.

The Secretary of State said that doctors would avoid high-risk medicine if we introduced a no-fault compensation scheme, but the opposite is true. If one has a fuelled-up, litigation-based system, doctors will get out of high-risk medicine. The same goes for the right hon. Gentleman's argument that such a scheme would militate against innovative medicine. The lesson from the United States and Sweden is that it is the adversarial system which militates against innovative medicine.

The right hon. Gentleman made the interesting suggestion that he should offer some sort of administrative procedure, but that procedure must be on a no-fault basis. If it is not, it hardly takes us any further forward than the current system, which requires proof of negligence. The right hon. Gentleman also went through the proposals of his right hon. and learned Friends the Lord Chancellor and the Attorney-General to speed up civil litigation. Such a change would be welcomed for civil claims, but that does not deal with those who do not qualify for legal aid or who cannot prove negligence.

The beneficial effects of more litigation need to be questioned. The assumption is that, to right the wrong, we should simply have more litigation and cases of patients suing doctors. Consider what has happened in the United States where access to the courts is easier. The Secretary of State said that we should not consider the example of America too hard because things have changed. His assumption was based on anecdotal evidence from friends and such who have been there. We do not need to base our judgment on such evidence, as there is good evidence to prove that the litigious climate under which the doctor in America operates undermines the quality of the medical care available in the United States.

Mr. Waldegrave: The hon. Lady has given a rather poor performance and she has misrepresented virtually everything I have said. My comments on America were based on evidence produced in the British Medical Journal that suggests that the type of practice she has described is declining. We should find out about that.

Ms. Harman: It is absolutely clear—there is no evidence to contradict it—that a high rate of litigation leads to defensive medicine; defensive of the doctor not the patient.

The best way for a doctor to defend himself is to do everything imaginable, tests and treatment, even if that is not in the patient's interest. If he does that, he can say in court that he tried everything. Why risk a normal delivery of a baby when one can perform a caesarean and say that one did everything possible? Why risk a lumpectomy, when one can do a mastectomy and thus tell the court that one at least performed radical surgery? Why wait to see how a problem develops when one can open up a patient to see inside?

The hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) is completely wrong—defensive medicine is bad medicine. She is wrong to argue that it leads to better medicine. The hon. Member for Reading, East (Sir G. Vaughan) is right to argue that defensive medicine is bad medicine.

When a doctor decides on a course of treatment we want that decision to be based on medical grounds, not legal ones and not in terms of what courts he or she might face in future. Medicine is a sophisticated and yet inexact science—we do not want a doctor's judgment clouded by thoughts of future litigation.

There is no evidence from America to suggest that doctors are now any more open with their patients, accountable to them or ready with explanations or apologies. They are just as ready to send out a battery of legal letters and to batten down the hatches. If we followed the American example we would encourage a flurry of litigation, which would be disastrous.

Today is a watershed in terms of compensation of the victims of medical negligence. Three choices are available to us. We could keep going with the current system, which is monstrously and cruelly unfair and should not continue. We could encourage more litigation, which would put patients at risk from defensive medicine and pour money into lawyers' pockets. The final option is to change to a no-fault scheme. No-fault compensation is an idea whose time has come. We can sort out the details in Committee; but for the sake of all who are made worse, not better, by the NHS, I hope that the Bill will be given a Second Reading today.

1.30 pm

Mrs. Ann Winterton (Congleton): I am grateful for this opportunity to contribute briefly to the debate as a co-sponsor of the Bill. I congratulate the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes) on introducing it so well. Extremely courageously, she has introduced a measure which touches on complex and sensitive issues, and she should be flattered to note that her speech attracted the presence of the Secretary of State and of the Minister for Health.

As the debate has unfolded, a certain amount of common ground has emerged between those who support the principle behind the Bill and those who do not. The consensus is that our present system, in which negligence must be proved, is expensive, risky and full of unacceptable delays. The victim of a medical accident takes on a considerable financial burden when pursuing his case through the courts if he does not qualify for legal aid. There is no certainty about the outcome and the fear always haunts the litigant that he may end up far worse off than if he had not begun the action in the first place.

I believe that many victims would be prepared to settle for far less money if their cases could be settled within a reasonable time and if they could be assured that they did not have to face the trauma of our present tort-based system. Accidents and mishaps will occur even in good health care systems such as the one that we enjoy. Patients who are injured in some way may well settle in some instances for a full explanation of what went wrong if they are satisfied that their cases have been fully investigated.

Legal action has been taken when many patients have been affected. Numbers bring strength and raise public awareness. Pressure mounts in support and eventually common sense prevails, as it did in the case of HIV-infected haemophiliacs. By settling out of court the Government have implicitly accepted the principle of no-fault compensation. What is just for one large group of people is surely just for individuals.

We are fortunate to live at a time when the pharmaceutical industry has produced drugs and medication that have successfully treated many conditions and dramatically improved the length and quality of life of patients. However, we must also recognise that the more straightforward health problems have already been tackled, leaving those which are more complex and difficult to solve—I refer, among others, to various forms of cancer, to arthritis and to Alzheimer's disease. It is obvious to me that, in spite of the best endeavours to develop safe therapeutic treatments and cures, there will be patients who will react adversely and who will suffer as a result of such treatments. There may be a few hard cases who merit compensation even when the risks of possible side effects have been fully explained before treatment. The medical injuries compensation board, recommended as a possible vehicle for such cases, could be used. If the board's decision were rejected, litigation, with all its warts, could still go ahead—people would still have that option.

The two most tricky issues in the context of a no-fault scheme to have emerged during the debate are causation and cost. Although, under the Bill, it would not be necessary to prove that a negligent act or omission was the cause of an injury, it would be necessary to prove a link and that would be extremely difficult in some cases. However, just because it is difficult does not mean that it should not be attempted. At present, the only way forward for the injured party is through the courts. The Bill at least proposes an alternative, which is to be welcomed.

The thorny problem of cost, or possible cost, is no doubt the driving motive behind the Government's positive reaction against the introduction of the Bill. Its provisions do not necessitate any new public money, but, rather, that some of what is already spent on administration and litigation costs should be diverted more constructively to those who have suffered while undergoing NHS treatment. One result that may ensue is that the level of compensation offered by the board will be far too low. The Secretary of State picked up that point. In that case, public pressure will build up once again to improve funding.

We recognise also that growing expectations of what can be achieved will lead to further pressure for additional funding. That should come from the taxpayer who funds the national health service. Other ways, however, could be introduced. For example, the pharmaceutical industry might be encouraged to play a part and to enter into a partnership scheme with the Government. That opportunity should be explored.

I have discussed no-fault compensation with the pharmaceutical companies, in particular with ICI whose pharmaceutical research base is located at Alderley Park in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton). I received a letter from ICI yesterday in which it said:

"The pharmaceutical industry recognises the inadequacies of the present system and welcomes moves to make it possible for claimants to seek compensation without incurring considerable expense or financial risks. The need to improve the speed at which claims are dealt with is also accepted. We welcome moves to increase the speed of the court process and to assist in the funding of 'class actions' and other initiatives to facilitate greater access to the courts. The Bill highlights most of the concerns expressed by actual or would-be claimants and presents an excellent opportunity for debating this important matter. However, deeper consideration of all the aspects is required."

Many hon. Members will agree with those conclusions.

The problem of a just solution to the really thorny problem of compensation for accidents in the NHS will not disappear in these days of consumerism, when society is more sophisticated and people are more aware of their rights and, I believe, have strong feelings about natural justice.

The Government will eventually have to take action further than that which has been announced this morning. I hope that they do so before they are backed into a corner and forced to act. The Bill has provided an important opportunity for a full debate of this important issue, a debate which I welcome and which will undoubtedly result in instigating progress.

1.37 pm

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): I agree with everything that the hon. Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) said in her closing remarks. She is absolutely right. At the very least, this fine Bill has provided us with the opportunity to debate at considerable length important and deeply worrying matters.

I have a great deal of sympathy for the Bill and its objectives. I am a little diffident about criticising surgeons, given the fact that I face surgery in the very near future. However, I am assured by my wife and friends that Mr. Imrie and his team at Glasgow royal infirmary are pretty good. I can only hope that that is the case. I should not want to inflict a by-election on right hon. and hon. Members.

The quality and nature of the doctor-patient relationship is in many respects utterly unlike any other client-practitioner relationship. It is very different from that which exists, for example, between a lawyer and his or her client. The uniqueness of the doctor-patient relationship was brilliantly illustrated in Dr. Talcott-Parson's essay, written fully 45 years ago. Given the degree of trust that a patient must place in his or her doctor's competence and commitment—be he a general practitioner, consultant surgeon or consultant psychiatrist—the doctor must be subject to a strong degree of accountablility. In all instances, the patient is in a peculiarly vulnerable position, but the same cannot be said of the client of an architect or lawyer.

Despite my remarks about my own future, the accountability of doctors and surgeons is masked by the high degree of conservatism that pervades the medical profession and numerous defence mechanisms. Whereas some claim that lawyers are the most conservative profession in the United Kingdom, at least an equal case could be made for the innate conservatism of the medical profession.

My hon. Friend the Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) mentioned a number of distressing cases that had been brought to his attention. I want to cite the experience of a lady in my constituency who underwent a bilateral mastectomy. Because of the trust she placed in her surgeon, she agreed to undergo an operation that is viewed by others in the medical profession as being quite unneeded. That lady's husband wrote to me:

"The effects that this has had on my family could never be explained in a letter. The result of this terrible ordeal was that my wife has never left the house again, and she has got so bad with nerves and depression that I was forced to give up my employment, which was a very good staff position."

He was compelled to take that action so that he could look after his clinically distressed wife. His letter continues:

"The reason that I set out to try to gain compensation for my wife was through a chance conversation that my wife's sister had with a surgeon in Canada. On hearing what had been done to my wife, he was absolutely shocked. He said that the statement regarding the high cancer risk was wrong, and also that the manner in which she was treated at Conniesburn hospital was a disgrace."

He goes on to say that his wife's lawyer

"has been trying to establish a case for her, for a period of two years now, and all we have to show for our effort is the medical report from a Professor who is recognised as an expert in that field, in which he states that there was no medical reason why Bylateral Mastectomy should have taken place."

Finally he says:

"My wife has been a prisoner in her own home for ten years now, it would make you cry to hear her say that she would love to walk in the rain ... No amount of compensation could replace what they have destroyed, but it would at least improve the quality of her life."

[Dr. Norman A. Godman]

When people seek compensation they are not out for vengeance but for the means to improve the quality of a life that has been damaged.

I do not necessarily blame the surgeon in my constituent's case, but I blame the obduracy and stubbornness of officials of the Argyll and Clyde health board in prolonging the distress of this couple and of their family. I have been told that in such cases the doctors' medical insurance representatives and health board officials—in the Scottish experience—engage in discussions about areas of responsibility, which prolongs matters to a needless and distressing degree. That is totally unacceptable.

I listened closely to what the Secretary of State said earlier when he promised that such cases would be speeded up in England and Wales. Presumably identical procedures will be introduced in Scotland.

As the hon. Member for Congleton stressed a few moments ago, when people have suffered terrible injuries whether physical or psychological, as in the case of my constituent, we need to distinguish between the sad but unintended consequences of justifiable risk-taking by surgeons, and injuries which are inflicted by careless, incompetent surgeons.

I have had a number of conversations with my hon. Friend the Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith), who was perhaps one of the foremost neurosurgeons in western Europe before he came to the House. He told me that, especially in the field of neurosurgery, one is engaged in risk-taking when undertaking certain operations. He referred to the case of a young motor cyclist who had suffered brain damage in a traffic accident, and he told me that neurosurgeons have to take risks. I suggest that surgeons who work in such an incredibly complicated field must be allowed to take justifiable risks.

These days some people talk about "just" wars and in the context of this debate—which I welcome, as did the hon. Member for Congleton—we can talk about "just" operations and justifiable risks which surgeons must be encouraged to take. I do not want our surgery to be affected by the litigiousness that now affects American surgery. Last Christmas my wife met a Scot who now works in New York as a geriatrician. His insurance for working with the elderly in a geriatric hospital there is $2·5 million. Neurosurgeons and other doctors working in delicate fields have to be allowed to take justifiable risks. Having said that, we need a system under which the careless and incompetent surgeon can be disciplined.

Mr. Couchman: The hon. Gentleman is on the wrong track if he regards the Bill as a way of protecting patients against the careless and the incompetent. Whatever happens, the Bill must not become a charlatans' charter.

Dr. Godman: I hope that the hon. Gentleman knows me well enough to know that I would not in any way—directly or indirectly—support a charlatans' charter. In his usual courteous way, the hon. Gentleman has been listening intently to what I have said. He will remember that I said earlier that if nothing else, the fine Bill introduced by the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes) has enabled us to debate these matters, although I hope that the Bill goes further and I shall be voting for it this afternoon.

I have some reservations, however, We must somehow distinguish between the unintended but sad consequences of justifiable risk-taking and the sloppy theatre behaviour of the careless or incompetent surgeon. Careless or incompetent surgeons who have inflicted injury on people should be disciplined. The Argyll and Clyde health board recently dismissed a surgeon for alleged incompetence, which had led, in the view of the sheriff conducting the fatal accident inquiry, to the death of a constituent of mine.

The Secretary of State may challenge me on this, but in my view the United Kingdom has sloppy disciplinary procedures for dealing with such cases of incompetence. I am not a medical man; I have an authentic doctorate. But it seems to me that consultants who are suspended from the national health service can continue to practise privately. Is not that the case? Moreover, such consultants may be suspended on full salary for what may seem to be many months.

To ensure accountability, we must have a fair and humane disciplinary procedure which at the same time protects the decent surgeon, as opposed to the one who is guilty—or is found guilty by his peers—of incompetence or careless surgery. If we can do that, the trust that is the cornerstone of the unique client-practitioner relationship will be enhanced to a considerable extent.

The Government have a responsibility. It is right that we should leave the establishment of disciplinary procedures to the professions. In Scotland, we have a Law Society—presumably there is one south of the border—which can discipline its members by way of its disciplinary committees. Nevertheless, the Government have a role to play in ensuring that such effective disciplinary procedures are established in the near future.

As I said, I have some reservations about the Bill itself. I am worried that it may persuade some surgeons to go in for safe surgery—some have used the term "defensive surgery". Surgeons may be unwilling to take risks and that would be a great shame. It is certainly worth giving the Bill its Second Reading. Some of the problems in its structure can then be eliminated in Committee. I suspect that that is a forlorn hope, but we ought, now and again, to debate these important matters in the House.

Mr. James Couchman (Gillingham): I am pleased to have caught your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in this important debate.

I should declare an interest. The Register of Members' Interests shows that I advise a pharmaceutical company in Kent. I have not spoken to it about the Bill, and it may be one of the companies that the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes) said support her Bill, or at least the concept of it.

I congratulate the hon. Member on introducing the Bill. It has given us a good opportunity to discuss a highly controversial subject. There seems to be a growing swell of opinion in favour of no-fault compensation schemes, probably principally because of the haemophiliacs and the contaminated blood products, about which we all know and which I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on settling so honourably.

Whenever there is clinical treatment that involves invasion of the body by surgery or by medication, there is a risk. Inevitably, there are risks that are not always foreseeable. The risk of post-operative problems from surgery or adverse side-effects from medication is brought to the attention of the patient by a responsible doctor prior to commencing the treatment. Generally, the patient will accept that risk.

Not all side-effects are known or predictable. The hon. Member for Greenwich was less than forthcoming about the fact that novel procedures can have quite unexpected side-effects. One patient's side-effect is another patient's mishap. The more serious the disease, the more heroic the intervention is likely to be and the more unpredictable the outcome.

I am worried about clause 2(5)(d), which refers to the suffering of significant pain, disability, harm or distress. I do not believe that that is drawn tightly enough. My wife suffered two episodes of cancer, one of which resulted in unpleasant surgery, from which she has been left in significant pain. The alternatives to undergoing that surgery are known to all of us. The pain would undoubtedly fall within the definition in clause 2, but I would not think of pursuing that, because everything was done to help my wife recover from the condition from which she was suffering.

My primary concern is that the Bill will militate against medical advance. We have seen enormous progress in recent years. The hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) rightly instanced neurosurgery, and I would add the magic of microsurgery, laser treatment and the chemotherapy treatment of leukaemia. Not all patients survived or benefited from the development of those novel treatments, but the alternatives were usually grave or fatal. One need only review the transplant programme, from which my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Sir M. McNair-Wilson) benefited so recently, to appreciate that the prognosis for early transplantees was poor indeed, partly due to their grave condition when they underwent their operation and partly due to the as yet imperfect techniques that were used to treat them. Many of those people or their relatives might have had a case under the Bill. The Bill would lead to safe surgery, safe medicine and safe treatment.

A further worry is that the Bill could act as a substantial block to the research and development programmes of pharmaceutical companies. I am sure that no hon. Member would wish to see them cease to probe the frontiers of their science and to try to develop treatments for the more intractable diseases that are left untreated, as my hon. Friend the Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) suggested.

One of the weaknesses of the Bill is that the board might pursue a claim—having compensated the patient whose treatment has been adjudged to be unsatisfactory—against a pharmaceutical company or against another supplier to the national health service. The hon. Member for Greenwich was incorrect to suggest that the Bill was not intended to enable the board to pursue a claim against those working in the national health service. Part II of schedule 2 refers to "pursuing any legal claim which has passed to the Board (whether that claim is against the National Health Service or any part of it, or against a supplier to or for the National Health Service or to or for any part of it)".

The Bill allows for the possibility of the board following up a negligence case against an employee of the NHS.

My principal objection to the Bill and the reason why I will vote against it is that it would be detrimental to patients because it would lead to a diminution in innovation and in the techniques and procedures that are at the frontiers of the skills of the people treating us.

2 pm

Mr. Chris Mullin (Sunderland, South): I congratulate the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes) on the Bill, which contains an idea whose time has come. The correct principle is that one must first help the victims and then argue at leisure about who is to blame.

The present position cannot be allowed to continue. I have heard the reservations of many Conservative Members and of the Secretary of State. I agree that the medical profession must be accountable, like any other profession, for its mistakes. However, it is not accountable under the existing system in most cases. The person who is responsible may be dead, may have retired or may have moved before he has been called to account. In the case that I am about to relate, he had moved to Saudi Arabia. With all due respect to the Secretary of State, who comes from the merciful wing of his party, as I come from the reforming wing of mine, I heard nothing in his speech that would cause me to change my mind about the Bill.

The case that came to my surgery some years ago and caused me to feel strongly on the issue involved a gentleman called Kenneth Stanness. In May 1983, he went into hospital for a minor operation on his back and emerged seriously brain damaged. That had a devastating effect on his wife and family who have been caring for him since.

In November 1987, four years after the event, I wrote to the chief executive of the health authority. I said:

"I am shocked to learn that 4 years after the event the Health Authority is stoutly refusing to admit liability or to make any offer that would help to relieve the burden . . . for this unfortunate woman."

I received a wholly unsatisfactory reply. The district general manager said:

"I have reviewed the file and discussed the situation with the Authority's Solicitors, and I regret that it is not possible at this stage to add very much . . . The legal process is taking its course."

Indeed, it was—at a snail's pace.

A year later, another case within the same health authority came to my attention. It involved a gentleman called Mr. Blackburn who, after a long and tortuous legal process which lasted for 12 years, received damages of £491,000, despite the fact that his original solicitors—he had to change his solicitors three times, solicitors' incompetence being a common feature of such cases—had initially advised him to accept £2,000. That case seemed relevant to the case of Mr. Stanness because the award of the damages from the same health authority was accompanied by expressions of regret about how terrible it was that 12 years had elapsed before jusice had been done and how we must find some way—which was unspecified—of avoiding that happening again.

Stimulated by that response and thinking that it might cause the health authority to get a move on in the case of Mr. Stanness, I wrote to the district general manager of the health authority on 8 August 1988:

"I am prompted to write to you again following reports in last week's newspapers of an award made to Mr. Keith Blackburn who suffered a similar accident to that of Mr. Stanness, 12 years ago in Newcastle General Hospital. You will also have seen in last week's newspapers expressions of surprise and regret that it took 12 years before the Health Authority was obliged to face up to its responsibilities.

[Mr. Chris Mullin]

My purpose in again raising with you the case of Mr. Stanness is to suggest that you ought to review his case in the light of the award to Mr. Blackburn. The alternative seems to be that the Stanness case will be allowed to drift on at the cost of continuing distress to Mrs. Stanness and the spending of large sums of public money on lawyers' fees, which would be better directed towards alleviating the catastrophe that has overtaken Mr. and Mrs. Stanness. If you thought it would be worthwhile I would be glad to meet and discuss the matter".

After a bit of prompting, I received another bland letter:

"Whilst I appreciate your concern about this case, I am afraid that in view of the legal position, I am not in a position to provide any information beyond that already forwarded to you, and I would find myself unable to discuss the case with you either, for reasons which I am sure you will understand . . . I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful".

Another year or so went by; there was another change of lawyers—the third, I believe—and, five years after the event, the health authority finally admitted liability. As it was obvious to everyone concerned that it was liable, it might as well have done so many years earlier. A further six or seven months elapsed before, some time last year, the first preliminary offer of damages was made. Believe it or not, the case is still being contested: I believe that it will go to court in March 1991, eight years after the event. During those eight years that woman has been through hell, while no regret has been expressed or assistance offered by those who, for whatever reason and regardless of whether negligence occurred, brought disaster on her husband.

That is the case that set the issue so forcefully at the forefront of my mind. I shall support the Second Reading because I have heard nothing from those who object to the Bill that suggests that there is a better way of dealing with the problem. I accept that the way suggested in the Bill may be imperfect, but I have heard no serious alternative that might have brought relief to Mrs. Stanness.

2.6 pm

Mr. Anthony Coombs (Wyre Forest): We are coming to the end of a long and interesting debate. I join other hon. Members in expressing my appreciation to the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes), who has raised an important subject and dealt with it with great sensitivity. It is, in fact, a very sensitive issue. About four of my constituents have been involved in medical accidents and I have noticed the blight cast on not only their lives but those of their relatives, especially when fatalities have been involved.

I think that everyone agrees that the present position is unsatisfactory. I agree with the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman), who argued that, because of the patient-doctor relationship, many patients would find a confrontation extremely difficult to deal with, even if it was a possibility. It is also entirely wrong that legal costs should amount to between 50 and 70 per cent. of claims.

The position is not assisted by the medical profession's unique unwillingness to accept the modern demands of accountability imposed on them by patients. The Daily Telegraph told us yesterday:

"The Medical Profession has been defensive to the point of obstructiveness."

The Association of Victims of Medical Accidents, for which I have considerable regard, says that members of the profession try to surround themselves with an aura of inviolability, and we have heard what the Pearson commission had to say about the current methods of redressing wrongs in such instances.

I was pleased to hear from the Secretary of State about the reforms that the Government have introduced in regard to access to medical records, specialist solicitors' lists, medical audit, inquiry on structural costs and, perhaps most important, a survey of the incidence of medical accidents: the AVMA has been asking for such a survey for a long time.

It is not entirely satisfactory to rely on the courts for the resolution of those disputes. As has been said, some people are not eligible for legal aid and they miss out on the opportunity to go to court. I dislike the idea of having the legal aid board as the effective arbiter in many medical disputes which, in effect, is the position.

However, I believe that there is a semi-contractual relationship between the taxpayer and the medical profession. The taxpayer seems to be saying more and more that the medical profession should be responsible for its actions. That lack of accountability in no-fault compensation causes me problems with regard to the Bill.

There is little doubt that the present system of accountability is completely inadequate. Professor Margaret Stacey, emeritus professor of sociology at Warwick university and author of "The Patient Voice and the GMC" has said:

"The profession's leaders operate and support a system of regulation which neither ensures the continuing competence of practitioners nor adequately disciplines the incompetent."

It is obvious that the statutory procedures for taking action against incompetent doctors, whether through the General Medical Council, the family health services authorities or the general practitioner complaints procedures are not sufficient.

I asked the FHSA in my county how it had dealt with cases involving death since 1988. I discovered that there had been 13 cases dealing with death since 1988, only two of which were withdrawn by the complainants. In all those cases only one doctor was severely reprimanded. No action was taken in the other cases. It is clear that the present system of accountability is unacceptable.

Unfortunately I believe that the no-fault compensation scheme leaves effectively unanswered all the questions about the accountability of the medical profession. I am not saying that the patients are not interested in compensation. Rather, they want to know why things have gone wrong and who is responsible. They want an apology and an explanation. The code of practice, which the proposed board will draw up, will take an enormous amount on trust. A cast-iron case has not been made that that code of practice will ensure that investigations are sufficiently rigorous to ensure that proper investigations are carried out under the Bill.

Clause 3 does not define mishap and causation is too vague. Both those issues are vital in distinguishing between legitimate clinical judgment and negligence and incompetence.

For some time the BMA has been calling for a compensation fund to be accompanied by some form of independent medical inspectorate. It is curious that we have a health and safety inspectorate for our factories and an independent education inspectorate to monitor the way in which our children are taught. We have a social services inspectorate to deal with many of the life-and-death issues in which the social services departments are involved. We also have a police inspectorate, but we do not have a similar body to maintain standards of competence in what is possibly the most delicate area—the national health service.

A national health inspectorate would be one way of ensuring that many of the complaints that are presently ignored or have to proceed through an exceptionally expensive, long and perhaps ultimately unsuccessful legal procedure are adequately dealt with. If the Government can move their thinking towards an independent inspectorate that will absorb many of the existing methods of redressing complaints within the national health service, we would do the cause of the victims of medical accidents a great deal of good.

2.14 pm

Mrs. Rosie Barnes rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. Lady have the leave of the House to speak again?

Hon. Members: Aye.

Mrs. Barnes: All hon. Members will agree that this has been a stimulating and sensitively handled debate. It is an issue to which there are no easy answers and I did not think that I had solved every problem. I am reassured by the genuine and deep-rooted acceptance that the current position is seriously flawed and that something radical must be done about it. I am reassured also by the consensus that, in an ideal world, all those with needs or disabilities of any kind would be adequately compensated without having to demonstrate cause of negligence. However, as I made abundantly clear, my Bill restricts itself to the national health service and does not tackle other issues that may cause similar problems in other aspects of our community. That is quite deliberate. That national health service, as I said, accounts for 15 per cent. of public sector expenditure—£27 billion. It is our duty to make sure that that money is properly spent and that those who receive the benefits of the national health service are receiving the right protections and safeguards.

Mr. Thurnham: The hon. Lady mentioned the amount that is spent on the national health service. Perhaps she will draw attention to the amount that is spent through social security on the disabled, which is currently about £8·3 billion. If we are not to have some of the measures that she is advocating the alternative is more money for social security so that the safety net for those who get nothing will be raised.

Mrs. Barnes: I accept that point, but I shall not be led down that path at the moment.

I listened with care to what the Secretary of State said as he poured scorn on several aspects of my Bill. I waited with growing interest to see whether his alternative proposals would offer a much more radical, long-lasting and, perhaps, better solution to the problems than my Bill can. I was disappointed. I welcomed the measures that he made known to the House—they can only help. However, I am confident that in one, two or three years' time, the House will have to face this issue again. The Secretary of State's measures will not address the severity of the problems that we are facing and they will do nothing to address some of the major cases, such as that of the haemophiliacs, which have brought the attention of hon. Members and others to this matter.

Several hon. Members have said that, under my proposals, the haemophiliacs would not have received such a settlement. That is entirely due to the Secretary of State. If he considered it appropriate, in such exceptional circumstances he could make additional moneys available to the board because a terrible wrong had been done to innocent people. That would be entirely within his power. The same public clamour that forced the Government to make that settlement without a no-fault scheme would force a Government with a no-fault scheme to consider such a case.

I was concerned to hear the Secretary of State say that many of the credible and creditable organisations and bodies that have put forward the principle of no-fault compensation have not been able to agree on any one scheme—that perhaps it is inherently flawed, perhaps there is no right scheme and perhaps there is something wrong. I take serious issue with that. In recent weeks, I have listened with great care to all the bodies that expressed an interest in this matter and I have been convinced of their sincerity. Many of them have worked in this area for several years and have become committed to a particular type of no-fault compensation scheme that they believe is right for their side of the argument. The Association for Victims of Medical Accidents sees the matter entirely from the patients' view. It has a degree of what I describe as the punitive approach to the medical profession. In some of its documents it implies that compensation is less important than obtaining explanations and, perhaps, making retribution.

I have not dodged the issue of accountability, but I have also listened to people on the other side of the argument such as the doctors, represented by the British Medical Association and the Royal College of Physicians, and the obstetricians and gynaecologists who are at the sharp end of the argument. They have difficult decisions to make. They should not have to do so constantly looking over their shoulders at what may happen in a court of law. They wish to build a trusting relationship and most of them are entirely honourable. It would be inappropriate to introduce a measure that could bring a medical practitioner to his knees through one error in an exemplary career.

My Bill is an attempt to walk the tightrope between the various interested bodies that have rightly addressed the matter for many more years that I have. I sincerely hoped that if I did not get the Bill quite right and improvements could have been made, the House, with its long experience and many hon. Members who have been involved in the matter for many years, would be given the opportunity to improve the Bill in Committee. I was asking for the opportunity to take a stage further the principle of no-fault compensation. All the various bodies involved tend to agree that that should be done. Some have been of that opinion for many years, while others have come to that conclusion only recently in the face of the changing pattern and level of litigation in this country.

There is a growing consensus among almost all the royal colleges, many patients' and consumers' groups and many legal bodies that the current position is becoming almost unworkable. I was no less surprised than other hon. Members that my proposals drew less hostility than expected from the drug companies, which recognise that the current procedure is not working well and perhaps does them more harm than good.

I ask the House seriously to consider its decision today. We are talking about a system which involves miserable lengths of time, large sums of money for those who are able to obtain compensation—because they are either entitled to legal aid or are wealthy—and confrontation. Although I accept that the Secretary of State made a genuine attempt to address some of those issues within the legal system, I believe that he will do little to make matters substantially better. There may be some trimming here and there, but the increased number of cases entering the system will overtake any such measures.

When I drew up the Bill I had regard to the Bill previously presented to the House by the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman). I discussed with her some of the pitfalls in her Bill and deliberately avoided them. In her Bill many of the details on which the House could have argued long and hard were spelt out, such as whether someone who had a catheter in place for two years should be eligible for compensation and how infections should be treated. In the limited time available to me to draw up a Bill that would give the House an opportunity to take the debate further, I felt that I should concentrate on the basic principles. I thought that it was appropriate to allow the board, to which we would give great power and in which we would put great trust, to lay down some of the detailed regulations that would come back to the Secretary of State and the House for approval. After all, the board would include experts. I see this Bill as an enabling one. I did not intend to dot every "i" and to cross every "t". Obviously such matters can be finalised and decided on in Committee.

If we turn our back on this issue today and say no to the possibility of no-fault compensation, we shall persist with the court-based approach. Therefore, the misery of many individuals, about whom we shall never know except as individual constituents, will continue. The next scandal that rocks the House will leave us answering our constituents' question, "Why did you not do something about it last time?"

We have seen the misery caused by Thalidomide and Opren and the problems of the haemophiliacs. There will be similar cases and whatever improvements may result from the Secretary of State's proposals, they will not tackle that. We will be back to the public clamour and the media campaign and people will be forced to take action after deaths have occurred and widespread misery has been caused.

A no-fault compensation scheme may be forced on the House in the future following European legislation. The Secretary of State argued that there are no foreign examples on which we can base our scheme, but if we cannot be innovators and lead the world on this vital issue, it is deplorable.

There are compensation schemes in Sweden, although admittedly they are built upon much more generous social security benefits as it is a wealthier country than the United Kingdom. There are also schemes in some American states —for example, Virginia, where schemes specifically relate to maternity claims. There must be a solution for this country. It is not enough to say that no one else has got it right or that no one body has the right formula, so we should set it to one side.

I strongly urge the House not to turn its back on this opportunity to tackle medical negligence in an entirely different, non-confrontational, fair and affordable way.

Take-away Food Shops

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Nicholas Baker.]

2.40 pm

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend (Bexleyheath): I am grateful for this opportunity to raise the subject of planning controls over hot food take-away shops, with particular reference to Welling—which is the second largest town in my south-east London constituency.

I appreciate that such shops meet an obvious demand and are certainly popular with many people—particularly younger persons and parents of small children. My own two sons hold them in high regard. They are well suited to the pace of modern life, and create wealth and employment locally.

However, as many right hon. and hon. Members know from constituency experience, there is a downside. In the words of Bexleyheath's chief superintendent:

"A number of such establishments in this borough have in the past attracted police attention for the following reasons. Complaints of noise by local residents. A cause of litter in the immediate vicinity. Obstruction to footways outside by groups of youths. Complaints of rowdyism, particularly in the late evening. Obstruction of vehicles parked outside."

The Government are well aware of the litter problem, which reached unacceptable levels years ago. Some types of commercial operation, such as take-away restaurants, generate a disproportionate volume of litter. Firms such as McDonalds are well aware of their public responsibilities. Their experienced managers do their best, but the litter problem remains.

Although the town of Bexleyheath has benefited from a vast new shopping centre, there is local concern, which I share, about the future of Welling. It must hold on to the attractiveness and vitality of a prime shopping area.

In past years, Bexley borough council was slow to recognise that too many hot-food shops were opening in the Welling area. Local people became increasingly vocal and I began to receive a large number of letters and complaints. I pay tribute to Darwin and Faraday residents association, which for many years has carried out a classic campaign to alert those in authority to an ever-increasing problem.

Bexley council—with all-party support, which is not easy to achieve at a local level—started doing what it could within existing planning controls, but it hit a major snag. I quote from my letter dated 15 November 1989 to my right hon. Friend the former Secretary of State for the Environment:

"I wrote in July 1988 to the then Minister of Housing and Planning concerning the approach being adopted by the Department of the Environment towards local planning decisions. I regret to say that since then the position in my own constituency has gone from bad to worse.

I refer in particular to the almost regular practice of the Department to overthrow the decisions of our local planning authority—decisions they make as elected representatives of my constituents and normally with the whole-hearted support of my constituents. Of course I understand that the Government rightly wishes to reduce the amount of bureaucracy in the planning system and allow more firms and individuals to do what they want, but we both know a proper balance needs to be struck and regretfully the evidence in Bexley is that this is not happening."

There are now 21 hot food take-away shops in Welling which seems to me, as a layman, to be an extraordinarily large number for one comparatively small town. Of those, three were allowed on appeal in 1985, 1989 and last year.

My correspondence with the Department became increasingly frustrating. Bureaucratic replies, laced with planning jargon become meaningless at constituency level, as we all know. Junior Ministers were insensitive to what was becoming a major local issue for me.

On 8 December 1989 I received a letter signed by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan). The nub of that letter was that the question whether any service is sufficiently represented in a locality is a matter of commercial judgment, and is not a matter for planning consideration and that the planning system should not be used to regulate the supply and demand for commercial services.

I submit that that approach is barmy. I like to think that under the Department's new and distinguished management it has been or is being altered. Frankly, I have no idea what the market for hot food take-away shops is in an area like Welling. South-east London has a high population density and a highly mobile and comparatively wealthy population. Welling is on a major road and there are plenty of bus stops. Would that market take 30 or 40 of these shops before some started falling off? It would be ridiculous to allow more shops to try their hand and to fight for their share of that crowded market, while the whole area continues to suffer in the process.

I stress to my hon. Friend the Minister that this matter should not be left solely to market forces. Proper planning by the local elected authority should be encouraged in the interests of the inhabitants of my constituency and the local environment. I look forward to hearing exactly what a local authority can do in such circumstances to meet the strongly expressed feelings of the local residents. At present many of my constituents are losing faith in the planning system. They see Whitehall overruling Bexley far too often.

I am proud of what we have achieved as a country in terms of local planning to protect and improve our surroundings. Whenever I go to the United States I am appalled at the unchecked linear development that has been allowed to take place, and I am grateful to Britain's far-sighted post-war planners. Ministers tell me that when they deal with appeals, the inspectors are concerned that what is proposed is in the public interest. That entails weighing the legitimate worries of local residents about the possible effects of development on their environment, against arguments in favour of proposals. My constituents do not agree that their interests are being properly looked after and they do not believe that the proper balance is being achieved. They have appealed to me, as their local Member of Parliament, and I have therefore initiated this brief debate. I appeal to the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment for his support.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): The hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) and his hon. Friends appear to be holding a committee meeting. Perhaps they would prefer to do so outside the Chamber.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I find it odd that you should make such remarks about my hon. Friends and me, given that about 10 Conservative Members persisted in interrupting the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on the important Bill dealing with no-fault compensation, which the Tories have just ransacked.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is taking up the valuable time of the hon. Member who has the Adjournment debate.

Mr. Skinner: You started it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman knows that he ought not to engage in sedentary conversations——

Mr. Skinner rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will respond to the request of the Chair.

2.50 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Tim Yeo): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) on winning the opportunity to raise this important subject. He is a strong and effective champion of the interests of his constituents and I hope that he will remain their champion and representative for many years to come.

I regret any insensitivity that may have been shown by any of my predecessors—of whom there have been quite a large number in the past few months—in the wording of replies to my hon. Friend. We shall certainly renew and redouble our efforts to avoid recourse to bureaucratic jargon, which may, indeed, be incomprehensible by the time it reaches Welling.

Hot food take-away shops have been around in a variety of guises for generations. Perhaps the most familiar are fish and chip shops. My hon. Friend acknowledged that most of us patronise such outlets from time to time, and those of us with families no doubt visit them rather more frequently than we might if the choice were left entirely to us. Nevertheless, proposals to establish new outlets can still generate local controversy. The Government's planning policies in respect of such establishments are sometimes misunderstood and I am pleased to have the oportunity to set them out in a way that I hope will be unambiguous.

I entirely understand why individual establishments and proposals for additional establishments give rise to concern such as that expressed by my hon. Friend on behalf of his constituents. It is most important that the operators of such outlets should ensure that they minimise any problems of litter, noise or disturbance, and those are all factors which local planning authorities can take into account in deciding whether to grant planning permission. I am encouraged by the fact that many operators are adopting very responsible policies towards the communities in which they function.

For more than 40 years, the development control system has distinguished between the use of land for catering establishments such as restaurants and take-aways, and other uses of land for outlets such as shops. There is a world of difference, in both a cultural and a culinary sense, between a traditional pie-and-mash or tripe shop, and a modern fast-food restaurant. But there is less difference in land-use planning terms. I refer, for example, to the effects on local amenities and the environment and to the pedestrian and vehicular traffic that they generate. At present, the planning system allows changes of use as between most catering trade uses to take place without planning permission, but planning permission must be obtained before a catering use can be introduced for the first time. I believe that that is the right basis for planning control.

The Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) Order 1987 is often regarded as the present-day villain of the piece as regards take-aways. Nevertheless, it has considerable merits as a piece of deregulation in relation to planning matters. My hon. Friend seemed ready to acknowledge that there is a great deal of concern about the fact that the planning process involves considerable delays for people making applications and for people involved in appeals. Of the very large number of applications dealt with each year, almost 30,000 go to appeal. The order performs a helpful service in reducing what, if it were not in force, would be an additional burden of extra appeals. It means that more manpower resources are available to deal with other aspects of the planning system, including enforcement.

For the first time, the order groups together restaurants, take-aways, cafes and other catering trade uses in a single food and drink use class. In the order, that use class is known as A3. It frees from planning control changes between those uses. It broke new ground and it was always likely, therefore, to be regarded with mistrust and suspicion in some quarters.

The approach adopted in the order, however, was pragmatic as well as deregulatory. It recognised that the catering trade has undergone a transformation in the past decade. The traditional demarcation between public houses and restaurants and between restaurants and take-aways has become blurred. The order allows the catering trade to adapt to changing trends and demands with greater speed and certainty, in premises where potential environmental nuisances such as smell, traffic and parking have already been accepted. It also relieves local planning authorities of the burden of determining whether planning permission would be required for a change of use from a public house to a wine bar or from a bistro to a brasserie.

I should stress that the order did not remove or reduce local planning authorities' power to control the proliferation of premises used by the catering trade. Planning permission is still invariably required to erect new premises, or to change the use of existing non-A3 premises to A3 uses. Each such application must be decided on its merits by the local planning authority, according to a time-honoured formula of "having regard to the provisions of the development plan and to any other material considerations."

Let us suppose that an area is already well served or, as my hon. Friend and his constituents might claim, over-supplied—21 seems quite a large number for a town the size that he mentioned—with restaurants and take-aways, possibly for historical reasons. Let us further suppose that, individually or collectively, the establishments are creating environmental difficulties. It will be difficult for a local authority to secure a reduction in their overall number under planning legislation other than by granting planning permission for suitable alternative uses as and when the opportunity arises.

There are powers for local authorities to make orders to discontinue particular uses of land, but such orders can involve the local planning authority in a liability to pay compensation for the losss of existing use rights. I recognise, therefore, that the use of such powers will be contemplated only in exceptional circumstances. Nevertheless, local authorities have discretion to refuse planning permission for any additional take-away outlets.

Local authorities also have several options available outside the scope of planning control to alleviate some of the problems associated with restaurants and take-ways. These include the introduction of parking restrictions and, in Greater London, the power to require hot-food shops to close at midnight. Those powers will be augmented by the street litter control notice provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, under which a local authority will be able to place a duty on the proprietors of premises such as take-aways to keep their frontages litter free.

To safeguard against planning refusals being overturned on appeal, local planning authorities must buttress their decisions with sound reasons based on criteria that are relevant to the land use planning system. Typically, such reasons will relate to the anticipated adverse effects on the local environment and amenity. Such effects can include an increase in traffic and parking, noise and disturbance, particularly if this seems likely to take place in the evening or to affect a residential area.

My hon. Friend will understand that I cannot comment on or discuss the merits of individual decisions, but I assure him that appeals are decided only after the most careful assessment of all material factors. My hon. Friend said that three of the 21 establishments had resulted from appeal.

An additional way in which a local planning authority can defend a refusal of planning permission on appeal is by basing its decision on a relevant policy in an adopted local plan. This leads me to another issue that appears to have caused some misunderstanding. In 1985—before the introduction of the A3 use class—my Department issued guidance on "Service Uses in Shopping Areas" in development control policy note 11. That document made it clear that, in land-use planning terms, the adoption by local planning authorities of policies designed to maintain or to strengthen the retail element of shopping areas can be justified. Indeed, I understand that the London borough of Bexley included such a policy in the Bexley borough plan, which was adopted in February 1985. This means that it is acceptable for local planning authorities, in the light of local circumstances, to decide whether they should resist changes to the mix of retail and non-retail uses in a particular shopping area. Thus, if the conversion of a shop to a take-away were proposed in an area in which such a policy applied, the desirability of giving effect to such a policy could provide an important pillar for a refusal of planning permission.

However, what the Government could not support in the context of such a policy would be decisions that discriminated against a particular form of non-retail use. I cannot accept that local authorities' power to regulate development should go so far as to set ceilings for the number of particular outlets in a particular area. This does not mean that we are simply content to allow a completely market-led free-for-all. I recognise the force of my hon. Friend's point. It means that we are committed to a development control system in which each decision is considered carefully on its own merits. Such decisions will be based on an assessment of the likely effect that the development proposal will have on the locality and will not be arbitrarily pre-ordained on the basis of a rigid system of rationing for specific forms of development.

I am sure that my hon. Friend and others will agree that it would be inappropriate for Bexley council—or my Department—simply to set a limit for the number of pizza parlours or burger bars that could become established in Welling. I am sure that those of my hon. Friend's constitutents who patronise such establishments would not wish to have their choice curtailed in such a way. Equally, I hope that they will accept that if the continued viability of a retail shopping area or the amenity of a locality were judged to be issues raised by any proposal to create a new A3 outlet, the council has a duty to ensure in the wider public interest that such considerations are taken into account in determining whether planning permission should be granted for that outlet. The same duty would apply to the Secretary of State and to his inspectors when deciding appeals.

If, in reaching its decision, the local planning authority judges that a particular use or uses within the A3 use class would have adverse effects on the environment or on amenity, not susceptible to other control, it need not necessarily refuse planning permission outright. An alternative approach would be to grant planning permission subject to a condition restricting future changes of use which, by virtue of the Use Classes Order 1987, would not otherwise require a further grant of planning permission.

Independent research has recently been carried out on behalf of my Department into the effects of the Use Classes Order 1987. That research has revealed that local planning authorities' use of such conditions is relatively commonplace when granting planning permission for A3 uses. The Government are still considering the implications of the researchers' findings and we will announce our conclusions in due course. However, the apparent willingness of local authorities to grant conditional planning permission for A3 uses seems to demonstrate that applications from the catering trade represent a demand that should be met, where that can be achieved without compromising those areas of concern that the development control system is designed to safeguard, and about which my hon. Friend has spoken.

I hope that I have been able to provide some enlightenment and encouragement to my hon. Friend on the Government's planning policies in this sometimes contentious area.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at four minutes past Three o'clock.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Access to Dwellings

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General how many kinds of orders or warrants give courts, the police, bailiffs or solicitors access to private dwellings without permission of the resident.

The Attorney-General: There are no orders or warrants which grant the courts access to private dwellings without the permission of the resident other than through a bailiff. There are four situations in which bailiffs have such powers. First, a bailiff may force re-entry to premises from which he has been forcibly ejected when levying distress. Secondly a bailiff may force an entry to premises to which goods have been removed in order to avoid distress. Thirdly, a bailiff may force entry to premises in order to give possession to the plaintiff. Fourthly, a bailiff may force entry in order to execute a warrant of restitution.

A solicitor may gain access to a private dwelling without permission only when attending a defendant's premises with a plaintiff in order to execute an Anton Piller order.

Initial examination has identified some 21 categories of offence in relation to which the police have specific statutory powers of entry to private dwellings without permission of the resident. These are listed alphabetically in the table.

Road Traffic

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to ensure that there is no misuse of Anton Piller orders.

The Attorney-General: Since the Court of Appeal laid down the preconditions for the granting of such orders in Piller KG v. Manufacturing Processes (1976), case law has prescribed numerous safeguards in the granting and execution of Anton Piller orders.

An additional safeguard recommended by the civil justice review is that the power to grant Anton Piller orders should, subject to certain exceptions, be reserved to High Court judges. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor is presently considering the terms in which this should be included in regulations, a draft of which is presently being consulted upon.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General how many Anton Piller orders have been issued in each year since they came into existence.

The Attorney-General: The Government do not maintain statistics on the number of Anton Piller orders issued by the courts.

Women Judges

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to equalise the number of women circuit judges, recorders and assistant recorders; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has repeatedly made clear his wish to appoint more women to judicial office. Steps have been taken to make this widely known, and thus to encourage more suitably qualified women to put themselves forward for consideration. The composition of the bench at any one time is, however, dependent on the composition of the legal profession in the age groups with the necessary experience to be suitable. At the moment, there are relatively few women in the legal profession in the appropriate age groups with the right experience. It is expected that the number will increase significantly over the next 10 years, and that this will result in more women judges, recorders and assistant recorders.

ENERGY

Oil Well Fires

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what percentage of the crude oil is converted into soot when an oil well burns out of control;

(2) when crude oil burns out of control in an oil well fire, what proportion of the oil is converted into soot; and how effective the atomic carbon so released is at absorbing sunlight.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the note produced by the Meteorological Office on the possible environmental impacts of burning oil wells in Kuwait, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

The worst case scenario considered in the Meteorological Office's note is based on the assumption that 6 per cent. of the oil would be converted to black smoke. The note, however, records that the amount of smoke could be significantly less. The effectiveness of a smoke plume in absorbing sunlight depends on the details of combustion and dispersal.

North Sea Standby Vessels

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the future safety regime he plans for North sea standby vessels.

Mr. Moynihan: In his report on the Piper Alpha disaster, Lord Cullen made a number of recommendations aimed at improving the quality of standby vessels, including a need for new regulations. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made clear to the House in his statement of 12 November, the Government accept all of Lord Cullen's recommendations, and work is in progress to implement them as quickly as possible.

Oil Production

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the normal level of oil production offshore for (i) Kuwait, (ii) Saudi Arabia and (iii) in total for all the oil-producing states in the Persian Gulf.

Mr. Moynihan: The normal approximate output levels of offshore oil production are:

(i) Kuwait: 0·024 million barrels/day.
(ii) Saudi Arabia (incl. neutral zone): 2 million barrels/day.
(iii) Total Persian Gulf states: 4 million barrels/day.

The data are largely from the "Arab Oil and Gas Directory 1990".

Public Utilities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the benefit that could be achieved for energy consumers through closer collaboration between electricity suppliers and other utilities, particularly the water companies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is a matter for the companies concerned, within the relevant statutory and regulatory provisions.

Tidal Barrages

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what help he will give to promote the construction of tidal barrages in the Severn and the Mersey estuaries.

Mr. Moynihan: As part of our on-going research programme on renewable energy technologies, my Department is making funds available to assist feasibility studies for tidal energy barrages on the Severn and Mersey estuaries. As I announced on 30 August 1990, £456,000 is to be contributed to new environmental studies by the Severn Tidal Power Group. Also, up to £1·5 million is being made available for a third phase of feasibility studies by the Mersey Barrage Company.

In regard to the Mersey barrage, a ministerial committee has been established under my chairmanship with the following terms of reference and departmental membership:

To consider the proposed Mersey barrage and, in particular, to address key issues such as:

the value of the project
the role of non-energy costs and benefits the evaluation of the effects of barrage construction and operation on regional development and other legitimate interests.

To explore ways in which the various government departments which might be involved in or affected by such a project can best co-operate in order to ensure that all the necessary information is brought to bear in the most effective way during such consideration.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Home Leave)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (f) female prisoners were granted home leave each year from 1986 to 1989; and how many of these failed to return on time.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information for 1986 is not available. The information available for 1987-89 should be regarded as approximate, since it is collected on the basis of overall numbers at individual establishments. Establishments holding more than one type of offender—that is, male, female and young offenders—do not provide returns that distinguish between them.

The figures relate to the number of leaves taken. Many prisoners are entitled to more than one leave a year, so the number of individuals will therefore be lower.

The available information is as follows:

	Male establishments		Female establishments		Young offender institutions
	Granted	Failed to return on time	Granted	Failed to return on time	Granted	Failed to return on time
1987	6,095	330	226	20	1,458	56
1988	10,472	712	435	28	1,559	69
1989	14,611	1,092	411	14	2,611	129

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent on home leave and temporary release for prisoners in 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90, respectively.

Mrs. Rumbold: Figures collected centrally do not distinguish between expenditure on home leave and other forms of temporary release. The table details payments made to prisoners on all forms of temporary release including home leave. The principal costs of the scheme derive from payments for travel and subsistence for the inmates concerned.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of people convicted of drug misuse in the area governed by the Seaham and Peterlee magistrates courts by year since 1985.

Mr. John Patten: The number of persons convicted by the Peterlee and Seaham—now the Easington, and Houghton-le-Spring division of Sunderland metropolitan district—magistrates' courts in each year since 1985 for offences relating to drug misuse is given in the table.

	Number of persons

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Huddersfield, (Mr. Sheerman) on 19 December 1990, Official Report, columns 203-4, whether he will (a) list all the items of data to be held on the new police national computer that will be linked to those data that relate to driver licensing (b) list all the items of data to be held on the new police national computer that will be linked to those data that relate to driver records, (c) indicate whether there will be any free text fields or warning signals associated with any driver licensing or driver records, (d) indicate the anticipated number of driver licensing and driver records held, (e) indicate the estimated number of access to these records as compared with routine vehicle checks and (f) describe the circumstances when it is anticipated that these new records will be used by police;

(2) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Huddersfield on 19 December 1990, Official Report, columns 203-4, whether he received advice from, or had meetings with, the Data Protection Registrar before deciding on the nature of the closer links between the new police national computer and the DVLA in Swansea.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The proposal to provide information relating to driver records and licensing on PNC2 is still at the planning stage. The items of data that would be held have yet to be determined. To meet the needs identified in the road traffic law review, the following information would need to be kept:

Name and address
Date of birth
Driver number
Licence issue number
Type of licence
Categories of vehicles covered and expiry dates
Whether duplicate licence has been issued
Any current disqualification
Total number of penalty points

It is proposed to keep the information as a separate PNC file and not to include free text fields or warning signals. I understand that there are some 46 million driver licence records. It is not possible to estimate with any accuracy the number of inquiries which may be made of the file, but it is reasonable to assume that it could be between 50 to 100 per cent. of vehicle accesses. About 21 million vehicle inquiries are currently made each year.

The application will enable a police officer to establish immediately whether a person has a valid licence to drive and the appropriateness of the fixed penalty procedures when an offence has been committed.

I recognise the need to keep the Data Protection Registrar informed of our proposals for PNC2. A meeting was held last July with his staff to discuss PNC2 developments and we shall consult further as our plans for new applications proceed.

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by his civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: A range of security measures have been developed to protect computers and the data that they process, according to the assessed risk to each system. These include physical, personnel and electronic controls as well as guidance to staff on secure handling procedures. It is not Government policy to disclose details of these measures, since to do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and thereby reduce the effectiveness of the measures. The measures are kept under review.

Broadcasting

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the role, and its activities to date, of the broadcasting unit in his Department in relation to the crisis in the Gulf.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The broadcasting department of the Home Office has no specific role in relation to the crisis in the Gulf.

Taylor Report

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress towards implementation of the proposals of the Taylor report.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Pontypridd (Dr. Howells) on 14 January at column 375.

Traffic Wardens

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current strength of the traffic co-ordination and support branch of the Metropolitan police (TO14), and the current number of traffic wardens in London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 31 December 1990 the strength of TO14 branch of the Metropolitan police was 120 police officers, 36 civil staff and 31 vehicle removal officers; and the strength of the traffic warden service was 1,416.

Belmarsh Prison

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are expected to be accommodated at Her Majesty's prison Belmarsh when it opens in April 1991; and what is the planned maximum number of inmates.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is expected that Belmarsh prison will hold about 180 prisoners when it opens in April 1991 and will gradually take more prisoners until it reaches its operating capacity of 841 in September.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the posts of Her Majesty's prison Belmarsh have so far been filled in (a) unified prison grades and (b) for civilian workers.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of unified prison grades in posts on 15 January 1991 was 75 and the number of civilian staff was 97 full time and one part time.

Postal and Proxy Votes

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make the application form to vote by post or proxy due to physical incapacity No. RPF 7B available in Braille;

(2) if he will list the languages in which his Department's form RPF 7B for application to vote by post or proxy in respect of physical incapacity is available.

Mrs. Rumbold: Form RPF 7B is available in English and Welsh language versions. There are no plans to make it available in Braille.

Feltham Young Offenders Institution

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he expects the provision of education in the remand wing of Feltham young offenders institution to be restored in the near future; and if he will make a statement on the recent visit by the Minister of State the right hon. Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold).

Mrs. Rumbold: Education classes in the remand wing at Feltham young offenders institution are currently being prevented by a dispute between management and the local branch of the Prison Officers Association over staffing levels. A meeting will take place next month at which I hope the dispute will be resolved.

I visited Feltham on 8 January as part of a programme of visits I am undertaking to prison service establishments.

Private Security Industry

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is now in a position to place a copy of the Home Office's report on the private security industry in the Library; and if he will outline the Government's response to this.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are considering a range of options for improving the regulation of the private security industry. When consideration of this issue has been completed we will decide what circulation to give to the working group's report.

Charities

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he is making with the Government's review of charity law, following the reports of the National Audit Office and the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. John Patten: The Government's proposals for the reform of charity law are set out in the White Paper "Charities: A framework for the Future" which was presented to Parliament on 16 May 1989. The Government hope to introduce legislation to give effect to these proposals within the lifetime of this Parliament.

Immigration Rules

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to make changes in the immigration rules.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has reviewed the immigration arrangements currently in force in relation to Iraqi nationals in the light of the outbreak of hostilities in the Gulf. He has concluded that it is now necessary to suspend the normal immigration facilities for Iraqis wishing to come to the United Kingdom or to extend their stay, and to extend the requirement on Iraqis remaining here to register with the police. The following changes took effect on Saturday, 19 January.

A "Statement of Changes in the Immigration Rules" was laid before Parliament on 18 January and this will provide for applications by Iraqi nationals for visas, for leave to enter, whether or not a visa has previously been issued, or for extensions of stay to be refused. Discretion exists to grant applications outside the immigration rules, but this will be exercised only sparingly in compassionate circumstances where we are satisfied that no threat to national security is involved.

The concession under which Iraqi nationals are permitted to pass through the United Kingdom as airside transit passengers without a visa is being withdrawn.

My right hon. Friend has made an order requiring all Iraqi nationals who are in the United Kingdom on limited leave to register with the police if they are not already subject to such a requirement.

These measures will not affect Iraqi nationals who possess British citizenship or who are nationals of European Community member states exercising treaty rights in the United Kingdom.

THE ARTS

Museum Collections, Derbyshire

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he intends to intervene in the proposed sale of items from the collections of Derbyshire county council museums and galleries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I have no statutory powers in relation to museums and galleries run by local authorities.

The use of any proceeds from the disposal of items from the collection of a museum for purposes other than the purchase of additional items, is contrary to the codes of practice of the Museums Association. I understand that the Museums Association has warned Derbyshire county council that its membership of the association will be reconsidered if the proposed sale goes ahead. The county has also been warned that its eligibility for awards through the Museums and Galleries Commission would be at risk in this event. I hope very much that Derbyshire county council will take notice of the strong protests aroused by its proposed action and rescind its intention to sell these items.

Works of Art (Exports)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will list the items for which the issuing of export licences was withheld on the recommendation of the reviewing committee on the export of works of art during the half year ended 31 December 1990, specifying in each case the valuation and whether an item was eventually exported or retained, with particulars in the latter event of the acquiring institution; whether he will list any items for which licences have been withheld but the final disposal of which is not yet decided, specifying in each case (a) the valuation and (b) the relevant time limit; and whether a press notice will be issued from the Office of Arts and Libraries covering the information given in his reply, including that relating to the outcome in individual cases.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry accepted my recommendation, following consideration by the reviewing committee on the export of works of art, to defer making for a specified period a decision on an export licence application in respect of the items listed. Details of the items on which decisions were deferred were given in press notices issued at the time the Secretary of State decided to accept the recommendation, and a further press notice will now be issued.

Description of Item	Valuation £	Outcome
A pair of George II armchairs by William and John Linnell	200,700	Purchased by the Victoria and Albert
The Badminton Cabinet	8,697,000	Decision deferred until 17 March 1991
Drawing by Bomberg "Family bereavement"	54,000	Application withdrawn by applicant
Painting by Ribera "Martyrdom of Saint Bartholomew"	2,787,500	Export licence granted
Two Bronze trumpet fibulas	1,560	Purchased by Leeds city council
Red enamel brooch	815	Purchased by the British museum

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will list the allocations made to public institutions in the United Kingdom during the half year ended 31 December 1990 of individual works of art and museum objects pre-eminent for national, scientific, historic or artistic interest which have been accepted in satisfaction of inheritance tax or capital transfer tax, together with information, where applicable, as to conditions or wishes expressed in the matter of allocation by testators or executors; whether he will list the works of art and museum objects which are still awaiting allocation, with the respective dates of their acceptance in satisfaction of inheritance tax or capital transfer tax; and whether a press notice will be issued from the Office of Arts and Libraries in the event of any information being given in his reply which has not previously been announced.

Mr. Renton: The information that the hon. Gentleman requests is as follows:

Item	To whom allocated	Condition/Wishes expressed
"Farm Cart with Horse in Harness" by Constable	Ipswich borough council	Wish to go to Ipswich museum
Kirckman Harpsichord	Manchester city council, for use and display at Heaton Hall	Wish to go to the Fitzwilliam museum
"Richmond pres Londres" by Corot	Orleans House, Richmond	Wish to go to a London gallery

Items awaiting allocation	Date of acceptance
Collection of works by and relating to John Piper	31 October 1990
"Girl at a window, Little Rachel" by W. R. Sickert	15 November 1990

It has not been considered worthwhile, in this instance, to issue a press notice since the only material contained in this answer which has not been the subject of previous press notices is the detailing of wishes expressed with each offer.

Welsh National Opera

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make it his policy to ensure that Welsh National Opera is funded securely for the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I have no direct involvement in decisions relating to levels of public subsidy for individual arts organisations. The Welsh National Opera is funded jointly by the Arts Council of Great Britain and the Welsh Arts Council. I understand that the funding bodies and WNO are currently working together constructively to find a mutually acceptable solution to the company's present financial difficulties. I very much hope that there will be a successful outcome.

Museums and Galleries (Attendances)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1990 reported by national museums and galleries in England for which he is responsible, broken down into the individual institutions, but including their outstations, with figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1989.

Mr. Renton: The estimated number of visitors during 1990 to the 11 national museums and galleries for which I am responsible are as follows:

	Estimated Attendance in 1990	Percentage Change from 1989
British Museum	5,079,472	+8·4
Imperial War Museum	1,257,277	+4·4
National Gallery	3,682,233	+9·3
National Maritime Museum	595,353	+40·5
National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside	1,292,590	−4·2
National Portrait Gallery	602,069	−3·7
Natural History Museum	1,459,100	−5·8
Science Museum	2,683,349	+2·9
Tate Gallery	2,210,254	+13·9
Victoria and Albert Museum	1,356,944	−1·6
Wallace Collection	135,866	+5·3
Total	20,354,507	+5·7

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in the 1991-92 financial year of introducing a reduced rate tax band of (a) 20 per cent. and (b) 15 per cent. on the first £2,000 of taxable income; and what would be the effect on the net income of (i) a single person, (ii) a couple where the wife is not working and (iii) a couple where the wife is working and paying tax.

Mr. Maude: The direct revenue cost of a reduced rate of 20 per cent. on the first £2,000 of taxable income in 1991-92 would be about £2·4 billion in a full year. A reduced rate of 15 per cent. of the same band of taxable income would cost about £4·8 billion in a full year. These estimates are based on a projection of the 1988-89 survey of personal incomes and are provisional. The increases in income after tax of the different types of family would be as follows:

Increase in income after tax[1] £ per week

	(a) Reduced rate of 20 per cent. on first £2,000 of taxable income	(b) Reduced rate of 15 per cent. on first £2,000 of taxable income
Family type
(i) Single person	1·92	3·85
(ii) Married couple with wife not working	1·92	3·85
(iii) Married couple with wife working and paying tax	3·85	7·69

[1] Illustrative calculations assume taxpayers have enough income to use the whole of the reduced rate band; in line (ii) the wife's income is assumed to be less than the personal allowance.

Fraud

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money Her Majesty's Government estimate has been lost in the latest year for which comparable figures are available as a result of fraudulent tax claims and fraudulent social security claims; and how many persons have been successfully prosecuted, respectively, in Scotland.

Mr. Maude: Reliable estimates are not available of the cost of fraudulent tax or social security claims.

In the year 1989-90 in Scotland the number of persons successfully prosecuted by the Inland Revenue in respect of false accounts or returns, and false claims to personal allowances, deductions for expenses or repayments, was three.

In the year 1989-90 in Scotland the number of persons successfully prosecuted by the Department of Social Security for social security fraud was 906.

Incomes

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the income per capita in Northern Ireland as a percentage of the United Kingdom level in the latest available year;

(2) what was the income per capita in Wales as a percentage of the United Kingdom level in the latest available year;

(3) what was the income per capita in Scotland as a percentage of the United Kingdom level in the latest available year;

(4) what was the income per capita in each of the regions of England as a percentage of the United Kingdom level in the latest available year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest estimates of personal and household income for the regions of the United Kingdom are provisional estimates for 1988. They were published in "Regional Accounts 1988 Part 2" in the April 1990 issue of Economic Trends—page 115 onwards. The data are also held in computer readable form in the Library of the House. Estimates consistent with the 1990 national accounts and the recently issued regional GDP figures will be published in the April 1991 issue of Economic Trends.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the gross domestic product of the United Kingdom is attributable to London and the south-east.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest estimates of regional gross domestic product were published in "Regional Accounts 1989 Part 1" in the November 1990 issue of Economic Trends (page 98 onwards). This includes provisional estimates for 1989 which suggest that 36·6 per cent. of the gross domestic product of the United Kingdom, excluding the continental shelf, is attributable to London and the south-east. Regional GDP is estimated at factor cost and at current prices using the income approach.

Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide figures for 1979 and 1987 showing, on an equivalent income basis, the proportion of each of the following household types in each quintile of (a) original and (b) post-tax income, as defined in the annual articles in Economic Trends on the effects of taxes and benefits, (i) one adult with children, (ii) two adults with children, (iii) non-retired without children and (iv) retired.

Mr. Maude: The information is not available in the precise form requested because there is now only one method of ranking used to produce the annual article in Economic Trends, and this uses equivalised disposable income. The figures for 1987 are the first to use this new methodology, and the data for 1979 have been reworked on to the new basis. The figures are given in the table.

Percentages of household types within each quintile group of equivalised disposable income, 1979 and 1987

1 adult with children	6	3	2	2	1	3
2 adults with children	16	32	43	33	18	28
Non-retired without children	11	23	33	51	73	38

House Purchase (VAT)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to ensure there is no discrimination as far as value-added tax is concerned between those people buying a purpose-built holiday home and those purchasing from current housing stock a dwelling for use as a second home; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There is, and should be, a distinction drawn for VAT purposes between second homes which are capable of being occupied throughout the year—and which may be treated as principal private residences—and purpose-built holiday homes which the buyers cannot occupy lawfully throughout the year or as their principal private residences. There is no reason why the latter should not be taxed under a broad based consumption tax such as VAT when other forms of holiday accommodation are taxed. Failure to do so would conflict with European Community law.

Privatisation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total income from privatisation sales since 1979.

Mr. Maude: Net privatisation proceeds up to 1989-90 amount to some £28½ billion.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister on what occasions since May 1979 he, or his predecessor, has met (a) the President of Iraq, (b) the Foreign Minister of Iraq and (c) the Defence Minister of Iraq; and what matters were discussed.

The Prime Minister: My predecessor met the then Foreign Minister of Iraq, Dr. Sa'dun Hammadi, on 9 March 1981. She also met Mr. Tariq Aziz in May 1985 when he came as a member of an Arab League delegation and again on 4 December 1985. A number of regional issues were discussed.

Ministers (Overseas Visits)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Prime Minister which Ministers have visited Japan since 1983.

The Prime Minister: The following Ministers have visited Japan since 1983:

18 to 23 January
Mr. Jenkin, Secretary of State for Trade and Industry

5 to 12 March
Mr. Blaker, Minister of State, Ministry of Defence

26 to 27 May
Sir Geoffrey Howe, Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs

26 September to 6 October
Mr. Morrison, Minister of State, Department of Employment

1 to 13 October

Kincora Boys' Home

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will review all official papers on the Kincora boys' home;

(2) if he will make a statement on the Kincora boys' home affair;

(3) if he will institute a new inquiry into events surrounding the Kincora boys' home.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received since taking office to the present date, concerning the Kincora boys' home.

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to obtain for the library of No. 10 Downing street a copy of the BBC2 "Public Eye" programme entitled "Kincora—An MI5 Connection" transmitted in June last year; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Security and Intelligence Services

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to review the activities of the security and intelligence services.

The Prime Minister: I intend to follow the practice of my predecessors by not commenting on these matters.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met the staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services; and what issues were discussed.

The Prime Minister: The arrangements for the staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services were set out by my predecessor in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) on 2 November 1987 at column 512. It is not the practice to give details about how he discharges his responsibilities.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the allegations made by Mr. Colin Wallace about events involving the security services and forces in Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. John McCarthy

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations he has received since his appointment calling on the Government to press for the release of John McCarthy; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We continue to receive a great many representations on behalf of John McCarthy. The plight of our citizens held hostage in Lebanon is high among our concerns and our efforts to secure their release remain unremitting. Hostage releases last year showed that Iran can exert decisive influence. The Iranians have undertaken publicly to use their humanitarian influence to achieve them to live up to this assurance. We are also urging Syria to continue its strenuous efforts to secure the release of western, including British, hostages in Lebanon.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Further Education

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the percentage of the further education budget delegated to colleges by each local education authority.

Mr. Eggar: This information is not held centrally.

School Pupils

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department on the number of pupils in each local education authority who receive education in schools maintained, or formerly maintained, by another local education authority.

Mr. Fallon: Every year each local education authority submits to the Department a return listing pupils who belong to its area but who are attending local authority-maintained or grant-maintained schools outside that area on the third Thursday in January. The pupil numbers as at January 1990 for each LEA are listed in the table.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have (a) become committed to hold a ballot on grant-maintained status, (b) voted yes and (i) had the proposal approved, (ii) had the proposal rejected and (iii) await determination of the proposal and (c) voted no; how many in each category were the subject of (1) closure or (2) reorganisation proposals; and whether, for schools in categories (b) (ii) and (c), the proposals have been approved or rejected.

Mr. Eggar: A total of 179 schools have been or are committed to holding a ballot on GM status. There have been 98 votes in favour, 33 votes against and 51 results are still awaited. Four schools have embarked on the process twice and one application lapsed.

Of the schools that voted in favour of applying for GM status, 58 applications have been approved and the Secretary of State is minded to approve a further two. Twelve have been rejected and 16 have yet to be decided. Applications from a further 10 schools are awaited.

The number of schools in each category which have been the subject of closure or reorganisation proposals were:

		Number subject to closure/reorganisation proposals
GM proposals:
approved	58	18
minded to approve	2	1
rejected	12	11
not yet decided	16	4
still to be published	10	3
Voted no	33	19
Lapsed applications	1	1
Ballot result pending	51	5
Total number of embarkations	183	62

Eight of the 11 reorganisation proposals involving schools with rejected GM applications were eventually approved. Eleven of the 19 reorganisation proposals involving schools who voted not to apply for GM status were approved.

Oral Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average length of time taken and the average cost involved of officials' time in his Department preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions.

Mr. Eggar: The time taken in preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions is not routinely recorded in this Department. Estimates are however made where there is a likelihood of exceeding the disproportionate cost threshold—currently £250. However, following an interdepartmental exercise in 1972 an assessment was made of the average cost throughout all Departments of answering an oral question. This assessment was based on staff time, using average rates of pay and associated costs for the grades concerned, together with a share of the cost of parliamentary sections and any substantial non-staff costs such as computer usage. This assessed figure is regularly updated and currently stands at £99.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what savings his Department would make were no notice given of oral questions to Ministers and they were answered without civil service time being used on briefings.

Mr. Eggar: No savings would be made and costs would almost certainly increase significantly. If the oral question is known in advance briefing can be tightly focused, thus avoiding the cost of producing a detailed brief, covering all subjects that could possibly arise.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the projected amount to be repaid by a student taking out the maximum available loan (a) studying in London and (b) studying outside London to the Student Loans Company by a graduate who was living away from the parental home, does not defer repayments, and was on a (i) three-year and (ii) four-year course commencing October 1990;

(2) if he will give a breakdown of monthly repayments over the standard five-year repayment period to be repaid by a student taking out the maximum available loan (a) studying in London and (b) studying outside London to the Student Loans Company by a graduate who was living away from the parental home, does not defer repayments, and was on a (i) three-year and (ii) four-year course commencing October 1990.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Borrowers repay in real terms the amount that they borrowed. The loan outstanding at the start of repayment depends on the maximum loan available in successive academic years; on the rates of indexation applicable during the period of the loan, and on when in each academic year the borrower draws down the loan. These factors also affect the size of the monthly repayments, as does the length of the standard repayment period.

The table shows, to the nearest pound, the expected loan outstanding at the start of repayment and the monthly cash instalments due in each case. The figures take account of the GDP deflator assumptions given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement. They assume that the borrowers draw down the loan at the start of each academic year and that repayments will take place over five years, starting in April 1994 where the course has lasted three years and in April 1995 where it had lasted four years. The Government will review annually the length of the standard repayment period, in order to ensure that repayments are manageable.

(a) Borrower who had studied in London and lived away from home:
(i) On a three-year course	1,967	36
(ii) On a four-year course	3,010	55
(a) Borrower who had studied outside London and lived away from home:
(i) On a three-year course	1,741	32
(ii) On a four-year course	2,638	48

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide a detailed breakdown of how his Department arrived at the student loans repayment figures given in table 3 of the leaflet "Loans for Students: A brief guide 1990-91" published in August 1990.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The figures in table 3 are purely illustrative. They provide for borrowers to repay in real terms the amount that they borrow.

The table shows the expected monthly cash instalments due from a student who starts a course in the academic year 1990-91 and borrows the maximum loan facility each year at the "elsewhere" rate of loan. It assumes that the value of full year student support from grant and loan will increase by 6 per cent. in the academic year 1991-92, by 3·5 per cent. in the academic year 1992-93 and by 3 per cent. thereafter.

The loan outstanding at the start of repayment is the sum of the maximum loan facilities for the relevant years plus an amount resulting from the indexation of the amount outstanding each year. The indexation rates are assumed to be 9·8 per cent. for the year beginning 1 September 1990, 4·75 per cent. for the year beginning 1 September 1991, 3·5 per cent. for the year beginning 1 September 1992 and 3 per cent. from 1 September 1993 onwards.

Regulation 7(2) of the Education (Student Loans) Regulations 1990 determines the number of monthly instalments. Regulation 7(1) determines the date when repayments start, which depends on the length of the borrower's course. Regulation 7(3) determines the amount of the monthly instalments.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the cost to the Exchequer of the error made by the Student Loans Company in its calculations in its leaflet "Student Loans: Are You in the Picture?" ref. PO5 143/90.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I am informed by the Student Loans Company that the cost of producing a second edition of its brochure was £120,907, which was met from within the company's approved budget.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the amounts by which the loan facilities will be uprated for the academic year 1991-92 for students in (a) London and (b) outside London.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to announce shortly the maximum loan facilities for the academic year 1991-92.

Access Funds

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the amounts each individual college will receive in access funds under the Education (Further and Higher Education Institutions Access Funds) Regulations 1990.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Access fund grants have been paid to more than 400 institutions in England and Wales under the regulations. I am arranging for the figures requested to be placed in the Library. In addition, access fund grants have been paid to universities, polytechnics and colleges by the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council under sections 131(4) and 132(4) of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Full-time Education and Training

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in the latest available year how many 16 to 18-year-olds in England participated in full-time education and training.

Mr. Eggar: The number of 16, 17 and 18-year-olds, including overseas students, at annual census dates between November 1989 and January 1990, participating in full-time education or YTS in England was 1,040,000.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that where comprehensive schools decide to become grant maintained they will not be favoured by local authority funding in preference to primary schools.

Mr. Eggar: Recurrent grant for the direct costs of grant-maintained schools is calculated mainly by reference to the levels of provision that individual LEAs set for their own schools. The additional funds that grant-maintained schools receive in lieu of services previously provided centrally by their former LEA are not intended to be biased towards either primary or secondary schools.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools in the south-west are balloting parents on the question of grant-maintained status.

Mr. Eggar: There are at present four schools in the south-west holding ballots on whether to apply for grant-maintained status. Seven GM schools are already operating in the region. A further four schools have either published proposals or are committed to doing so.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in the latest available year what percentage of all schoolchildren taking GCSE in England sat the examination in mathematics; and of those who sat the examination in mathematics what percentage obtained grades C and above.

Mr. Eggar: In the academic year 1988-89, 91·6 per cent. of 16-year-old pupils attempting GCSE sat an examination in mathematics, and of these 39·9 per cent. gained grades C and above.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in the latest available year, what percentage of all pupils taking the A-level examination in England took the examination in mathematics.

Mr. Eggar: In the academic year 1988-89, 37·2 per cent. of school leavers who had attempted at least one A-level had attempted mathematics.

King Edward VI College, Totnes

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the ballot of parents of King Edward VI college, Totnes on grant-maintained status.

Mr. Eggar: The parental ballot is due to close on Friday 25 January. We would expect the Electoral Reform Society to publish the result on the following Monday.

International Baccalaureate

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the number of people who received higher education and training and gained qualifications in universities outside this country during the period 1987-90 and the proportion of them who had gained the international baccalaureate in this country before commencing their course.

Mr. Eggar: Information is not available centrally.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will provide details of the availability of access to the international baccalaureate within the education system.

Mr. Eggar: It is for school and college authorities to decide whether to offer the international baccalaureate.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students have been entered for the international baccalaureate; and what proportion of those entered have been successful in passing the examination during each year from 1987-90.

Mr. Eggar: Information published by the International Baccalaureate Organisation shows that, in all countries taken together, there were 9,685, 11,286 and 12,217 candidates registered for the international baccalaureate as at May 1987, 1988 and 1989 respectively. Some 74 per cent. of candidates examined for the diploma achieved the qualification.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools provide the opportunity for sixth formers to take the international baccalaureate.

Mr. Eggar: Information provided by the International Baccalaureate Organisation indicates that 13 maintained and independent schools currently offer this examination.

Bedfordshire Schools

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was spent per pupil at secondary schools in Bedfordshire in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure in 1978-79 at constant prices.

Mr. Fallon: Bedfordshire spent £535 per secondary pupil in 1978-79 and £1,635 per secondary pupil in 1988-89, the latest year for which figures are available. At 1988-89 prices, those figures are £1,175 and £1,635 respectively.

Merit Awards

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the largest merit award given to an individual member of staff of the Science and Engineering Research Council during 1989-90.

Mr. Alan Howarth: During the financial year 1989-90, the largest merit award paid to an individual member of staff of the Science and Engineering Research Council was £700.

Nursery Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what financial support will be available for nursery provision in a primary school with grant-maintained status; and if he will make a statement.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whose responsibility it will be to fund nursery classes attached to primary schools which opt for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Eggar: Funding for nursery provision that forms an integral part of a grant-maintained primary school would be provided, as with other aspects of funding at that school, by the Secretary of State under the relevant Education (Grant-maintained schools) (Finance) Regulations. The financial support available would be related to LEA support for pupils of that age group.

City Technology College, Lincoln

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has had any discussions with (a) possible sponsors and (b) Lincolnshire local education authority about the development of a city technology college in Lincoln; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend is aware that Lincolnshire LEA and a group of local industrialists are considering making proposals to him for the establishment of a school with many of the characteristics of a city technology college. The City Technology Colleges Trust has held discussions with those involved and an architect from the Department has visited the possible site of the school.

World Student Games

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has given any consideration to the relationship between a successful outcome of the world student games in Sheffield and the prospects for the United Kingdom of hosting similar international sporting events in the future.

Mr. Atkins: I hope that the world student games, like the other major international events to be held in the United Kingdom, will proceed successfully. However, the prospects for hosting major events in the United Kingdom depend primarily upon the strengths of each individual case.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards the support from public funds of the world student games and similar international sporting events held in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: The policy for major international sports events in this country is to provide appropriate promotional and diplomatic support, if requested, but not direct funding. Funds specifically for sport are channelled through the Sports Council which has made available £3 million for the world student games.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out his Department's policy towards an individual local education authority using its own resources towards funding a city technology college; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend is delighted that a number of local education authorities are considering involving themselves in initiatives to make the benefits of the city technology colleges more widely available. This is further evidence of the success of the city technology colleges programme.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Computer Software

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his Department's policy towards competition in computer software from functionally similar but non-infringing programmes.

Mr. Leigh: The Government wish to encourage competition in the market in computer programs and the move to open systems. At the same time, we wish to encourage innovation and investment in research and development in this field and this requires a proper level of intellectual property protection. The market in the United Kingdom is both innovative and competitive and is evidence that our law provides a balance, giving strong protection without stifling competition. This balance is also to be seen in the directive on the legal protection of computer programs.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations he has received from British and European computer users over the purpose of his Department's late amendment to the EC draft directive on the subject of software copyright;

(2) what representations he has received from computer manufacturers regarding the EC draft directive on software copyright; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has received from British and European computer users over his Department's position regarding the draft EC directive on the legal protection of computer programs;

(4) what technical advice and consultation his Department has drawn on, particularly with regard to open systems and the views of computer users, prior to determining their position on the draft EC directive on software copyright;

(5) what representations he has received from the United States concerning software copyright protection.

Mr. Leigh: Throughout the period leading up to the agreement on a common position on the draft directive on the legal protection of computer programs, my Department received numerous representations from hardware manufacturers, software producers, users and others. These were principally from the United Kingdom, but also from other Community countries and the United States, and covered legal, technical and economic aspects of the issue. Representations were also made by the United States Government. In addition to a large number of individual meetings with interest groups and organisations, my Department held regular consultation and information meetings to which all the various interests involved were invited.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy on the extension of patent protection to software.

Mr. Leigh: Under the present law, the primary protection for computer software is copyright. The Patents Act 1977 excludes computer programs per se from patenting, but an invention concerning an apparatus or method in which a novel and non-obvious computer program is applied in the achievement of a new technical result is patentable. I have no plans to change the law, which accords with the European patent convention.

Software Copyright

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how his Department categorises computer programmes with respect to copyright.

Mr. Leigh: Computer programs are specified as a category of literary work by section 3 of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what procedures his Department intends to put in place to monitor and report on the effect of the EC draft directive on software copyright once it has been enacted;

(2) what levels of increased annual costs his Department assesses as acceptable, as a result of the draft EC directive on software copyright, in the sectors of (a) central Government, (b) local government, (c) retail, (d) banking and insurance, (e) manufacturing and (f) services;

(3) whether his Department has made any analysis of the potential costs to all public and private sector computer users of the draft EC directive on software copyright.

Mr. Leigh: A common position was agreed at the Internal Market Council in December on the draft directive on the legal protection of computer programs. We consider that the text as agreed will not result in substantial changes to existing United Kingdom copyright law and so will not impose any new costs on computer users or any need to introduce formal procedures to monitor the effects of any such changes.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the EC draft directive on software copyright would permit users to engage in the analysis of programs as necessary in order to maintain them.

Mr. Leigh: The directive would allow users to engage in the analysis of programs and permit maintenance, although not upgrading, of computer programs, subject to certain conditions. The lawful acquirer of a program may do what is necessary for the use of the program, including error correction. He may also decompile the program to the extent necessary to achieve interoperability of an independently created program with other programs.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to what extent he has assessed the European Community draft directive on software copyright specifies that interfaces and access protocols, as distinct from their implementation in specific programs, are not themselves properly monopolised under contract.

Mr. Leigh: The text of the directive on which a common position was agreed in December specifies that "ideas and principles which underlie any element of a computer program, including those which underlie its interfaces, are not protected by copyright under this directive".

The principle that copyright does not protect ideas, but only the expression of ideas, is inherent in our law and so this statement, which was included for avoidance of doubt, will not require implementation when the directive is finally adopted.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure the European Community Draft directive on software copyright gives adequate protection to United Kingdom companies which develop and market IBM-compatible PCs.

Mr. Leigh: The directive will require member states to give a proper level of copyright protection to computer programs produced by United Kingdom companies. Those engaged in producing IBM compatible PCs will receive protection for their software on exactly the same basis as any other United Kingdom software producer. Moreover, article 6 of the directive will ensure that interoperability between computer programs can always be achieved, so that compatibility and the move to open systems is not obstructed.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the protection offered under the draft EC directive on software copyright to the computer suppliers proprietary architectures and on his assessment of the consequences in respect of impeding the development of open standards.

Mr. Leigh: The directive will require member states to give copyright protection to computer programs as literary works. This is already the case in the United Kingdom. When the directive is implemented, the protection afforded will not change to any significant degree and so there is no reason to fear that the move to open systems will be impeded.

Oral Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the average length of time taken and the average cost involved of officials' time in his Department preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions.

Mr. Leigh: The time taken in preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions is not routinely recorded in the Department of Trade and Industry. Estimates are however made when there is a likelihood of exceeding the disproportionate cost threshold—currently £250. However following an interdepartmental exercise in 1972, in which the DTI participated, an assessment was made of the average cost throughout all Departments of answering an oral question. This assessment was based on staff time, using average rates of pay and associated costs for the grades concerned, together with a share of the cost of parliamentary sections and any substantial non-staff cost as computer usage. This assessed figure is regularly updated and currently stands at £99.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what savings his Department would make were no notice given of oral questions to Ministers and they were answered without civil service time being used on briefings.

Mr. Leigh: No savings would be made and costs would almost certainly increase significantly. If the oral question is known in advance briefing can be tightly focused, thus avoiding the cost of producing a detailed brief, covering all subjects that could possibly arise.

Israeli Investment

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has of the level of Israeli investment in Britain and of British investment in Israel.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

The net book value of United Kingdom direct investment—in branches and subsidiary and associated companies—in Israel as at end 1987, the latest available information, was £24 million. Information on the net book value of direct investment by Israel in the United Kingdom is not available. Information on the level of United Kingdom portfolio investment in Israel or on Israeli portfolio investment in the United Kingdom is also not available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Crawfordsburn Hospital

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the district valuer placed a valuation on the land and buildings at Crawfordsburn hospital; what was this value; to whom it was communicated; and when.

Dr. Mawhinney: The district valuer was asked by the DHSS on 5 November 1990 to provide a valuation of the premises and also advise on a disposal strategy, should the premises be declared surplus. The district valuer replied on 15 November 1990 to the DHSS advising that, if declared surplus, the premises should be marketed widely throughout the United Kingdom. I am advised that it could be prejudicial to any future sale if the DV's valuation, which may become an effective reserve price, were made known at this time.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether his Department received any requests for information on Mr. Colin Wallace from the Defence Select Committee.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Acute Beds

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many acute beds were available on a daily basis in hospitals in each of the health and social services board areas in 1979; and how many were available in 1990.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 16 January 1991]: The information requested is as follows:

Health and social services board	Average available acute beds
	1979	1989-90
Eastern	4,199	3,288
Northern	1,159	999
Southern	1,023	859
Western	928	703

Over the period the number of patients treated rose from 189,678 in 1979 to 218,313 in 1989-90.

Government Appointees

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of all government-appointed nominees to the General Consumer Council for Northern Ireland since its formation, giving the year of appointment and the length of service in each case.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 16 January 1991]: The information requested is as follows:

Kincora Boys' Home

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy towards reopening an inquiry into the Kincora boys' home.

Dr. Mawhinney: This matter has been investigated first by the RUC, then by Sir George Terry and finally by his honour Judge Hughes. I can see no benefit in holding a further inquiry.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the inquiries concerning events at the Kincora boys' home.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 January 1991]: This matter has been investigated first by the RUC, then by Sir George Terry and finally by his honour Judge Hughes.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the individual identified as James in a television programme referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) of 11 June 1990, Official Report, column. 29 was interviewed about any role of the security and intelligence services concerning inquiries into the Kincora boys' home; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 January 1991]: I have nothing to add to the reply that my right hon. Friend, the Member for Northavon (Mr. Cope) gave to the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 11 June 1990, Official Report, column 29.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the Kincora boys' home from January 1990 to current date.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 January 1991]: I have received 16 letters related to this subject during the period.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) whether he will re-examine all papers on the Kincora boys' home to ascertain the role of the security and intelligence services in decisions relating to an inquiry into Kincora in 1976;

(2) if he will place copies of all correspondence received from January 1990 to the present date concerning the Kincora boys' home, and his replies, in the Library.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 January 1991]: No.

TRANSPORT

Maritime Security

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make directions under the provisions of the Aviation and Maritime Security Act 1990 requiring the maritime industries to take security measures.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend today made directions which will require the industry to take specified measures to improve its counter-terrorist protective security precautions. These directions will be served on the industry as soon as can be arranged. Copies of the directions have been placed in the Library of the House.

Roads, Cheshire

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the level of the transport supplementary grant allocated to the Cheshire county council for 1991-92; and what was the comparable figure in cash and percentage terms for each of the preceding three years;

(2) what provision was made in the announcement of the transport supplementary grant for 1991-92 for the Cheshire county council to commence work on the Wheelock bypass.

Mr. Chope: The net level of transport supplementary grant allocated to Cheshire county council and the percentage change on the preceding years are:

	Transport supplementary grant £ million	Per cent. change from previous year
1988-89	1·364	−28·4
1989-90	2·766	103·5
1991-92	5·501	32·4

No provision has been made for the Wheelock bypass in Cheshire county council's transport supplementary grant for 1991-92. The main works for this scheme are scheduled to start in 1993-94 and it will therefore be considered for support in that and subsequent years.

North Sea Standby Vessels

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the use of former fishing vessels as standby vessels in the North sea.

Mr. McLoughlin: Most fishing vessels have good sea-keeping qualities and when properly converted have had no difficulty meeting the requirements of the Department's code for the assessment of the suitability of standby vessels attending offshore installations. Some fishing vessels properly maintained and converted may meet the new requirements for standby vessels which are to be drawn up in the light of Lord Cullen's report into the Piper Alpha tragedy.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about North sea standby vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Since 1988, a number of representations have been received. Nearly all of them centre principally on improvements to the Department's code for the assessment of standby vessels and when the new standards will be implemented.

Railway Maintenance

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what responsibilities are laid by him on Her Majesty's inspectors of railways to lay down or monitor their, or other bodies, standards of general maintenance of track, rolling stock or other operational equipment other than those recommended consequential on specific activities related to accidents.

Mr. Freeman: Her Majesty's railway inspectorate sets non-statutory standards for fixed works and rolling stock, but does not lay down standards for maintenance work, which are matters for railway operators in accordance with their responsibilities for safe operation. The inspectorate has powers under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 to require operators to conduct their undertaking in such a way as to ensure, so far as is reasonably practical, that the safety of passengers and staff is not compromised.

Rail Subsidy

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the total amount of subsidy paid in the last financial year to Network SouthEast;

(2) what was the total amount of subsidy paid in the last financial year to British Rail in respect of its operations in Wales.

Mr. Freeman: Subsidy is paid by the Government to the British Railways Board in the form of the public service obligation grant under EC regulation 1191/69 and section 3 of the Railways Act 1974, which compensates BR for maintaining loss-making passenger services, and level crossing grant under EC regulation 1192/69. The BR board received £498·6 million of PSO grant and £19·7 million of level crossings grant in the last financial year, 1989-90. Both grants are paid as totals to the board and the Government do not specifically allocate them between sectors or geographical areas, but some £95 million of the PSO grant related to Network SouthEast and the rest to the provincial sector.

London Transport

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total amount of subsidy given in the last financial year to London Transport distinguishing between bus operations and underground services.

Mr. Freeman: The Government do not pay grant separately in respect of bus and underground services. London Transport receives a block grant covering the totality of its external financial requirement. In 1989-90, grant to London Transport totalled £287 million.

InterCity Services

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with the chairman of British Rail representations he has received about the improvement of Liverpool-London InterCity services by the use of a South Liverpool station as a stopping place for InterCity trains and the financial implications arising therefrom.

Mr. Freeman: We have received no representations on this matter.

BR Stations (Improvements)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail about financial assistance to improve the condition of the cuttings and make environmental improvements between Liverpool Lime Street and Edge Hill stations.

Mr. Freeman: No. These are operational matters for British Rail. However, I understand that preliminary discussions have taken place between BR and Merseyside development corporation and the Merseyside task force to create a partnership to carry out an environmental improvement scheme at Edge Hill station.

Coopers and Lybrand Report

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the Coopers and Lybrand report on non-channel tunnel traffic on railways.

Mr. Freeman: Coopers, Lybrand Deloitte are not undertaking any such work for my Department. It is for British Rail to decide whether to publish any reports that the firm produces for it.

Channel Tunnel Link

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the report on the alternative routes for the rail link to the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that British Rail expects to have in the spring the results of the further studies into possible routes for the rail link to the channel tunnel.

No decisions have yet been taken by BR or the Department on the timing or form of publication of the results.

Concessionary Travel

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he will establish a nationwide scheme of assistance for retirement pensioners to free travel on road and rail transport at off-peak hours;

(2) whether he will establish a nationwide scheme of assistance for retirement pensioners to travel at concessionary rates of 75 per cent. or 66 per cent. on road and rail transport in off-peak hours.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have no plans to change the present arrangements. Local authorities already have powers to provide free or cheap travel for pensioners on local public transport, and do so in some 90 per cent. of areas. Both British Rail and the long-distance coach operators also have their own travel concessions arrangements for the elderly.

Road Accidents

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in how many cases signals from taxi radios or mobile telephones have been implicated in road accidents through interference with car computers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Department has no evidence of any road accidents that have resulted from electromagnetic interference—from whatever source—to electrical or electronic equipment fitted to vehicles.

There are already strict rules controlling the use of radio transmission and reception equipment on vehicles. There is a general European Community directive due to enter into force on 1 January 1992 that covers electromagnetic compatibility of all electrical and electronic equipment, both mobile and static.

We nevertheless need to ensure that, with the development of sophisticated electronic systems for vehicles, the satisfactory and safe operation of those systems will be maintained.

Draft proposals are now being formulated by the European vehicle industry for a Community directive intended specifically to cover electromagnetic compatibility of vehicles. This will set standards to control the emission of interference from vehicles and ensure their immunity to emissions from external sources. We support these proposals.

M40

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the total outturn cost of the M40 Waterstock to Umberslade, including the A43 Wendlebury-North Oxford and the widening of the M40 in the Chilterns (a) for preparation, design and supervision, (b) construction and contract costs and (c) land and compensation costs.

Mr. Chope: Outturn figures are not yet available. Total expenditure to date on the M40 Waterstock to Umberslade section, the Peartree Hill to Wendlebury section of A43 (now A34) and the widening of the M40 under each of the headings requested are:

(a) £41·11 million.
(b) £434·70 million.
(c) £11.38 million.

Interchange, Shrewsbury

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what would be the additional cost of improving the proposed interchange between the A49 and A5/M54 extension bypass currently under construction in Shrewsbury.

Mr. Chope: No estimate is available.

Second Severn Bridge

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the desirability of constructing the approach road to the second Severn bridge on the English side to three-lane capacity.

Mr. Chope: Northavon district council, the Automobile Association and Thornbury town council are among those who consider that the link from the second Severn crossing to the M4 in England should be built as a dual three-lane motorway, rather than as the proposed dual two-lane motorway.

The two proposed approach roads in England will together provide four lanes in each direction while the new bridge itself will have three lanes in each direction. All the proposed capacity is additional to that provided by the existing bridge and M4 motorway.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Safety Act

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what additional funds will be made available to local authorities for the financing of the enforcement of the Food Safety Act 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are making available an additional £30 million per year from 1991-92 onwards to cover the additional cost for local authorities enforcing the Food Safety Act and the EC directive on the official control of foodstuffs.

Cattle Subsidies

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans (a) to change and (b) to abolish the £30 headage subsidy on the first 90 male cattle on any holding numbers.

Mr. Curry: No.

Eastern Sea Fisheries Committee

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the duties and powers of the Eastern sea fisheries committee and its financial structure; and what changes he is planning.

Mr. Curry: The powers and duties of local fisheries committees are laid down in the Sea Fisheries Regulation Act 1966, as amended. These principally concern the management and regulation of sea fisheries and shellfish fisheries and undertaking the necessary related enforcement.

The Eastern sea fisheries committee is one of 12 such committees in England and Wales and its district extends from Donna Nook in Lincolnshire to Dovercourt in Essex and seawards between these two points for three miles. Forty per cent. of its funding comes from Norfolk county council and 30 per cent. each from Lincolnshire and Suffolk county councils.

We have no plans to change these arrangements. However, we are considering the results of consultation on a proposal from the Association of Sea Fisheries Committees for a general extension of the seaward limit of sea fisheries committee jurisdiction from three to six miles.

Sole

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to press his counterparts in Europe to agree that the Dutch overfishing of 13,000 tonnes of sole in 1990 should be deducted from the 1991 quota allocated to the Netherlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Most member states, including the United Kingdom, fully or overfished their quotas before the Commission closed the North sea sole fishery on 21 December 1990. Latest provisional landings data indicate that the Netherlands has exceeded its quota by fewer than 200 tonnes, not 13,000 tonnes. The Commission has already set in train compensation proceedings because under the common fisheries policy a mechanism already exists whereby member states which overfish at the expense of others are required to provide appropriate compensation to those prejudiced.

Fishing Industry

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that the United Kingdom fishing industry will be competing on equal terms with all other EC member states after 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Ever since we negotiated the common fisheries policy in 1983, when we secured 37·3 per cent. of the quotas for the seven main edible species and very restricted access for other member states vessels to our coastal waters, a package which was acknowledged as a good one by our industry, we have consistently defended the position of our industry. As recently as the last December Fisheries Council we again secured a good package of fishing opportunities including additional quantities through the Hague preference and also a greater flexibility to catch western mackerel east of the 4°W line. We will continue to work to secure good arrangements.

Smoked Meat and Fish

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many businesses are involved in smoking and curing meat and fish products.

Mr. Maclean: The smoking and curing of meat and fish is mainly undertaken by businesses in two industries: activity heading 4122—bacon curing and meat products; and activity heading 4150—fish products. There are 822 local units recorded in the former of these industries and 354 in the latter, but only a small proportion of these units are known to undertake smoking or curing.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people are employed in the smoked meat and fish industry; and what estimates have been made of the effect on employment of the implementation of the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations.

Mr. Maclean: The smoking and curing of meat and fish is mainly undertaken by businesses in two industries: activity heading 4122—bacon curing and meat products; and activity heading 4150—fish products. It is estimated that there are about 53,000 persons employed in the former of these industries and 17,000 in the latter. Only a very small proportion of these are known to be involved in smoking or curing. Temperature controls are necessary to ensure the safety of certain foods as they reach the consumer. Where the processing of the food or the method of packaging can be shown to prevent the growth of pathogenic micro-organisms at ambient temperatures chill controls are not required. Industry will itself want to consider how its products can meet these food safety demands.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimate of how much smoked meat and fish is delivered by post each year.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not available.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the hill livestock compensatory allowance payments for 1991; when these amounts were initially paid out to farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller) on 18 January, Official Report, column 616.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

ODA Staffing Levels

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has regarding ODA staffing levels over the next five years.

Mrs. Chalker: I have no plans to make any significant changes to ODA staffing levels. The annual figures in the current public expenditure survey period will be given in the Departmental report to be published next month.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many ODA staff are women at or above grade 7; and what is the percentage of women as a total of such staff.

Mrs. Chalker: Thirty-five ODA staff at G7 or above are women. The number includes eight women who are on secondment to other aid organisations. This represents 10·94 per cent. of all ODA staff at those levels, including seconded staff.

Africa (Famine)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the number of people in Africa currently threatened by famine.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Nations World Food Programme estimates that at least 20 million people are currently under threat.

Bangladesh

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the United Kingdom currently doing to help Bangladesh to prevent or to mitigate the effects of flooding.

Mrs. Chalker: Following the serious flooding in Bangladesh in 1988 we hosted an international conference in London on 11 and 12 December 1989 which reviewed and endorsed a rolling five-year flood action plan prepared for the Bangladesh Government by the World bank.

Britain agreed to undertake four of the 26 activities proposed in the plan, which are aimed at establishing ways to control and alleviate the effects of flooding. These are a major regional study on how to address the flooding problem in north-west Bangladesh; supporting studies to evaluate the effectiveness of previous flood control schemes and to assess ways of improving their operation and maintenance; and a study on fisheries, designed to ensure that the relationship between flood alleviation measures and fishery resources is properly understood. Consultants undertook feasibility work in Bangladesh in 1990 on the regional and fisheries studies and the main study teams for all four activities have now begun to arrive in Bangladesh.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will commission an independent survey on the effectiveness of the United Kingdom aid programme.

Mrs. Chalker: We regularly commission independent outside evaluators to work alongside our own evaluation department on studying the effectiveness of particular aspects of the aid programme. The results of around 50 studies completed over the last three years are available.

The development assistance committee—DAC—of the OECD also reviews the aid programmes of its members on a regular basis. A review of the United Kingdom aid programme is currently under way and the conclusions of the DAC will be announced in April.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was United Kingdom per capita aid in each of the last five years to (a) Sudan, (b) Ethiopia, (c) Angola, (d) Mozambique and (e) Liberia.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom gross bilateral aid (including emergency relief aid) per capita (£ actual) 1985-89 to Angola, Ethiopia, Liberia, Mozambique and Sudan

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing the level of United Kingdom bilateral aid since 1987 to the 20 poorest nations as measured by GDP: and what information he has as to the percentage this aid represents of the total aid received by that nation in each case.

Mrs. Chalker: The information for 1987 and 1988 is as follows:

Cambodia	100	0·6
Afghanistan	1,932	2·8

Notes:

(1) These figures are for net official development assistance (oda).

(2) The figures in the left-hand column are for United Kingdom bilateral aid only, and thus do not include the United Kingdom share of multilateral aid to these countries, which is included in the total oda receipts figure which forms the basis of the right-hand column.

(3) The figures include official development assistance recorded in 1987 and 1988: figures for other donors for 1989 are not yet available in this form.

Sources: British Aid Statistics: United Kingdom aid.
OECD: Total oda receipts.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total level of aid, broken down by continent, formally requested of the United Kingdom over the past 12 months; and how much of this total was agreed to.

Mrs. Chalker: Formal requests for specified amounts of British aid are rarely received. We are in regular consultation with the main recipients of bilateral aid about the amounts of British aid that might be made available and the purposes for which it might be used.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries in Asia and the middle east were beneficiaries of funds from the aid and trade provision in the last year.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1990, spending under the aid and trade provision took place in respect of projects in the following countries:

Asia
Burma
China
India
Indonesia
Malaysia
Pakistan
Philippines
Sri Lanka
Thailand

Middle East Jordan
Yemen Arab Republic

Sri Lanka

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of bilateral aid to Sri Lanka.

Mrs. Chalker: Total United Kingdom bilateral aid to Sri Lanka was £23·552 million in 1989, the latest year for which figures are available, and comprised:

	£ million
Capital aid	6·391
Technical co-operation	8·222
Aid and trade provision	4·158
Commonwealth development corporation	3·114
Debt relief	1·589
Disaster relief	0·078

Expenditure is expected to have been substantially less in 1990, due in part to the security situation

Poland

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intended to make further significant aid available to Poland during 1991.

Mrs. Chalker: We shall continue to help Poland from the know-how fund for eastern Europe. I expect that the level of expenditure in 1991-92 will be similar to that in 1990-91—about £10 million.

Physically and Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds are made available by the ODA specifically to assist the physically and mentally handicapped.

Mrs. Chalker: Funds specifically to assist physically and mentally handicapped people are made available from our geographical programmes, through our joint funding scheme—JFS—with British charities and through international aid agencies. Examples of our geographical activities are:

—In India we have supported Indian Spastic Societies in Bombay, Delhi and Calcutta since 1979. We currently have under consideration a programme of further support to these societies, plus another in Madras at a cost of around £1·6 million.

—In Fiji we are spending £40,000 on a project with the Disabled Peoples' Association.

—In Malawi we are sponsoring 15 ophthalmic technicians from the region to be trained and equipped to return to their countries to work as peripatetic operators. The cost of this project is £73,000.

In the financial year 1989-90 over £651,000 was provided under the JFS for projects specifically intended to benefit disabled people. International agencies supported by the ODA which undertake projects to promote the welfare of disabled people include the WHO, UNCHR and UNIDO.

Illiteracy

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional resources have been made available by his Department to help combat illiteracy in developing countries.

Mrs. Chalker: I am ready to give additional help, but the ODA must take account of the plans and priorities of developing country Governments.

I hope that the world conference on education for all which was held in Thailand last year will encourage governments to give greater priority to combating illiteracy. We currently spend £3·7 million of capital and technical co-operation funds specifically on primary education and adult literacy. We are making £20 million available this year to the joint funding scheme for non-governmental organisation work which includes a number of literacy projects.

Least-developed Countries

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid his Department is giving to help the least-developed countries develop more effective governmental, legal and commercial structures; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Effective governmental, legal and commercial structures are essential to economic and social development in least developed countries, as elsewhere. We provide assistance under our aid programme in many least developed countries through technical cooperation and training. Our aid also provides financial support for economic reform programmes linked to strengthening of these structures.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all projects and programmes funded by the Commonwealth Development Corporation in the last five years.

Mrs. Chalker: The following is the list of the projects in which the Commonwealth Development Corporation made an investment during the years 1986 to 1990.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Souvenir Kiosk

32. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the total turnover from the House of Commons souvenir kiosk during November and December; and what estimated profit after deducting wages and administration charges the authorities will receive.

Mr. MacGregor: The total turnover of the Refreshment Department kiosk during November and December 1990 including VAT, was £109,786 and £213,318, respectively. Equivalent gross profits were £34,368 and £66,778, respectively. After the deduction of £5,261·53 for direct payroll costs during the two-month period, the net operating surplus for both months combined was £95,884·47.

40. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council what were the takings of the House of Commons kiosk (a) in the four weeks to Christmas and (b) over the past year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The takings, or turnover, of the Refreshment Department souvenir kiosk during the four weeks to Christmas 1990 and for the previous 12 months to Christmas—including VAT—were £246,472 and £701,404, respectively.

Members of the European Parliament

39. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he has to improve liaison between the House and Members of the European Parliament.

Mr. MacGregor: At its next meeting the Services Committee will be asked to consider measures designed to facilitate contacts between this House and Members of the European Parliament. Proposals will also be presented for the introduction of free postage and telephone calls with EC institutions.

Procedural Changes

41. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he is now in a position to announce any proposals for procedural changes for the House of Commons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The House will be considering important changes to the European Standing Committees tomorrow.

Notices of Motions

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Lord President of the Council on how many days between 1 July 1987 and 31 December 1990 the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) has tabled notices of motions relating to each of (a) the Select Committee on Legal Affairs, (b) reform of House of Commons procedure, (c) sittings of the House and (d) Members' facilities; and what estimate he has made of the total cost to public funds and the volume of newsprint that have been involved in the printing of the motions.

Mr. MacGregor: The total cost to public funds of printing and publishing notices of motions relating to (a) a Select Committee on Legal Affairs, (b) the reform of the House of Commons procedure, (c) sittings of the House and (d) Members facilities, tabled by the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) in Sessions 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90 and in the current Session to 31 December 1990 is estimated as £68,000. The volume of paper consumed was about 345,000 sheets of A4 paper. The number of days on which the notices of motions were tabled in each Session are as follows:

Number of days

Motion	Session 1987-88	Session 1988-89	Session 1989-90	Session 1990-91[1]	Total
(a) Select Committee on Legal Affairs	—	71	[2]87	—	158
(b) Procedure	69	122	132	23	346
(c) Sittings	69	123	132	23	347
(d) Facilities	—	115	132	23	270

[1] Up to 31 December 1990.
[2] The figure given in the Official Report of 14 June 1990, column 298 was incorrect.

Committee Rooms

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans there are for House of Commons Committee Rooms to be fitted with the audio loop.

Mr. MacGregor: With the exception of three rooms, where the installation of an electronic loop to enhance audibility for the hard of hearing was not considered practical, all other rooms on the Committee Corridor are equipped with that facility. So too is the Great Committee Room, Westminster Hall.

Reception of proceedings by means of these loops requires the attendance of an operator and so is not available for those Select Committees, the proceedings of which are not recorded by sound or for television broadcast, nor for private meetings.

The system is compatible with most modern hearing aids and with portable receivers available on loan from the Serjeant's staff on duty in the Committee Corridor.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Economic Sanctions

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the nations against which the United Kingdom is currently operating economic sanctions, giving the reason in each case.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are implementing a variety of restrictive measures on our trade and other relations with a number of countries. These include:

(a) controls, operated for strategic reasons, through COCOM on the export of high technology equipment which could be used for military as well as civil purposes to a number of proscribed destinations, including the Soviet Union, eastern Europe and China. COCOM comprises the NATO countries, less Iceland, as well as Japan and Australia;

(b) a variety of restrictive measures on our economic relations with South Africa, implemented within the EC and by agreement with the Commonwealth, as a signal of our disapproval of apartheid. For details of these measures I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer my right hon. Friend the then Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave to the hon. Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 15 February 1990 and to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 19 February 1990. Since then, we have lifted the ban on new investments and the Commonwealth voluntary ban on the promotion of tourism to South Africa (on 23 February 1990) and the European Council has lifted the ban on new investments Community-wide (on 15 December 1990);

(c) restrictions not aimed at particular countries, such as those of the missile technology control regime, and those resulting from our commitment to nuclear non-proliferation, and controls on the export of material used in production of chemical and biological weapons;

(d) special restrictions applied to arms exports to certain countries, for example, in the middle east, reflecting our wish not to fuel or prolong conflicts in the region, and our determination to take a firm line on state-sponsored terrorism. The embargo on trade in arms with China, introduced by the European Community in June 1989 to mark their concern about the repression of the democracy movement, remains in place;

(e) economic sanctions imposed on Iraq and occupied Kuwait, in accordance with our obligations under UNSCR 661, following Iraq's illegal invasion of Kuwait and subsequent refusal to withdraw.

FCA

Military Aid

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total level of British military aid to the 20 poorest nations, measured by GDP, since 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Excluding the cost of the garrison in Belize, the figures are as follows:

1987-88	2·1
1988-89	1·8
1990-91	2·6

Katyn Massacre

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there will now be a statement to correct official information regarding the Polish Government in exile's claims concerning the responsibility for Katyn.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have in the past issued no statement or official comment on the Polish Government in exile's claims about Katyn. As we have said before, the Soviet authorities' admission last April that the NKVD was responsible for the massacre was very welcome.

Dounreay

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance has been afforded to AEA Fuel Services by British embassies to assist in the promotion of Dounreay.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: AEA Fuel Services has not sought our help in providing the services that it offers.

Technology Exports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to brief exporters of militarily sensitive technologies of their responsibilities in such exports.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This is a matter for the Department of Trade and Industry. There are regular consultations among Whitehall departments on the enforcement of export controls. When necessary officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office participate in briefings organised by the DTI for business men.

Khmer Rouge

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to prevent the Khmer Rouge from returning to power in Cambodia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A comprehensive political settlement that enables the Cambodian people to choose their own government free from the fear of Khmer Rouge atrocities, civil war and invasion is the best way to bring durable peace to Cambodia and prevent the Khmer Rouge from returning to power. That is the purpose of the document drawn up in November 1990 by the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, the co-chairmen of the Paris conference on Cambodia and the United Nations Secretary General's representative. As one of the permanent five, the United Kingdom will continue to work for the acceptance and implementation of this document.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs further to his reply of 12 November 1990, Official Report, columns 54-55, what information he has on the number of tanks the Khmer Rouge possess, and who supplied them; and what efforts he is taking as a member of the United Nations Security Council to restrain Khmer Rouge military aggression in Cambodia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We understand that the Khmer Rouge has acquired a number of tanks of Chinese origin.

As a permanent member of the United Nations Security Council, Britain is playing an active role in diplomatic efforts to resolve the Cambodian conflict. Acceptance by all Cambodian parties of the draft comprehensive settlement document agreed in Paris on 23 to 26 November by the permanent five, the co-chairmen of the Paris conference and the United Nations Secretary-General's representative would be the best way to bring the fighting to an end. The Five have repeatedly called on all parties to stop fighting and co-operate to the full in helping to implement the settlement document.

Cambodia

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if, in his discussions with the other permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, while drafting the United Nations framework for Cambodia, he sought a commitment from them to end supplies of military aid to the Cambodian parties;

(2) if he will now seek a commitment from the other permanent members of the United Nations Security Council to end supplies of military aid to the Cambodian parties.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A commitment has already been given in the framework document a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House endorsed by the United Nations Security Council in resolution 668 of 20 September 1990.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts he is making to ensure the cessation of arms supplies to the warring parties in Cambodia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie) of 14 January, at column 382.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role he envisages for the international control mechanism to monitor military action in Cambodia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under the United Nations peace plan, the international control mechanism proposed at the Paris conference on Cambodia in August 1989 is replaced by the military component of the United Nations transitional authority—UNTAC. Its functions are set out in the draft settlement document agreed by the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, the co-chairmen of the Paris conference on Cambodia and the United Nations Secretary-General's representative in Paris on 23 to 26 November 1990.

Baltic States

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Government policy concerning the development of democratic self-government for Lithuania and other Baltic states within the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We fully support the right of the Baltic peoples to determine their own future, and welcome the progress made in the last two years towards this goal. We have strongly urged the Soviet authorities not to reverse that process. To do so would contravene the Soviet Union's commitment to strengthen democracy, under the charter for a new Europe signed in Paris on 21 November 1990. Only free negotiation based on democratic principles can provide a solution to the problems of the Baltic peoples.

Lithuania

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet the Lithuanian Foreign Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I met the Lithuanian Foreign Minister, Mr. Algirdas Saudargas at the Foreign Office on 15 January. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met Mr. Saudargas on 16 January. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State told the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) in reply to his question later that day, we shared Mr. Saudargas's anxiety about the continuing threat of repression in Lithuania and other republics.

Albania

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will bring forward a programme of bilateral and European Community advice and aid to the Government and people of Albania following their elections.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We shall not take a decision on this before the election.

Mr. Jonathan Moyle

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if his Department has been informed officially of the latest court decision in Chile of the circumstances of Mr. Jonathan Moyle's death;

(2) if he will make a statement regarding inquiries carried out by his Department into the circumstances in Jonathan Moyle, met his death in Chile;

(3) if his Department has any details of the information Mr. Jonathan Moyle, found dead in Chile, had come across in relation to arms being exported from Chile to Iraq.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 17 January 1991]: The circumstances of Mr. Jonathan Moyle's tragic death are still under investigation by the Chilean autborities; no decision has yet been reached. Her Majesty's coroner for Exeter and East Devon has opened and adjourned an inquest. It is for these authorities to determine the cause of death.

The British embassy in Santiago, has been, and remains in close and regular touch with the Chilean authorities and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is in contact with Mr. Moyle's family. Neither the Foreign and Commonwealth Office nor the British embassy at Santiago has ever taken an official position on the cause of Mr. Moyle's death. I have looked into media reports that Mr. Moyle may have come across information about Chilean arms sales to Iraq, but I have no evidence to substantiate this.

DEFENCE

Civilian Employees

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many serving members of the Royal Air Force and civilians working ancillary to the Royal Air Force are employed in Wales; and if he will make a statement on the future of the Royal Air Force in Wales;

(2) how many serving members of the Army and civilians working ancillary to the Army are employed in Wales; and if he will make a statement on the future of the Army in Wales.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 4,646 established RAF posts and 2,643 civilians employed at RAF units in Wales, while the Army presence comprises some 650 trained service personnel and 550 civilian employees. A strengthening of this presence in future would be consistent with wider Government policy on relocation; and certainly we shall take account of the natural advantages offered by Wales, especially for training, in our planning for any redeployments. We are, however, contemplating a significant reduction in the long-term size of our forces under "options for change", and the impact of this is bound to be felt to some degree in Wales as in other parts of the United Kingdom.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government will undertake a public survey of the problems of toxic waste pollution in and around United States overseas bases as it affects United States bases in Britain, including bases closing or closed.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are no plans to undertake such a survey.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what information Her Majesty's Government has or intends to seek on the problems of toxic waste pollution in and around United States bases in Britain;

(2) whether Her Majesty's Government will seek binding agreements with the United States Government to ensure the clean-up, at United States expense, of all United States bases in Britain and surrounding areas which have been affected by toxic waste pollution.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Such bases are bound by the same environmental legislation as military establishments occupied by our own armed forces. Any particular occurrence of pollution, either governed by such legislation or otherwise notifiable, are dealt with in the appropriate manner. There are in addition general agreements, on basing responsibilities already in existence.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government intends to examine the United States congressional report on the problems of toxic waste pollution in and around United States overseas bases, due to be published at the end of 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I understand that no such report exists.

Body Bags

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has placed orders for body bags with firms in Halifax and the Calder Valley during the last six months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Ammunition

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the provision of ammunition by the United Kingdom's European partners for the United Kingdom Gulf force, including who is financing such ammunition and the reasons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the build-up of the British contribution to the multinational force in the Gulf we sought additional ammunition of certain types from our European allies. Most of the ammunition required was provided either on loan—that is on a replacement or repayment basis—or for a nominal price, although some was procured at the market price.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Visual Handicap

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people receive mobility allowance whose main disabling condition is listed as blindness or disease of the eye;

(2) how many people receive mobility allowance solely on the basis of visual impairment.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Benefits and Allowances

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action his Department intends to take regarding the Court of Appeal judgment in July 1990, Secretary of State v. Thomas, Cooze, Beard, Murphy and Morley v. Secretary of State, regarding discriminatory upper age limits for severe disability allowance and invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has appealed to the House of Lords against the decision of the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department will save through the restriction of paying back-dated benefits arising from test cases, introduced by the Social Security Act 1990.

Miss Widdecombe: Savings for the current financial year are estimated to be of the order of £2 million.

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by his civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures. These measures are kept under review. The Department of Social Security does not process classified information on its mainframe or lap-top computers.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, for the Doncaster area, how many (a) pensioner households, (b) families with children and (c) other households who are tenants of (i) Doncaster local authority, (ii) housing associations and (iii) other landlords, are estimated to be receiving (1) maximum housing benefits with no deduction for non-dependants,

(2) maximum housing benefit but with deductions for non-dependants and (3) a lesser amount of housing benefit towards their rent payments currently and over the periods 1988-89 and 1989-90; and what proportions of the total numbers of tenants in each category they represent.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Loans and Grants

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state (a) the amounts available and (b) the amounts taken up by each Department of Social Security office in Scotland for (i) crisis loans, (ii) budgeting loans and (iii) community care grants in each year since the system was introduced, including the current year until the latest convenient date.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is available in the Library.

Supplementary Benefit and Income Support

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing how many people were provided for by supplementary benefit or income support in Scotland in each year since 1974 separately identifying the number of children.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table:

Thousands

Year	Total claimants, partners and dependants	Of which children (0-15 years)
1975	449	115
1976	n/a	n/a
1977	473	120
1978	468	120
1979	451	109
1980	482	119

1987	862	216
1988	827	226
1989	799	223

Source: Annual Statistical Inquiries.

Notes:
(a) Information for 1974 is not available in the form requested.
(b) The Annual Statistical Inquiries for 1976 is incomplete. It does not contain details of unemployed cases.
(c) There was no Annual Statistical Inquires in 1985; the one due in December that year was deferred until February 1986.

Income Support Deductions

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many, and what percentage of, income support claimants in Scotland (a) aged over 60 years and (b) aged under 60 years are repaying social fund budgeting loans or crisis loans by deductions from their benefit payments.

Mr. Scott: The table shows the number and the percentage of income support claimants in Scotland (a) aged over 60 and (b) aged under 60 repaying social fund budgeting loans or crisis loans from their benefit payments at the end of November 1990.

	Number of Recoveries November 1990	Percentage of IS Recipients repaying via benefit
(a) Aged over 60	3,860	2·6
(b) Aged under 60	82,803	24·3

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support deductions are currently being made, in Scotland for (a) poll tax arrears, (b) social fund loan payments, (c) fuel payment arrears and (d) any other purposes; and what proportion of income support claimants are having such deductions made from benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available information is shown in the tables. The number of income support customers having one or more deductions made from their benefit is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Table 1
Deductions from income support
(Social fund loan repayments, community charge, accommodation and fuel charges)

Purpose	Number of deductions [1]
Community charge arrears	17,556
Social fund loan repayments	86,663
Fuel	59,128[2]
Other purposes	9,739

[1] Number at 30 November 1990 derived from the Department's management information system which, with the exception of social fund loan repayments, is obtained from a quarterly count of deductions in action. Data on social fund loan repayments are collected monthly.
[2] Some deductions for fuel charges cover current consumption costs only because the arrears have been cleared. It is not possible to identify only those cases with continuing arrears.

Table 2
Recovery of overpaid benefit, voluntary unemployment deductions

Purpose	Number of deductions
Recovery of overpaid benefit	10,288
Voluntary unemployment deductions	3,590

Note
The information is not collected routinely and derives from table 10 of the annual statistical inquiry in May 1989, a copy of which is in the Library.

Social Fund

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases each year, including the current year to the latest convenient date, since the social fund was introduced, the Social Fund Commissioner has referred appeals back to the local offices in Scotland; and in how many such cases the local office has then (a) approved and (b) refused payment.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91[1]
Cases referred back by social fund inspectors to Scottish social fund offices for redetermination	213	582	713
Cases in which no payment was made as a result of redetermination	100	361	429

[1] April to December

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy for applications for attendance allowance to be dealt with directly by Department of Social Security staff at local and regional level instead of through his Department's offices in Blackpool.

Mr. Scott: Claimants currently send attendance allowance—AA—claim forms to nine regional centres where initial processing is done. Claims are passed to the attendance allowance unit in Blackpool for award and payment. After the introduction of disability living allowance, DLA and AA claim forms will be sent to regions boths for processing and award, but, for AA only, payments and notifications will be issued from the AA unit in Blackpool. DLA initial awards will be paid from the appropriate regional centre. These arrangements will be reviewed in the light of experience.

All renewal claims and reviews for DLA and AA will be dealt with centrally at the AA and DLA units in Blackpool.

Claimants will be able to obtain general information about DLA and AA from the benefits inquiry line or their local benefit offices. The new DLA computer system will enable the unit's staff to give prompt details about individual claims from telephone inquiries.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth will receive a response to his letter of 9 November 1990 referring to Mrs. R. Tunnicliffe.

Mr. Jack: I replied to my hon. Friend on 17 January.

Community Care

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action his Department is taking to follow up recommendation 25 of the fifth report 1989-90 of the Social Services Select Committee, "Community Care: Carers."

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's response to recommendation 25 of the fifth report of the Social Services Select Committee published in the Government's "Plans for the Future of Community Care"— CM 1343 at page 17.

Residential Homes

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will separately list for each of the last 10 years the sums of money paid by his Department to private and publicly owned residential homes for the elderly in support of their occupants.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department does not pay money to private or publicly owned residential homes for the elderly in support of their occupants.

The Department has paid the following amounts of income support or supplementary benefit to claimants in residential care homes.

Year	Annual expenditure (nearest £ million)
1981	23
1982	39
1983	104
1984	200
1985	259
1986	328
1988	556
1990	740

Notes:
1. The figures before 1985 include claimants in nursing homes.
2. Figures are not sufficiently reliable for the totals to be subdivided into elderly residents and others.

Information regarding amounts paid to people in publicly owned homes—part III—is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Income Support

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are now in receipt of income support, paid to them for the purpose of sustaining mortgage repayments.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table.

Income support claimants with mortgage interest included in assessment

Year	Total
1989	281,000

Source: Annual statistical inquiry.
Note: Figures rounded to the nearest thousand.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total sum paid by his Department in 1990, and each of the preceding five years, to assist claimants with mortgage repayments.

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates of figures are given in the table.

Annual equivalent mortgage interest included in assessment of income support

Year	Total £ million
1989	355
1988	285
1987	335
1986	350
1984	220

Note: No annual statistical inquiry was undertaken in 1985; data for 1983 are not available. Figures for 1990 are not yet available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the highest sum, known to his Department, paid per week to assist any individual claimant with mortgage repayments.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is not routinely collected. The 10 highest amounts added in the assessment of income support for mortgage interest identified by a 1 per cent. sample of cases are listed in the table in descending order:

[redacted]	Weekly amount (£)

Disabled People

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions his Department has had with organisations representing disabled people and carers concerning the impact of the community charge on disabled people and their carers.

Miss Widdecombe: We keep in close touch with representatives of disabled people and their carers about all social security issues. Additional help is focused on disabled people and their carers through the special premiums in the income-related benefit schemes, including community charge benefit.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will increase the Christmas bonus to pensioners for Christmas 1991 to reflect the movement in the retail prices index since 1972.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so.

Community Charge Benefit

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received concerning the impact of the community charge on disabled people and their carers.

Miss Widdecombe: Since April 1990, the Department has received over 3,000 items of correspondence about the community charge benefit scheme: it is not possible to identify the number relating particularly to the impact of the community charge on disabled people and their carers.

Benefits

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost in 1991-92 of raising income support, community charge benefit and housing benefit personal allowances for people under 25 years to the level for those 25 years and over.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is not available, but I shall write to the hon. Member when it is.

Residential and Nursing Home Care

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to increase the limits paid for residential and nursing home care; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the uprating statement my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State made to the House on 24 October 1990 at columns 351-52.

Pensioners (Income)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the number of pensioners in the United Kingdom who have an income of up to (a) £5,000 annually, (b) £4,500, (c) £4,000 and (d) the number under this figure and the total percentage of pensioners whose income does not exceed £5,000 a year.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 6 December 1990: In 1987, The latest year for which analyses are available, the number of pensioner family units where the total net income was below the specified levels is estimated to be:

	Single pensioner	Pensioner couples
(a) below £5,000 per annum	3·8 million	0·8 million
(b) below £4,500 per annum	3·6 million	0·5 million
(c) below £4,000 per annum	3·4 million	0·2 million

The total number of pensioner units in the United Kingdom is estimated to be:

	Million
Single pensioners	4·4
Pensioner couples	2·5
Total	6·9

Note: The estimates are based on the net income of benefit units before housing costs. No account has been taken of the size of the family unit, nor of any income received by those living in separate benefit units in the same household.

The total percentage of pensioner units whose income does not exceed £5,000 a year is around 67 per cent.

Low Incomes

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the number of adult people in the United Kingdom who have an annual income of up to (a) £5,000, (b) £4,500 and (c) £4,000.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 6 December 1990]: In 1987, the latest year for which analyses are available, the number of family units where the total net income was below the specified levels is estimated to be:

	Single adults million	Couples million
(a) below £5,000 per annum	10·9	1·8
(b) below £4,500 per annum	10·0	1·2
(c) below £4,000 per annum	8·7	0·7

Note: The estimates are based on the net income of benefit units before housing costs. No account has been taken of the size of the family unit, nor of any income received by those living in separate benefit units in the same household.

Incomes

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to make a substantial reply to the priority written questions of the hon. Member for Walsall, North of 6 December about pensioner and other adult incomes.

Mr. Jack: I have replied to the hon. Member today.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the tables in the OPCS reports which indicate that people who need special diets will be likely to qualify for the lower care component of the disability living allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 20 December 1990]: The estimates of the eligible populations for the new components of the disability living allowance were derived from a detailed secondary analysis of the OPCS survey data; the eligible groups cannot be identified from the tables published in the OPCS reports. Our estimates do, however, suggest that around a quarter of those expected to qualify for the lower rate of the self-care component —some 60,000 people in all—need a special diet.

EMPLOYMENT

Sheltered Employment

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new money will be made available for the sheltered employment budget in the next year; and what was the number of (a) permits issued to employers, (b) inspections carried out by his Department under the quota scheme in each of the last five years, and (c) attempts to prosecute for failure to meet the quota, since 1960.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The 1990 public expenditure survey provides an additional £4·6 million for 1991-92 for the sheltered employment programme compared with the corresponding provision in last year's plans. With regard to the quota scheme:

(a) my Department does not keep information in the form requested. However, the number of employers issued with permits during the 12-month period ending 1 June was:

	Employers
1990	18,036
1989	18,530
1988	18,594
1987	18,577
1986	18,840

(b) The number of quota inspections carried out during the 12-month period ending in April was:

	Number
1990	1,903
1989	2,050
1988	2,273
1986	2,360

(c) There have been six prosecutions for failure to meet quota since 1960: three in 1975 and one each in 1964, 1973 and 1974.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of unemployed claimants are dealt with by a caseload approach.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of clients on employment training referred to training managers are not accepted and are referred back to training agents.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of current employment training trainees in training are on employer placements.

Mr. Jackson: It is estimated that at 30 September 1990, the latest date for which information is available, about 25 per cent. of trainees were on practical training placements with employers.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being taken to improve the quality of provision of training agents on employment training; and whether any extra resources are being provided for this.

Mr. Jackson: Training agents which contract direct with my Department are required to meet the exacting and stringent standards of the approved training organisation (ATO) criteria. I am satisfied that the resources provided are sufficient to meet these quality standards.

Training agents who contract with a training and enterprise council are required to meet the standards which the TEC sets out in its quality management strategy which are no less stringent than those of the approved training organisation criteria. The quality management strategy is an integral part of the training and enterprise council's corporate and business plans which are agreed with my Department and form the foundation of the contractual arrangements between the training and enterprise council and my Department. Training and enterprise council's also determine what resources are needed to maintain standards and provide value for money.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the percentage of training and enterprise council staff who were formerly civil servants.

Mr. Jackson: A total of 46 training and enterprise councils were operational at 14 January 1991. The number of staff who have resigned from the civil service to take up direct employment with their training and enterprise councils is four (0·2 per cent.). This compares with 2,455 (94 per cent.) seconded civil servants who are working for these training and enterprise councils.

Unskilled Workers

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the industrial work force is unskilled.

Mr. Jackson: Estimates from the 1989 labour force survey indicate that 5·2 per cent. of all people in employment in Great Britain were in unskilled occupations.

Mentally Ill People

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many mentally ill people are (a) unemployed, (b) in part-time employment and (c) in full-time employment, by sector.

Mr. Jackson: Information is not available in the form requested. A report of research commissioned by my Department's Employment Service and undertaken by Social and Community Planning Research contains some information on mentally ill people who are in employment or want work. A copy of the report, "Employment and Handicap", is in the Library.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement regarding his Department's policy on training and promotion of employment for the mentally ill.

Mr. Jackson: My Department provides a service for all people with disabilities treating each as an individual and identifying the most appropriate action. People who are mentally ill can use the full range of Employment Department services available to anyone with a disability who is capable of employment. The consultative document, "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities", contains proposals and intentions to improve the effectiveness of these services.

My Department seeks to encourage employers to adopt and implement good policies and practices in the employment of people with disabilities. Through means such as the "Code of Good Practice on the Employment of Disabled People" and our two videos, "It Can Be Done" and "It Worked Fine", which are promoted to employers by the Disablement Advisory Service, we offer employers advice and guidance on employing all people with disabilities, including those who are mentally ill. In October 1990 my right hon. and learned Friend launched a new symbol which can be used by employers to show publicly that they are committed to good practices and to encourage people with disabilities in seeking and keeping employment. In addition, my Department has, in conjunction with the National Association for Mental Health (MIND), prepared a leaflet for employers advising how people with mental illness can be successfully integrated into the work force.

Employment opportunities for people with severe mental health problems are provided under my Department's sheltered employment programme and the Employment Service's employment rehabilitation network already includes a number of agencies which specialise in mental health.

In training, our objective is to encourage integrated provision where this is possible, but we also recognise that sometimes very particular expertise is necessary to make training a success.

That is why my Department, with the help of specialist organisations, has produced a guide for training people with disabilities which includes specific advice on the needs of people with mental health problems and how to respond to them. We have also sponsored a number of projects aimed at creating or enhancing training and assessment facilities at the local level. The job of further developing this provision is now primarily the responsibility of training and enterprise councils.

Job Clubs

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of participants in the past 12 months left job clubs without a positive outcome.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Tourists

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to improve the quality of welcome to incoming tourists at airports and seaports.

Mr. Forth: The British Tourist Authority is pursuing the recommendations made in a recent study by Countess Spencer of the reception facilities at ports of entry.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what percentage of employed workers were employed in the service sector in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989 in the United Kingdom, France and the Federal Republic of Germany;

(2) what percentage of employed workers are employed in manufacturing industries in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989 in the United Kingdom, France and the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Jackson: The available information is shown in the table.

WALES

Water Quality

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has plans to improve the quality of Welsh water.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next proposes to meet the chairman of Welsh Water plc to discuss its targets for capital expenditure and compliance with statutory environmental limits.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Department is regularly in touch with Welsh Water plc on a wide range of matters including its performance, and my right hon. Friend will certainly discuss these issues at any meeting with the company.

Community Charge

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met leaders of local authorities in Wales to dicuss the community charge.

Mr. David Hunt: I met the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance, together with representatives of individual authorities on 7 January, for a very useful discussion on the finance, structure and functions of Welsh local government.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the present number of unemployed males and females and the numbers recorded in May 1979; and what are his plans to reduce the figures.

Mr. David Hunt: In May 1979, on a seasonally adjusted basis, there were 49,800 male and 19,000 female unemployed claimants in Wales. In December 1990, these figures were 73,100 and 21,100 respectively. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which my hon. Friend the Minister of State gave to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) about the Government's plans to ameliorate the situation.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest number of people out of work (a) in the Merthyr and Rhymney constituency and (b) in Wales; and what action he proposes to create new job opportunities for those unemployed.

Mr. David Hunt: In December 1990, there were 3,360 and 95,662 unemployed claimants in the Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney constituency and Wales respectively. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which my hon. Friend the Minister of State gave to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) about the Government's plans to ameliorate the situation.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many men and women, full-time and part-time, were in employment in June 1979 at the latest date for which figures are available in (a) Wales and (b) Mid Glamorgan.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest available figures show that there are more people in employment in Wales than ever before with a record 1,239,000 civilian work force in employment. In June 1979, there were 618,000, 250,000 and 165,000 male, full-time female and part-time female employees respectively in employment in Wales. A breakdown of numbers of full-time and part-time males is not available. By September 1990, totals were 525,000, 279,000 and 206,000 respectively. County data are not available for the period requested.

Unemployment

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency to discuss future levels of unemployment in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have regular discussions with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency about a range of matters concerning the development of the Welsh economy.

Eye Tests

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the (a) percentage fall and (b) fall in actual numbers of eye tests carried out under the NHS in Wales in the year following the introduction of charges for such tests over the previous year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information is not available in the form requested. Statistics are available only in respect of sight tests for which no charge is made to the patient.

Hospital Incinerators

20. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are to be taken to eradicate harmful emissions from the chimneys of hospital incinerators in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Hospital incinerators currently in operation in Wales will lose Crown immunity from 1 April 1991, and will be subject to local authority control under the arrangements to be introduced by the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Family Farms

21. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy for the future of family farms in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I recognise the importance of family farms within the structure of agriculture in Wales and their significance in social terms. I will continue to seek to ensure that these farms, along with others, are able to compete effectively and on equal terms within the single European market.

Brussels Office

22. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to establish a permanent Welsh office base in Brussels.

Mr. David Hunt: No. The Welsh Office is already in close and sustained contact with the European Commission and with the office of the United Kingdom permanent representation in Brussels, which represents the interest of all Government Departments. The present arrangements work well and are the most cost-effective means of representing Welsh interests in the Community.

Economy

23. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on prospects for the Welsh economy during 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: The progress of the Welsh economy in 1991 will be affected by world and United Kingdom conditions, which may lead to a fall in output and a rise in unemployment during the early part of the year. But this will be accompanied by a sharp fall in inflation and the successes of recent years mean that Wales is far better placed to cope with temporary difficulties and resume the growth path later in the year.

Local Government

24. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will undertake a review of the structure of local government in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes, I am.

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Mr. David Hunt: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and would therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures. These measures are kept under review.

Historic Monuments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will update the figures in his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 9 February 1990, Official Report, columns 809-10, concerning CADW, providing the outturn for 1989-90 and the latest estimates for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is in the table:

	1989-90 outturn	1990-91 estimate	1991-92 estimate[1]
Historic buildings grants	2,779	3,138	3,027
Ancient monuments grants:
Grants to owners	169	250	275
Grants to archaeological trusts	633	715	730
Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments (Wales)	810	830	900
Civic Trust for Wales	25	25	25

[1]The provision for 1991-92 is subject to Treasury and Parliamentary approval.

Polytechnic of Wales

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce any changes in the structure of the Polytechnic of Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We expect to announce our decision on the recommendations of the Price Waterhouse report concerning the future status of the Polytechnic of Wales in the near future.

Community Charge Registers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the estimated cost for each change in poll tax registers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many changes there have been to poll tax registers in Wales as a result of population movement;

(3) if he will list in order the number of districts and boroughs in which there have been changes in poll tax registers;

(4) how much it costs to keep poll tax registers up to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The table shows the entries recorded by each authority in respect of the community charge register as at 1 December 1989 and as at 15 November 1990. These show the overall changes to the register rather than the number of changes there have been to community charge registers in Wales as a result of population movement.

The estimated cost for each change and the costs of updating the community charge register are not held centrally.

Total entries on the community charge register[1]

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1990 reported by the National Museum of Wales, including its outstations, with the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1989.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A total of 672,064 people visited the National Museum of Wales during 1990, an increase of 39 per cent. on the attendance reported for 1989.

Education and Training

Mr. Denzilk Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in the latest available year how many 16 to 18-year-olds in Wales participated in full-time education and training.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There were 68,885 16 to 18-year-olds in full-time education and training in the 1989-90 academic year.

Mathematics

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in the latest available year what percentage of all school children taking GCSE in Wales sat the examination in mathematics; and what percentage of those sitting the examination in mathematics obtained grades of C and above.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In the summer examinations of 1990, a total of 81 per cent. of Welsh Joint Education Committee GCSE candidates sat an examination in mathematics at centres in schools. Of these, 38·4 per cent. achieved grades A to C.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in the latest available year, what percentage of pupils taking the A-level examinations in Wales took the examination in mathematics.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In the summer examinations of 1990, a total of 26·2 per cent. of candidates sitting Welsh Joint Education Committee A-level examinations at centres in schools sat an examination in mathematics.

National Health Service

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all documents of advice or guidance, all consultative documents, all circulars and all other publications produced by his Department since 1 April 1990 in respect of (a) the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Act, (b) the implementation of other aspects of Government policy towards the national health service and (c) any other matters relating to the health service in Wales; and if he will also list any such documents produced jointly with other Departments and any such documents which have been produced by other Government Departments, but which have any application to Wales, during the same period.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the comprehensive list of working papers and associated material pursuant to the NHS and Community Care Act 1990, which is updated quarterly and placed in the Vote Office and Libraries. The further information could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

Welshpool Bypass

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the Welshpool bypass to be (a) started and (b) completed; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Start of work on the Welshpool scheme has been delayed by statutory procedures. Information on the timing of this scheme will be included in the Welsh Office departmental report and the supplement to "Roads in Wales" to be published shortly.

Newtown Bypass

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals for the construction of a Newtown bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have carried out a study of traffic in the Newtown area and the information obtained will be carefully considered to assess the need for a bypass.

Countess of Chester Hospital

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of patients from north Wales who used the Countess of Chester hospital annually for (a) surgery and (b) physiotherapy.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: A total of 5,834 episodes of in-patient and day case care were received by residents from Clwyd and Gwynedd in the Countess of Chester hospital in 1989-90. Information on whether or not these episodes involved surgery is not held centrally. Information on the number attending that hospital for physiotherapy is not available.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what body will be responsible for the purchase of health services for the people of Pembrokeshire if the Pembrokeshire district health authority is turned into a national health service trust.

Mr. David Hunt: This will be for consideration if Pembrokeshire health authority decides to submit an application to form a Pembrokeshire health service trust.

Travel Concessions

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether he will establish a scheme in Wales of assistance for retirement pensioners to travel free on road and rail transport at off-peak hours;

(2) whether he will establish a scheme in Wales of assistance for retirement pensioners to travel at concessionary rates of 75 per cent. or 66 per cent. on road and rail transport in off-peak hours.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have no plans to change the present arrangements. Local authorities already have adequate powers to provide travel concessions in their areas and most local authorities in Wales operate concessionary fares schemes for travel on local public transport. Both British Rail and the main long-distance coach operators have their own travel concession arrangements.

Leukaemia Patients

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make extra financial provision available to consultants at the bone marrow transplant unit at the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff, to fund the prescription of the drug Alpha Interferon to leukaemia patients.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: South Glamorgan health authority is already appropriately funded for the cost of drugs for the approved regional bone marrow transplant programme.

Jobs

Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had during the past two months with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency about the provision of new jobs for the safeguarding of existing jobs in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have regular discussions with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency about a range of matters concerning the development of the Welsh economy.

HEALTH

Abortions

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures he has received for abortions as a percentage of all conceptions (a) in England and Wales, (b) for each Thames regional health authority and (c) for each London district health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest available information, for 1988, is shown in the table. The figures show the proportion of conceptions terminated by abortion under the 1967 Abortion Act; those which led to an illegal or a spontaneous abortion are excluded. Figures for district health authorities are not available centrally.

Percentage of conceptions terminated by abortion under the 1967 Abortion Act

Area of usual residence of women	Number
England and Wales	19·7
Regional Health Authorities
North West Thames	25·8
North East Thames	27·5
South East Thames	24·4
South West Thames	23·0

Health Expenditure

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide (a) the total gross allocation to England for health expenditure in the year 1991-92, (b) a breakdown of the revenue and capital allocation components of the total gross allocation and (c) a breakdown of the total gross allocation, and the revenue and capital allocation components of it, for each of the English regional health authorities.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is not yet available in the form requested. The table sets out the main revenue and capital allocations to regional health authorities for 1991-92.

£ millions

Region	Revenue allocation	Capital allocation	Total allocation
Northern	985·3	76·5	1,061·8
Yorkshire	1,121·0	89·1	1,210·1
Trent	1,406·5	112·3	1,518·8
East Anglian	595·7	49·1	644·9
North West Thames	1,097·2	75·7	1,172·9
North East Thames	1,295·5	86·2	1,381·7
South East Thames	1,221·2	89·0	1,310·2
South West Thames	946·8	69·4	1,016·2
Wessex	872·1	73·9	946·0
Oxford	675·4	55·0	730·4
South Western	1,000·0	81·6	1,081·6
West Midlands	1,566·8	131·4	1,698·2
Mersey	775·2	60·0	835·2
North Western	1,295·0	104·1	1,399·1
All RHAs	14,853·7	1,153·5	16,007·2

Notes:
1. Totals may not add due to rounding.
2. The table shows allocations for resident populations and excludes allocations for special purposes, some which will be made later.
3. An adjustment will be made to regions' capital allocation in respect of the NHS trust programme.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the average waiting period for women being screened for breast cancer and the average period of time for the results to be made known in (a) Sunderland, (b) Durham and (c) Hartlepool.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairmen of the health authorities concerned.

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by his civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Mr. Dorrell: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures. These measures are kept under review.

National Health Service Laundries

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will request the Audit Commission to carry out a study of the true costs of laundry services provided by national health service laundries.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We will bear the suggestion in mind in discussions with the Audit Commission on its future programme.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what savings his Department would make were no notice given of oral questions to Ministers and they were answered without civil service time being used on briefings.

Mr. Dorrell: No savings would be made and costs would almost certainly increase significantly. If the oral question is known in advance briefing can be tightly focused, thus avoiding the cost of producing a detailed brief, covering all subjects that could possibly arise.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average length of time taken and the average cost involved of officials' time in his Department preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions.

Mr. Dorrell: the time taken in preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions is not routinely recorded in the Department of Health. Estimates are made where there is a likelihood of exceeding the disproportionate cost threshold (currently £250). Following an inter-departmental exercise in 1972, an assessment was made of the average cost throughout all Departments of answering an oral question. This assessment was based on staff time, using average rates of pay and associated costs for the grades concerned, together with a share of the costs of parliamentary sections and any substantial non-staff costs. This figure is regularly updated and currently stands at £99.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for any variation in the designation or standards relating to Orcon levels of response for ambulance services.

Mr. Dorrell: Response times have always been recommended rather than mandatory and will remain so. The management executive recently issued a guide to good practice in the ambulance service which included a re-classification of services which are now termed urban or rural dependent upon population density. New emergency response standards for urban services have been slightly relaxed in recognition of increased traffic density; standards for rural services have been slightly tightened because of improved road networks. Non-emergency transport standards are now for local discretion based on the requirements of clinicians and unit managers. The guide to good practice is available in the Library.

Environmental Health Officers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many environmental health officers are currently in post; what is his estimate of the cost; how many additional environmental health officers he estimates will be required to implement the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations 1991; and what is the estimated additional cost;

(2) how environmental health officers were consulted before the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations were drafted; and what responses were received;

(3) how the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations will be enforced; and what is his estimate of the cost to central and local government.

Mr. Dorrell: Information on numbers of environmental health officers in post is not collected centrally. It is for local authorities to consider how best to deploy their resources to enforce food safety requirements. In doing so they will take into account priority areas of concern. No funds have been made available centrally specifically for the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations 1990. The Government have made available to local authorities £30 million for extra enforcement responsibilities placed on them under the Food Safety Act 1990 dealing with improvements in food safety generally.

A draft of the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations 1990 was issued for consultation in July 1989 to a wide range of organisations including local authorities. Many comments were received on various aspects of the regulations, including their enforcement. The regulations were made in July 1990.

Guidelines on how the regulations affect industry and on how they will be enforced have also been widely consulted upon and will be issued in final form very shortly.

Smoked Meat and Fish

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the definitive draft of the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations will be available; and when guidelines for the smoked meat and fish industry will be issued.

Mr. Dorrell: The regulations were made on 16 July 1990 and laid before Parliament on 18 July 1990. They come into force in stages from 1 April 1991. Copies are available in the Library.

A consultation exercise on guidelines describing the implications of the regulations for all sectors of industry and for enforcement officers has just been completed. Final guidelines will be issued very shortly.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many cases of food poisoning have been traced to smoked salmon in the past three years; and in how many cases had the smoked salmon been delivered by post;

(2) how far negotiations concerning the implementation of the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations have progressed with the smoked meat and fish industry; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many cases of food poisoning have been traced to smoked meat and fish delivered by post in the last five years;

(4) how many cases of food poisoning have been traced to smoked meat and fish in the last three years.

Mr. Dorrell: Most cases of food poisoning are sporadic and it is not usually possible to identify a vehicle of infection for a specific case. Routine statistics on sporadic cases are therefore unhelpful in identifying particular foods as vehicles of infection—whether they have been in the post or not.

The Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations 1990 introduce temperature controls for foods which should be kept chilled because they may contain pathogenic micro-organisms which, if not controlled by chilling, can grow rapidly and become a threat to health.

Research is taking place to see how the mail order trade, including smoked fish, can best adapt to the new regulations and we expect to be in a position to consider results with colleagues in MAFF, Scottish Office and the Welsh Office shortly.

Population Statistics

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimate of the population of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest estimate of resident population in the United Kingdom (relating to mid 1989) is 57·2 millions.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the projections, by percentage, of the population of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the years (i) 2000, (ii) 2010 and (iii) 2020 for those (a) aged 101 or over, (b) aged between 91 and 100 years, (c) aged between 81 and 90 years, (d) aged between 71 and 80 years and (e) aged between 61 and 70 years.

Mr. Dorrell: The available information based on the 1989-based projections of resident population produced by the Government Actuary's Department is as follows:

Age last birthday	Percentage of projected United Kingdom population in the year
	2000	2010	2020
61 to 70	9·0	10·5	10·8
71 to 80	7·0	6·6	7·9
81 to 89	2·8	3·2	3·2
90 and over	0·6	0·7	0·8

Population figures for the United Kingdom cannot be reliably projected by single years of age beyond the age of 90.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the total population of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland is (a) aged 101 years and over, (b) aged between 91 and 100 years, (c) aged between 81 and 90 years, (d) aged between 71 and 80 years and (e) aged between 61 and 70 years.

Mr. Dorrell: The information available, based upon mid 1989 estimates of resident population, is as follows:

Age	Percentage of total resident United Kingdom population
61 to 70	9·9
71 to 80	6·7
81 to 89	2·7
90+	0·4

Population figures by single year of age cannot be estimated reliably above the age of 90.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the district health authorities in England which have expressed an interest in opting out to become a national health service trust on an all-authority basis and indicate which of these he is allowing to proceed into the process of public consultation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has agreed that 123 hospitals and other units can proceed to work up applications to become trusts on 1 April 1992. These expressions of interest will only proceed to public consultation if a formal application for trust status is submitted. Of these expressions of interest, 12 provide all the services currently managed within their respective health authorities. They are;

Darlington health services.
North Tees acute and community services.
North West Durham hospital and community services.
Airedale Health Services.
Harrogate Health Services.
Northallerton Health Services.
Scarborough Health Services.
East Hertfordshire Acute, Priority and Community Services.
Hastings Provider Services.
Wycombe Health Services.
Oldham Acute and Community Services.
Rochdale Acute and Community Services.

St. Paul's Hospital, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ophthalmic cases have been dealt with at St. Paul's eye hospital, Liverpool, over the past decade; from what radius they are drawn; what are the annual running costs of the hospital; and if he will make a statement on the future of the hospital.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not hold this information centrally. The Liverpool health authority is at present consulting on the proposed closure of the hospital and the future provision of eye services in Liverpool. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Michael Emberton, the authority chairman, for details.

Social Work

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to increase recruitment of social workers and to promote social work as a career; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The primary responsibility for ensuring an adequate, suitably trained work force rests with employers. There is no legislative basis for ministerial involvement in a recruitment campaign for social workers, where the major employers are local authorities. However, the Department has taken steps to assist interested parties to develop better work force analysis systems and, following a meeting with the Association of Directors of Social Services last year, the Department will be funding a one day seminar this spring to bring together all those with work force interests, to identify key issues and discuss future action.

GPs (Home Visits)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what right an NHS patient has to seek a home visit by their general practitioner; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Where, in a GP's clinical judgement, a patient's condition is such that a home visit is needed then the GP is required to make such a visit under the terms of service.

Since 1 April 1990, a GP visiting his or her patient between the hours of 10 pm and 8 am may claim a fee of some £45. If such a visit is delegated by the GP to a deputy then £15 may be claimed.

GPs, Barnsley

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the practices covered by the Barnsley family practitioner committee have met the general practitioners' new contract for (a) cervical cytology and (b) child immunisation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 30 September 1990, 100 per cent. of the GPs, and therefore all of the practices, covered by Barnsley family health services authority qualified for either a higher or lower target payment in respect of both cervical cytology and childhood immunisation. My congratulations to all concerned for this excellent achievement.

Eyesight Tests

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the impact of charging for eyesight tests in Trent regional health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of national health service sight tests paid for in 1988-89 and 1989-90 by family health services authorities in Trent regional health authority was as follows:

NHS sight tests
1988-89: 1,166,700
1989-90 (after entitlement was restricted to certain groups): 514,960

After 1 April 1989, many patients in Trent, as elsewhere, will have had a private eye examination.

Departmental statistics are not kept on private sight tests. An independent NOP survey commissioned by the Department indicated that the national total number of sight tests (private and national health service) during the first quarter of 1990 was at the level that would have been expected if trends up to 1987 had been projected forwards.

Residential Homes

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many aged people were living in residential homes in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows the number of residents aged 65 and over in local authority and registered homes for elderly and for younger physically handicapped people as at 31 March.

SCOTLAND

Smoked Fish

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the results of research into the processing of smoked fish and how the industry might comply with the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations affecting the sending of smoked salmon and trout through the post; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The results of research commissioned by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are expected shortly. Together with colleagues in MAFF and the Department of Health, we shall consider the results and any implications for the food hygiene regulations.

Civil Penalties

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the number of civil penalties imposed during the last year for which figures are available by each assessor in Scotland in respect of non-return of land valuation schedules prior to the abolition of the domestic rating system.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Assessors have no powers to impose civil penalties in these situations. Any person failing to furnish a return to the assessor is liable to a penalty not exceeding £400, following prosecution at the instance of the procurator fiscal. Information on the number of such cases is not held centrally.

Health Service

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what communication he has received from Greater Glasgow south-west local health council concerning the local health council scheme submitted to him by Greater Glasgow health board; what consideration he has given to the issues raised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The local health council wrote to me on 20 December asking me to ensure that Greater Glasgow health board was aware of the need for a strong local voice on the NHS. This point is well understood by the board, which has submitted a scheme for restructuring local health councils in their area. This is being considered.

Data Sales

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will describe the circumstances, and the charges involved, when the sale of names and addresses from publicly available community charge information is allowed; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Section 20(6) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 provides that a person shall be entitled to obtain a copy, or a copy certified by or on behalf of the community charges registration officer, of any entry in the register which he is entitled to inspect. A fee of £1 per register entry is prescribed for this purpose.

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by his civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Mr. Lang: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures.

These measures are kept under review.

Physiotherapy

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the number of whole-time equivalent physiotherapists under contract to each of the health board areas in Scotland shown as a rate per 100,000 head of population.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is shown in the table:

Physiotherapists in post by health board; whole time equivalent as at 30 September 1990 (provisional)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the number of whole-time equivalent physiotherapy aides under contract to the Borders health board for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Rural Health Boards

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance is planned to enable health boards in rural areas of Scotland to provide adequate levels of service in all medical areas covered by the professions allied to medicine.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A manpower steering group for the professions allied to medicine was established in June 1990 with the task of advising on the development of manpower planning at local level and at national level for the professions allied to medicine.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the number of whole-time equivalent professionally qualified physiotherapists under contract to the Borders health board for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Education and Training

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in the latest available year, how many 16 to 18-year-olds participated in full-time education and training.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There were 76,100 16 to 18-year-olds in full-time education and 42,600 on the youth training scheme in Scotland in 1989.

Mentally Handicapped People

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to amend the statutory notes within the Community Charges (Registration) (Scotland) (No. 2) Regulations 1988 (S.I. 1988, No. 1539) to give effect to the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, which extended exemption from the community charge to those who are severely mentally impaired by reason of degenerative conditions.

Mr. Allan Stewart: These notes are amended by the Community Charges (Registration) (Scotland) (No. 2) Amendment Regulations 1991 which were made on 14 January and which will be laid before Parliament on 28 January. The notes have no bearing upon the operation of the changes to the arrangements for exempting the severely mentally impaired which came into force on 29 December 1989 with backdated effect, by virtue of the Personal Community Charge (Exemption for the Severely Mentally Impaired) (Scotland) Regulations 1989.

Scotland Europa Ltd.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what public relations advisers and management consultants are retained by his office in relation to Scotland Europa Ltd.; what fees they are paid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No public relations advisers or management consultants are retained by the Scottish Office in relation to Scotland Europa.

Destiny

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to examine the question of safety and implement any recommendations arising from the inquiry into the Destiny disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Sheriff's determination following a fatal accident inquiry into the drowning accident involving the Destiny on 16 December 1989 was issued on 14 November 1990. A report by the Department of Transport marine accident investigation branch has also been prepared and a summary of that report will be published shortly. The recommendations contained in both reports are being carefully considered by Government Departments with an interest in these matters, including the Scottish Office, although the question of safety at sea is principally a matter for the Department of Transport.

Local Health Councils

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to respond to the revised scheme for the provision of local health councils within the Highland health board area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Schemes for local health councils have been submitted by 12 health boards, including Highland. These are currently being considered.

Access Funds

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the amounts each individual college will receive in access funds under the Education (Further and Higher Education Institutions Access Funds) (Scotland) Regulations 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is set out in the table and relates to Session 1990-91. Colleges in the grant-aided and further education sectors are listed separately.

SCOTLAND

Erythropoietin

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that prescriptions for erythropoietin are not affected by any health board overspend on their drug budgets.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 January 1991]: Health boards are responsible for ensuring that patients receive proper and sufficient treatment according to clinical judgment and hospital funding is formulated taking into account the cost of providing drugs. There are therefore no financial reasons why Erythropoietin cannot be prescribed.

Foresterhill Hospital

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made towards the provision of an additional intensive therapy unit facility and additional operating theatre at the Foresterhill hospital's unit in Aberdeen.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 January 1991]: Grampian health board is currently progressing a scheme to replace its existing theatres and intensive therapy facilities with a modern seven-theatre complex at Foresterhill.

Sub-Standard Housing

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to assist district council tenants and former district council tenants now owner-occupiers who are unable to buy, or sell, their homes because they have been classified by building societies as being sub-standard; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1991]: The Government make available resources to local authorities to assist private owners of houses designated as defective under part XIV of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 as amended by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 and sold by a public sector authority before a cut-off date specified in the designation. Assistance is available towards the repair, demolition and rebuilding, or repurchase by the local authority of the defective house in these cases.

As regards other houses, council tenants who wish to purchase their houses should satisfy themselves in the first instance that the risks they are taking are acceptable, seeking professional advice if necessary. It is for building societies or other financial institutions advancing loans towards the purchase of properties to make decisions on whether to provide finance for any purchase and it would not be appropriate for the Government to intervene in such decisions.

The Government also make substantial resources available to local authorities for them to provide grants for the improvement and repair of private housing. The provisional allocations to local authorities for the non-housing revenue account block in 1991-92 announced on 20 December total over £105 million.

Breast Cancer

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list all the hospitals in Scotland which provide full facilities for the screening of breast cancer and the total number of patients screened for each year since 1979;

(2) what proportion of health service funds were spent on providing facilities for breast cancer screening for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 January 1991]: Facilities for screening are not provided in hospitals but by a mix of seven static screening and assessment units and nine mobile screening units. The assessment units take the women who have been found to have a positive basic screen to the point of diagnosis. When a diagnosis demonstrates that treatment is required, the patient is referred to the hospital which has the most appropriate facilities for this treatment.

The total number of patients screened since the establishment of the breast screening service is as follows:

	Number
1987-88	297
1988-89	3,953
1989-90	45,153

The Government have provided both revenue and capital funds centrally to establish the breast cancer screening service, as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	0·5
1988-89	1·6
1989-90	4·7
1990-91	3·5

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of local authority expenditure (a) as a whole and (b) on housing is (i) paid for by central Government and (ii) paid for by local government.

Mr. Key: In 1990-91 central Government support for local authorities (including that from the non-domestic ratepayer and credit approvals) is estimated to be 80 per cent. and self financed expenditure (less debt interest payment) is estimated to be 20 per cent. of the local authority component of general Government expenditure (less debt interest payment) in England.

The Government's planned resource provision for local authority capital spending on housing in England in 1991-92 is £1·9 billion. This represents about 64 per cent. of the capital expenditure which local authorities could finance from a combination of this provision and their own resources. Local authorities also receive subsidy to cover the shortfall assumed to arise in their housing revenue account if they adhere to the Government's rent and management and maintenance guidelines. Provision of £3·5 billion has been made for this purpose on 1991-92, which represents about 44 per cent. of local authorities housing revenue account expenditure. The balance is financed by income from rents.

Refuse-derived Fuel

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how his Department defines (a) small, (b) medium and (c) large-scale users of refuse-derived fuel in terms of tonnes used per annum; and if he will outline the way in which derogation arrangements will affect each, over the coming years;

(2) if he will make a statement on the derogation arrangements that will apply for those industries proposing to use recycled, refined, refuse-derived fuel;

(3) if he will outline the derogation arrangements for refuse-derived fuel use over the next five years.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on derogation arrangements governing the use and development of refuse-derived fuels (RDF).

Mr. Baldry: The Department is preparing regulations to implement the EC directive on municipal waste incineration. The power to derogate for plant burning RDF will be included in these regulations, and the regulations will be subject to consultation.

Under the Environmental Protection Act it is proposed that Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will be responsible for the integrated pollution control of plants burning refuse derived fuel (RDF). In line with a commitment during the Committee stage of the Environmental Protection Bill, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is now drafting guidance specific to the burning of RDF including questions of derogation and plant size. Guidance will be published well in advance of existing RDF burning plant coming under control. The industry will be fully consulted in the production of this guidance.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken concerning discharge of the responsibilities of the chief executive of the London Docklands Development Corporation; what remit has been given to any persons concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Staffing matters are for the corporation, which has appointed the chairman as acting chief executive. My Department has appointed LDDC's director of finance as accounting officer, until the appointment of the new chief executive.

Wheelchair Access

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will set up a capital fund to provide local authorities and other statutory agencies with resources with a view to enabling all major public buildings to be made accessible to people in wheelchairs by 1995;

(2) if he will estimate the capital cost of providing unrestricted wheelchair access to all major public buildings such as libraries, schools and hospitals.

(3) what detailed plans he has to assist local authorities to accelerate their existing programme of work to improve access to public buildings by people in wheelchairs;

(4) what central Government finance is being made available to increase access to public buildings by people in wheelchairs.

Mr. Yeo: I have no plans to set up a capital fund of the kind the hon. Member has in mind. Regardless of financial resources, it is not always practicable, particularly in the case of listed historic buildings, to provide unrestricted wheelchair access to existing public buildings such as libraries, schools and hospitals. Where it is feasible to provide such access the cost will vary according to circumstances, and no realistic estimate of the overall capital cost can be made.

Access for wheelchair users and other people with disabilities to all storeys of new shops and offices and the entrance storeys of other new non-domestic buildings is a requirement of the present building regulations. There is also a requirement not to adversely affect standards of access for disabled people when altering such buildings.

My Department is currently consulting on proposals to increase the scope of the regulations to include the upper storeys of a broader range of new multi-storey buildings, some extensions to existing buildings and major reconstructions behind retained facades and to include facilities for the benefit of people with sight and hearing impairments. Thereafter as part of a phased approach, we shall be assessing ways of extending the scope of the regulations to require provision for people with disabilities when, with respect to non-domestic buildings, proposals are made for types of alteration or extension not previously included within the regulations.

A variety of initiatives aimed at improving access for people with disabilities in existing public buildings has been launched by my own and other Government Departments since 1981; a list of them has been placed in the Library in response to the question recently put by the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) (Official Report, 14 December 1990, column 517).

In 1989 the Government gave £150,000 to the Carnegie trusts ADAPT fund for the improvement of facilities for disabled people in arts venues. I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by the Minister for the Arts to questions recently put by the hon. Member for Ynys Mon (Mr. Jones) (Official Report, 29 November 1990, column 462). My Department has no proposals to set up a similar fund for making other public buildings accessible to people in wheelchairs.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to assist local authorities to provide additional public toilets which are adapted for use by people in wheelchairs.

Mr. Yeo: Under a contract placed by my Department, British Market Research Bureau Limited is currently carrying out a research project on sanitary provision for people with special needs. I plan to make the report available to local authorities during the course of this year. A major feature of it will be detailed information on the needs of wheelchair users with regard to the planning, design and equipping of public toilets.

Private Sector Leasing

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision was made in the 1990-91 revenue support grant settlement for costs associated with private sector leasing; and if he will make a statement on his current proposals for 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: The standard spending assessments on which distribution of revenue support grant is based do not make a separately identifiable provision for private sector leasing. The overall local government finance settlements for 1990-91 and 1991-92 do however allow for the cost of providing short-term accommodation outside the housing revenue account.

Advertising

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been spent by his Department in 1989-90 and 1990-91 on (a) advertising community charge rebates, (b) advertising the transitional relief scheme and (c) advertising the sale of water companies.

Mr. Heseltine: In 1989-90 my Department spent approximately £4 million on advertising the availability of community charge benefit and transitional relief, with advertisements targeted at those who needed to know. It is not possible to apportion this total between, respectively, benefit and relief. Departmental expenditure on advertising the availability of shares in the water companies was approximately £16·5 million, with the aim of encouraging wide share ownership among the general public.

No money has been spent on similar advertising this year, but the Department has continued to produce and distribute free leaflets about the availability of community charge benefit and transitional relief. Leaflets are now in preparation to publicise the availability of the new community charge reduction scheme which I announced on 17 January.

Local Authorities (Income)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each local authority for 1990-91 the income received from (a) poll tax, (b) national non-domestic rates and (c) Government grant.

Mr. Portillo: I am arranging for copies of the information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the total income to local authorities from (a) domestic rates and (b) non-domestic rates in each of the financial years 1979-80 to 1989-90, respectively.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

England

Year	Domestic[1] £ million	Non-domestic[2] £ million
1979-80	2,504	3,354
1980-81	3,251	4,194

Single Homeless People

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the numbers of single homeless people in (a) Sunderland district, (b) Easington district and (c) Hartlepool district.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities report the number of households for whom they accept responsibility to secure accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985. The information provided does not identify those who are single and my Department has no estimates.

Local Government Manpower

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the manpower statistics for Shropshire county council and Shrewsbury and Atcham borough council for 1978-79 and 1989-90.

Mr. Key: The information is as follows:—

Staffing levels at June

	Full-time	Part-time	Total
Shropshire County Council
1979[1]	7,855	6,341	14,196
1989	7,381	7,677	15,058
1990	7,412	8,371	15,783
Shrewsbury and Atcham borough council
1979[1]	576	104	680
1989	635	89	724
1990	631	87	718

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by his civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Mr. Heseltine: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures. These measures are kept under review.

Rents into Mortgages

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of his rents into mortgages scheme in Basildon; if he will indicate the discount given in relation to size of mortgage; and if he has made an assessment of the cost of implementing such a scheme across the United Kingdom at levels of take-up in 10 per cent. bands.

Mr. Yeo: The scheme is for tenants of the Commission for the New Towns at Basildon who would like to buy their home and who pay their full rent but cannot afford the right to buy. They can buy their home for a minimum initial payment of the amount they could borrow on a mortgage with repayments equivalent to their rent. This initial payment will attract discount in accordance with the right-to-buy rules; tenants paying half the right-to-buy price will get half their right-to-buy discount.

The Commission will retain a charge over that part of the value of the property not covered by the tenant's payment and discount. The charge may be redeemed at any time, but must be redeemed if the property is sold or, normally, on the death of the purchaser. The amount needed to redeem the charge will be the appropriate proportion of the property's value at the time of redemption, normally less a discount of 20 per cent.

No proposal for a national scheme has been announced.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current advice given by his Department to local planning authorities on the control of new built development in the vicinity of existing and former landfill tips.

Mr. Yeo: The Government's advice to local planning authorities about planning control relating to landfill sites is set out in my Department's circular 17/89 "Landfill Sites: Development Control", issued in July 1989. This makes clear that authorities should exercise due caution in considering planning applications for development on or near such sites, and that in preparing and updating their development plans they should take full account of the implications of the presence of landfill sites for other types of development in the vicinity.

Household Incomes

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the amount and (b) the proportion of net income after rebates, adjusted for family size, households paid in domestic rates in 1988-89 and pay in the community charge in 1990-91, broken down into (i) decile groups and (ii) bands of equivalent income.

Mr. Key: The information requested is not currently available. The analysis of domestic rates paid in 1988 should become avilable in the spring but the corresponding analysis of community charges paid by households over a full year will not be available until after the 1991 family expenditure survey has been processed.

Sand and Gravel

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from county councils about the development of sand and gravel quarries in environmentally sensitive areas; and what has been his response to such representations.

Mr. Yeo: No specific representations about this have been recently received from county councils. The Government policy and advice on mineral extraction in environmentally important areas is given in minerals planning guidance note 6 "Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England and Wales."

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the current forecasts for sand and gravel production for each year to the end of the century; and what is the existing annual production.

Mr. Yeo: My Department does not produce annual forecasts for the production of sand and gravel. A long term national forecast of the demand for aggregates (which includes sand and gravel) was published in March 1989 in minerals planning guidance note 6. It is our intention to publish a revised forecast shortly.

Production of land-won sand and gravel in England and Wales in 1989 was 98·5 million tonnes.

Warwickshire County Council

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he has made of the opportunities available to reduce the £2 million difference between Warwickshire police authority's plans for reduced spending in 1991-92 on the police service and the Department of the Environment's standard spending assessment for the police service in Warwickshire;

(2) what assessment he has made of the opportunities available to reduce the £2·4 million difference between Warwickshire county council's plans for spending in 1991-92 on the fire and rescue service and his Department's standard spending assessment for the fire service in the county.

Mr. Key: Standard spending assessments are the Government's assessment of the appropriate amount of revenue expenditure by each local authority taking account of its physical, demographic and social characteristics, consistent with a standard level of service, and the Government's view of the appropriate amount of revenue expenditure for all local authorities. It is for each local authority to determine its own spending plans for particular services, bearing in mind its statutory responsibilities and the scope for greater efficiency.

Aggregates

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to promote the development of mineral sidings in English counties to allow bulk haul of aggregates.

Mr. Yeo: The advice set out in minerals planning guidance note 6 is that rail transport can offer environmental advantages for long haul movements of aggregates. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport is able to make grants available under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 to facilitate the transfer of aggregates traffic from road to rail.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to promote the exploitation of sea-based aggregates.

Mr. Yeo: The Government policy on the use of marine dredged sand and gravel is set out in minerals planning guidance note 6. This recognises that it has a very important role to play in maintaining supplies of aggregates and, as far as possible, its use should be encouraged.

For some years the Department, with the Crown Estate Office, has funded an ongoing programme of research to assess the availability of offshore sand and gravel resources around the coast of England and Wales. This will continue for some time to come.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue a circular to authorities administering building regulations supporting the use of sea-based aggregate.

Mr. Yeo: There is nothing in the building regulations to discourage the use of sea dredged aggregates provided the guidance in the British Standard BS 882: 1983 (Specification for aggregates from natural sources for concrete) is followed.

Technical guidance about the acceptability of sea dredged aggregates in concrete was issued by the Building Research Establishment in July 1987. My Department has no plans to issue further specific guidance on this to authorities responsible for the administration of building regulations.

Mineral Sites

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to encourage local authorities to include in their calculations in relation to landbanks mineral sites not currently being worked when planning permission for working exists.

Mr. Yeo: The advice given in minerals planning guidance note 6 is that a sufficient stock of permitted reserves—a landbank—should be maintained for all aggregate minerals. This landbank should be sufficient to provide for at least 10 years extraction unless exceptional circumstances prevail. All mineral sites with planning permission, regardless of whether they are in current production, should be taken into account in calculating this landbank.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals have been lodged to date against the uniform business rate in the Doncaster area.

Mr. Key: The Doncaster valuation officer had received by 31 December 1990, 4,490 proposals to alter the 1990 rating list.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional rate support grant Lambeth borough council received in 1985-86 by way of disregards in addition to those agreed before 1 April 1985; and how much of any additional grant related to the refusal by the council to set a rate in the first three months of the 1985-86 financial year.

Mr. Key: The categories of expenditure which were disregarded for the purpose of calculating grant abatement for 1985-86 are set out in annex VII to the "Rate Support Grant Supplementary Report (England) (No. 4) 1985-86" (HC11) laid before the House on 19 December 1988. All these categories were determined after 1 April 1985. None is related to a delay in setting a rate. The aggregate of the amounts of disregards for Lambeth was £395,000. The effects on rate support grant cannot now be estimated without disproportionate costs.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 14 January, Official Report, column 446, if he will give the reasons for the level of revenue support grant and other items of external finance for the London borough of Wandsworth per adult as against the inner London average.

Mr. Key: Under the settlement for 1991-92 announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 17 January, Wandsworth will receive £1,192 per adult in external support compared with an inner London average of £1,397. This is made up of £711 per head in revenue support grant compared with the average for inner London boroughs of £940 reflecting through the standard spending assessments Wandsworth's social, demographic and geographical characteristics; payments from the non-domestic rate pool at the national rate of £349 per adult; inner London education grant at £40 per adult—the average for inner London—to support education expenditure on responsibilities inherited from ILEA; and £91 per adult in area protection grant—to protect charge payers from undue burdens arising from the change in the system of local government finance—which is £23 above the inner London average.

Rents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department defines an affordable rent for (a) local authority tenants, (b) private housing tenants and (c) housing association tenants.

Mr. Yeo: Housing benefit is available, generally up to the level of market rents, for those tenants who would otherwise have difficulty affording their rents. In addition, subsidies to local authorities and housing associations enable rents to be kept far below market rent levels in most areas.

Quarries

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to promote the development of major quarries similar to Glensanda in Scotland where mineral can be bulk-hauled either by sea or rail.

Mr. Yeo: My Department is commissioning research which will shortly start to identify suitable locations for large scale coastal quarries and the potential contribution such quarries can make towards the demand for aggregates in the south-east of England in particular.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average length of time taken and the average cost involved of officials' time in his Department preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions.

Mr. Heseltine: The time taken in preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions is not routinely recorded in my Department. Estimates are however made where there is a likelihood of exceeding the disproportionate cost threshold (currently £250). However, following an inter-departmental exercise in 1972 an assessment was made of the average cost throughout all departments of answering an oral question. This assessment was based on staff time, using average rates of pay and associated costs for the grades concerned, together with a share of the cost of parliamentary sections and any substantial non-staff costs such as computer usage. This assessed figure is regularly updated and currently stands at £99.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what savings his Department would make were no notice given of oral questions to Ministers and they were answered without civil service time being used on briefings.

Mr. Heseltine: No savings would be made and costs would almost certainly increase significantly. If the oral question is known in advance briefing can be tightly focused, thus avoiding the cost of producing a detailed brief, covering all subjects that could possibly arise.

Sir Clifford Chetwood

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the speech of Sir Clifford Chetwood, President of the Building Employers Confederation, on 4 December 1990.

Mr. Yeo: My Department has a copy.

Air Pollution

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has received any representations regarding (i) the adequacy of the proposed cost recovery provisions for authorisations for air pollution control and (ii) the adequacy of the preparations for implementation of part I of the Environmental Protection Act;

(2) what support and guidance will be given to local authorities and their officers for implementing the new controls over air pollution;

(3) what steps he is taking to ensure that local authority officers are fully conversant with the new system of air pollution controls prior to implementation;

(4) pursuant to his answer of 28 November 1990, Official Report, column 404, if it remains his target to issue the process specific guidance for block 1 of the local air processes under part I of the Environmental Protection Act in January 1991 and the general guidance in March 1991;

(5) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of progress on preparations for operating the new local authority controls for air pollution;

(6) on what basis the level of fees for authorisations for local authority air processes and waste oil processes were determined.

Mr. Trippier: A liaison committee between Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) and the local authority associations was established in November 1989 to facilitate the smooth implementation and running of the new air pollution control system. It continues to meet frequently and has overseen the production of guidance notes both on the new system generally and on the processes to come under local authority control.

All the block 1 notes are now with the printers and should be published by early February. The general guidance notes remain on target for publication in March 1991. Once copy of each of the notes will be sent free of charge to each local authority and port health authority. Copies will also be on sale from HMSO.

The Department of the Environment and the Institution of Environmental Health Officers (IEHO) have jointly held a number of training courses around the country for local authorities and next month will be holding a two-day accreditation course for future trainers. The local authority unit of HMIP in Birmingham is also available for ad hoc advice. I am satisfied with what I hear from the unit and the local authority association liaison committee that adequate provision has been made to enable local authorities to prepare for the new system.

The level of fees was proposed after discussion with the local authority associations and industry on the basis of an assessment of the workload that would be incurred by local authorities in determining and enforcing authorisations. We are still considering the representations received and will in any case review the levels at the end of the first year of operation. Comments on the charging proposals were evenly split, with some local authorities claiming them to be inadequate (particularly in relation to enforcement costs) and some industrialists arguing that they were too high (particularly for waste oil burners). However, the National Society for Clean Air, the IEHO and the Association of District Councils supported them.

Both industry and local authorities have commented on the preparations for implementation of the part I systems of air pollution and integrated pollution control; to ensure a timely and orderly implementation of the latter we proposed on 9 August 1990 a revised timetable in relation to existing processes.

Hylands Park, Chelmsford

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the current status of negotiations on the planning application relating to Hylands park, Chelmsford.

Mr. Yeo: Negotiations on the revised proposals have not been completed.

Waste Incineration

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of waste incinerated within the United Kingdom is imported; and what are the projected levels of such importation for the next decade.

Mr. Baldry: The Department's statistics on imports of waste relate only to hazardous waste imported under the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988. Imported hazardous waste accounted for about 5 per cent. of hazardous waste incinerated in England in 1989-90. The provision of similar information for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland respectively. No estimate has been made of the levels of imports of hazardous waste for incineration for the next decade.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the expansion rate of waste incineration projects and of the likely levels of air pollution resulting from such projects over the next 10 years.

Mr. Baldry: The Department is aware of 11 current proposals for new waste incinerators in England, including those for burning sewage sludge. However, these are at various stages of preparation, and there is no certainty that they will all go ahead. All new waste incinerators will be required to meet the very stringent emission standards of EC directive 89/369. Incinerators over one tonne per hour capacity will in addition require to be authorised by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the new integrated pollution control provisions in the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on proposals to build new incinerators for the purposes of burning toxic waste and as to how many of these devices are planned and where they are to be located.

Mr. Baldry: The Deparment is aware of proposals for five new incinerators for burning toxic waste in England, although these are all subject to planning permission. Their locations are:

Trafford Park (Greater Manchester)
Doncaster
Seal Sands (Cleveland)
Portrack (Cleveland)
Howden (Newcastle)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what actions have been taken to investigate links between pollution emissions and medical conditions in humans and livestock arising out of the activities of the company ReChem;

(2) what research projects have been carried out (a) independently and (b) by his Department into the effects on human health of substances emitted from waste disposal incinerators; and what was the cost of his Department's investigations.

Mr. Baldry: In 1984 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland appointed an expert group to carry out an independent review of morbidity in the Bonnybridge/Denny area, in which a ReChem incinerator plant was located, under the chairmanship of Professor J. Lenihan. The review group's report was published by the Scottish Home and Health Departments in February 1985.

The Government are currently funding the independent small area health statistics unit at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine to investigate possible links between pollution from industrial installations and ill-health in the local community. Specific types of installations being studied include municipal waste incinerators and waste oil and solvent incinerators. The results of the studies will be published in due course.

The cost of individual studies is not separately identified but the total cost of the small area health statistics unit is currently £448,000 per year, of which the Department contributes one third.

A number of other studies have been made into levels of pollutants found in the vicinity of waste disposal incinerators, but they have not attempted to link any pollution with health. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has recently appointed an independent adviser to specify such a study in the area surrounding the ReChem incinerator at Pontypool.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what restrictions he plans to introduce in order to reduce the amount of imported toxic waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom has taken the lead in the European Community and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development in calling for all developed countries to become self-sufficient in disposing of their own waste. The United Kingdom is actively involved in negotiations for several international agreements which should help to reduce the amount of imported hazardous waste.

The proposed amendment to the EC framework directive on waste (75/442/EEC) agreed by the Environment Council in June 1990 refers to the objective of self-sufficiency in waste disposal both for the Community as a whole and for member states individually.

The proposed Council regulation on the supervision and control of shipments of waste within, into and out of the European Community would introduce new controls on imports of hazardous waste. The draft OECD decision-recommendation on the reduction of transfrontier movements of waste includes provision for member countries to reduce transfrontier movements to the lowest possible level. Apart from these prospective international agreements the Environmental Protection Act 1990 gives the Secretary of State additional powers, should they be needed, to control imports of waste.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the United Kingdom's position in the league table of European countries which import toxic waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: There are at present no reliable comparable figures for imports of hazardous waste by European countries. However, figures are likely to be available in the future as a result of two prospective international agreements. The Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's draft decision-recommendation on the reduction of transfrontier movements of waste includes provision for member countries to co-operate in collecting and publishing data on waste imports and exports. The proposed European Council regulation on the supervision and control of shipments of waste within, into and out of the European Community also includes provision for the collection and publication of information on imports and exports of waste. Imports of hazardous waste into the United Kingdom are not large: in 1989-90 they amounted to about 35,000 tonnes, less than 2 per cent. of the hazardous waste we produce ourselves. The Government are pleased that the trend is downward. Imports in 1989-90 were less than half those two years earlier.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what quantity of waste, in the last year in which figures are available, was imported for direct landfill within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: The last year for which figures are available is 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990 when 140 tonnes of hazardous waste were imported into England for direct landfill.

The provision of similar information for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Wales, the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what quantities per nation annually European toxic waste has been imported by the United Kingdom for each year since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: Information on the importation of waste by country of origin into the United Kingdom is available only since the introduction of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations in October 1988.

The information in respect of imports of waste from European Community states through English ports for the financial years (1 April to 31 March) 1988-89 and 1989-90 is shown in the following table.

The provision of similar information for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Wales, the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

Country of origin	Waste imported (tonnes)
	1988-89	1989-90
Belgium	3,961	5,757
Denmark	185	49
Federal Republic of Germany	0	885
France	0	16
Greece	0	5
Republic of Ireland	261	1,704
Italy	273	1,851
Luxembourg	0	17
Netherlands	5,224	10,663
Portugal	0	73
Spain	0	241

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific action he is taking to identify the nature of all waste in transit.

Mr. Baldry: The Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988 control imports and exports. Under these regulations hazardous waste in transit must be accompanied by documents identifying the waste. The proposed European Council regulation on the supervision and control of shipments of waste within, into and out of the European Community is expected to replace the 1988 regulations. The proposal covers all waste, except non-hazardous waste for recycling. The proposal includes provision for all waste in transit to be accompanied by identifying documents. Movements of special waste within England, Scotland and Wales are controlled under the Special Waste Regulations 1980. These regulations require that appropriate documents identify waste in transit. Under the new duty of care in the Environmental Protection Act 1990 adequate written descriptions will have to be transferred with all consignments of controlled waste (except for household waste produced in a domestic property).

Dioxin

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to remove dioxin from the United Kingdom environment.

Mr. Baldry: The risks posed by the trace quantities of dioxins in the environment do not warrant any specific action to remove them. Dioxins in the environment tend to be absorbed onto soil particles and are gradually changed into other substances by the action of natural chemical, physical and biological processes. The Government's policy is to take action to reduce the levels of dioxins entering the environment from industrial and other sources. This will in due course result in lower levels of dioxins occurring in the environment.

Local Government

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports he has received from the Boundary Commission to increase the number of parish, community or town councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Two Local Government Boundary Commission reports before my right hon. Friend for his decision recommend the creation of new parishes. The reports concern the borough of Pendle in Lancashire, and the district of Derbyshire Dales.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has considered amending the concurrent functions that operate between parish and district councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: No: there is no evidence that the concurrent powers of district and parish councils create problems. While there are non-parish areas within district councils, districts must continue to have some powers in these fields.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received to increase the number of parish and town councils in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: There have been no recent representations on this subject. Since Ministers have power to create new parishes only on the recommendation of the Local Government Boundary Commission, the question is in the first place for them, and for the district councils on whom the primary responsibility for reviewing the structure of parishes lies.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new parish, community or town councils have been created since 1974; and if he will give details of their location.

Mr. Key: The Department publishes an annual bulletin of changes in local government structure, including the creation of new parishes on the recommendation of the Local Government Boundary Commission and the creation of new parish councils by district councils. Copies are being placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations to introduce parish councils in the larger cities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: There have been no recent representations on this subject. The Local Government Boundary Commission for England considered proposals to create new parishes throughout the city of Birmingham, but did not recommend that change.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to give statutory powers to parish councils to have access to information of any proposals for change of services or facilities involving parish councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: No: though the role of parish councils is relevant to the current review of local government.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if parish councils are to receive any part of the uniform business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The proceeds from the uniform business rate go into the collection fund operated by the charging authority in each area. Each local authority makes a demand on the collection fund for its income. Parish councils therefore have the same access to business rate income as do county and district councils.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice is given to parish councils on obtaining grants to carry out environmental improvements in their area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: No general advice is issued, but the Department is happy to give what advice it can in specific cases when asked.

Sefton Park Palm House

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why proposals submitted to his Merseyside task force for improvements to Liverpool's Sefton Park palm house, to be financed under the urban fund, have not been proceeded with; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Proposals to restore the palm house were submitted in Liverpool's 1989-90 programme and again in the 1990-91 programme. Ministers at that time were not satisfied that cost estimates for this specialised renovation task were sufficiently robust and detailed costings were commissioned. Liverpool submitted a detailed appraisal in June 1990 and this was used as a basis for further consultation. I am not satisfied that in their present form the proposals offer value for money. If the city were to come forward with wider proposals for the park linked to adjoining initiatives by the Merseyside development corporation, I would be prepared to reconsider the issue.

House Improvement Grant

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the implementation of the new house improvement grant system by Liverpool city council.

Mr. Yeo: The implementation of the house renovation grant system is a local authority responsibility and Liverpool city council has a duty to comply with the statutory requirements.

Property Surveying

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to require all building surveyors to show proof of adequate liability prior to any property surveying work being undertaken for members of the public.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. member to the answer given to him on 4 December 1989 by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State at column 9.

Garden Festival Site, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the original land reclamation costs, and the subsequent annual costs of maintenance and repair, of the international garden festival site, Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The garden festival site was reclaimed as part of a wider land reclamation scheme in the Liverpool south docks area, the total cost of which was £10·6 million. The current annual maintenance cost of the festival park is £200,000.

Local Authority Finance Settlement

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will make the local authority finance settlement for 1991-92.

Mr. Heseltine: I have today laid before the House the Revenue Support Grant Report (England) 1991-92, the Population Report (England) (No.2), the Special Grant Report (No. 2) and the Revenue Support Grant Distribution (Amendment) Report (England).

Postal Service, Lancashire

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure that postal service names and areas and local government names and areas in Lancashire are brought into alignment.

Mr. Key: It is for the Post Office to decide on what names and areas to use for the postal service.

Water Supplies

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the National Rivers Authority about the need for local planning authorities to consult the National Rivers Authority about the availability of water supplies before planning permissions are approved.

Sir George Young [holding answer 20 December 1990]: My right hon. Friend is not aware of any such representations. He listens closely to any comments or proposals which the National Rivers Authority may make to him.

Housing Subsidy (Lambeth)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the reason for the continuation of the previous basis for housing subsidy when Lambeth borough council changed its accounting policy on sinking fund accumulation rates used for debt charges in the financial years 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Yeo: The Department refused Lambeth borough council's request to increase from 5 per cent. to 10 per cent. the sinking fund accumulated rate used in the calculation of housing subsidy entitlement because such a change would have resulted in an increase in the amount of subsidy paid to the council in the long term.

Antarctica

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters he has received from hon. Members and their constituents on the matter of the environment in Antarctica.

Mr. Baldry: Most inquiries of hon. Members on this subject are addressed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who is responsible for policy on the Antarctic. A small number of letters recently addressed to Ministers in this Department have been passed to my right hon. Friend for his attention.

Sea Bathing

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department expects to receive the report of the 1990 research into the health risks of sea bathing; and when this report will be made available to the House.

Mr. Baldry: We expect to receive the final report of the 1990 studies in early April and copies will be placed in the Library shortly thereafter.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 22 January 1991

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Oral Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average length of time taken and the average cost involved of officials' time in his Department preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The time taken in preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions is not routinely recorded in the FCO. Details of the average cost involved throughout all Departments was given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury in her answer to the hon. Member on 18 December at column 112.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what savings his Department would make were no notice given of oral questions to Ministers and they were answered without civil service time being used on briefings.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No savings would be made and costs would almost certainly increase significantly. If the oral question is known in advance briefing can be tightly focused, thus avoiding the cost of producing a detailed brief, covering all subjects that could possibly arise.

Entry Visas

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in the past 12 months how many entry visa applications have (a) been received and (b) granted in respect of (i) Poland, (ii) Yugoslavia, (iii) Czechoslovakia, (iv) Romania, (v) Albania, (vi) Hungary, (vii) Bulgaria and (viii) the Soviet Union.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The figures for entry clearance applications of all types processed in 1990 in the countries concerned are:

	Received	Granted
Poland	44,912	42,694
Yugoslavia	1,354	1,133
Czechoslovakia	23,258	23,184
Romania	9,911	9,226
Hungary	19,452	19,391
Bulgaria	7,712	7,625
USSR	45,752	45,585

There is no entry clearance post in Albania.

Mr. Roman Mronov

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian Government about their failure to grant an exit visa to Roman Mronov of Kharkov to allow him to join his wife, son and in-laws in Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can certainly raise this case with the Soviet authorities, but in order to make our representations most effective we shall need further details.

THE ARTS

Libraries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Arts when the inter-library loan scheme, operated by the British Library at Boston Spa, changed its procedures in respect of books loaned to other libraries in respect of charges made for (a) late return and (b) non-return of items; what other changes have been implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: In October 1990 the British Library introduced changes to its system for reminding customers about long overdue loans and charges for lost items. This followed a review in the light of increasing numbers of such items which were causing inconvenience to other customers, and discussions with representatives of other libraries.

The principal effect of the changes is to introduce a non-refundable administrative charge on long-overdue items following the issue of three reminders. The separate charge towards the cost of replacement of non-returned items will continue to be credited if they are subsequently returned within six months. Another change is to allow renewals on demand of items on loan if not required by another customer.

Antiquities

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will provide additional resources to the national museums to fund research on antiquities using the work of Professor Alec Jeffreys, FRS, of Leicester university in relation to stable DNA.

Mr. Renton: I understand that Professor Alec Jeffrey's work on developing DNA probes involving genetic fingerprinting has been undertaken not only in university departments but in museums, often utilising material from national museums.

The natural history museum has been developing DNA studies over the past five years and has recently constructed a special laboratory for this type of work. This work is supported through the museum's grant-in-aid and also by funding from research councils and private funding agencies. The museum's bid for funding from my Department in 1991-92 has been met in full.

TRANSPORT

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures. The measures are kept under review.

Lindane

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the container of Lindane lost in the channel in 1989 has been located; and if it remains unbreached.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 6 March 1990, at columns 559-60; the container of Lindane has not been located by the French authorities in whose area of responsibility it was lost and in consequence it is not known whether it has been breached.

The French authorities have not detected any increase in background levels of the substance in the course of their programme of sampling and analysis of seawater and fish. Sampling by our own fisheries department confirms this.

Nuclear and Toxic Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for the last 12 months for which he has figures the tonnage of (a) nuclear waste and (b) toxic waste that has been (i) shipped and (ii) discharged from vessels within the limit of the Port of London Authority.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am informed by HM inspectorate of pollution that no nuclear waste has been shipped or discharged from vessels within the limits of the Port of London Authority during the last 12 months. Imports of toxic waste discharged from vessels within the Port of London Authority amounted to 1,189 tonnes between April 1989 and March 1990. No toxic waste was shipped for export. No information is collected centrally on domestic movements of toxic waste shipped or discharged at sea ports.

Child Pedestrians

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the child pedestrian casualties in Britain in 1989 occurred in a street where they lived; and in how many of these cases were the motor vehicles involved travelling at above the speed limit at the moment of impact.

Mr. Chope: The standard report form, STATS19, sent by police to the Department of Transport for all road accidents, does not have information on the addresses of casualties or an estimate of the speed of vehicles involved in accidents.

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for a change in the law so that when a child pedestrian is knocked down in a residential street the burden of proof is on the driver that due care was taken rather than on the child.

Mr. Chope: We have no proposals for such a change in road traffic law which would be contrary to the general principle of the criminal justice system that the burden of proof rests with the prosecution. We are however taking other steps, including encouraging the introduction of 20 mph zones and traffic calming measures and launching a major publicity campaign, which will improve child road safety in residential areas.

A13

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what improvements to the A13 between the North Circular road and Butcher row are currently being undertaken; at what cost; and when they will be completed.

Mr. Chope: Departmental schemes currently under construction are:

Scheme	Works cost £ million	Estimated date of completion
Leamouth Road Junction Interim Scheme	2·0	Mid 1991

The following schemes are due to start this year:

Scheme	Works cost £ million	Estimated date of completion
West India Dock Road Junction phase 1	1·2	Spring 1992
Canning Town Flyover/Ironbridge widening Advanced Works phase 1 Bridge over A102	0·5	Late 1991

Other schemes in preparation are:

	Works cost £ million	Estimated date of completion
Cotton Street/Blackwall Tunnel	3·5	1994
West India Dock Road Junction phase 2	0·6	1993
Butcher Row Junction	0·7	1993
Canning Town Flyover/Ironbridge widening Advance works phase 2	9·2	1993
Canning Town Flyover/Ironbridge widening	21·0	1997
A13/A112 Junction Improvement	44·4	1996
A13/A117 Junction Improvment	35·6	1995

Progress on some of these schemes will be dependent on the completion of statutory processes which could be subject to public inquiry. Completion dates are therefore provisional.

Chief Inspector Transport Security

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the duties and activities of the chief inspector of transport security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The chief inspector of transport security was appointed on 1 November 1990. His duties are to develop the necessary programme on the maritime side and oversee the implementation of aviation and maritime security measures. He also provides a source of advice on security matters in other forms of transport. In particular, he contributes advice on the security of channel tunnel operations.

Dangerous Loads

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines are issued to British Rail regarding co-operation with other agencies in planning emergency liaison procedures in case of accident during the transportation of (a) radioactive waste, (b) nuclear warloads and (c) toxic waste.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for the safety of staff and the public rests primarily with the railway operator and advice is given on request. British Rail liaises at all levels with the emergency services. Emergency procedures are regularly rehearsed both as theoretical and practical exercises to ensure that the emergency services are in a position to deal effectively with any incident that may occur.

RAF Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the latest developments in making RAF Finningley a joint military/civil airport.

Mr. McLoughlin: The operation of joint military/civil airfields is not possible under United Kingdom aviation regulations. Civil aircraft may use military airfields subject to such flights being compatible with operational considerations. I understand that civil aircraft are already allowed to use RAF Finningley by prior permission, but the scope to accept additional civilian traffic is severely limited by the needs of military flying. Use of RAF airfields is a matter for the Secretary of State for Defence.

Oral Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what savings his Department would make were no notice given of oral questions to Ministers and they were answered without civil service time being used on briefings.

Mr. McLoughlin: The time taken in preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions is not routinely recorded in the Department of Transport. Estimates are however made where there is a likelihood of exceeding the disproportionate cost threshold—currently £250. However, following an interdepartmental exercise in 1972 an assessment was made of the average cost throughout all Departments of answering an oral question. This assessment was based on staff time, using average rates of pay and associated costs for grades concerned, together with a share of the cost of parliamentary sections and any substantial non-staff costs such as computer usage. This assessed figure is regularly updated and currently stands at £99.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average length of time taken and the average cost involved of officials' time in his Department preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions.

Mr. McLoughlin: No savings would be made and costs would almost certainly increase significantly. If the oral question is known in advance briefing can be tightly focused, thus avoiding the cost of producing a detailed brief, covering all subjects that could possibly arise.

Aircraft Safety

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Britannia Airways Boeing 757 which lost a wheel after taking off from Gatwick airport on 15 January was given a complete overhaul and service check; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The air accidents investigation branch is carrying out a field investigation into the incident and will publish a report in due course. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a copy of the report.

Coaches, Central London

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many coaches are estimated to visit central London on an average day during the summer; how many coach parking spaces are available (a) on-street and (b) off-street; and if he will make a statement on proposals to increase the available number of such spaces.

Mr. Chope: Latest figures indicate that there are some 1,000 coach movements in central London each weekday. Parking provision is primarily the responsibility of local authorities. There are approximately 80 on-street and 450 off-street spaces, mostly used by tourist coaches. This excludes off-street provision solely for commuter coaches of which there is no record. My hon. Friend the Minister of State will shortly host a further meeting with interested parties to consider initiatives for improving the provision and use of parking spaces for coaches.

Airports

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he has made to examine the options put forward by the Civil Aviation Authority on new runway capacity in south-east England; if he will list the membership of relevant working groups; when he expects to announce a decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Parkinson) on 26 November 1990, Official Report columns 272-73, when he announced the terms of reference and subgroup structure, and those he had invited to become members, of the working group which he had announced earlier was to be established to build on the Civil Aviation Authority's advice on runway capacity.

Responses to those invitations have now been received. On the main group, in addition to the relevant Government Departments and the CAA, are the London and South East Regional Planning Conference—SERPLAN—the Federation of Heathrow Anti-Noise Groups—FHANG—the Gatwick Area Conservation Campaign—GACC—the North West Essex and East Hertfordshire Preservation Association—NWEEHPA—the Airfield Environment Federation—AEF—the International Air Transport Association, the International Air Carrier Association, the British Air Transport Association—BATA—the Airport Operators Association—AOA—the Joint Airports Committee of Local Authorities, BAA plc, the Association of British Travel Agents, the British Tourist Authority, and the Air Transport Users Committee.

The members of the subgroup which will examine environmental and developmental issues are SERPLAN, FHANG, GACC, NWEEHPA, AEF, the Kent training and enterprise council and the chairmen of the airport consultative committees for Heathrow, Gatwick, Stansted, Luton, Bournemouth, Bristol Lulsgate, Southampton and Lydd airports. On the surface access subgroup are British Rail, London Regional Transport, SERPLAN and BAA plc. On the noise subgroup are the CAA, FHANG, GACC, NWEEHPA, AEF, AOA, BAA plc and BATA. On the airport development subgroup are the CAA, BATA and the airport operators at Heathrow, Gatwick, Stansted, Luton, Bournemouth, Bristol Lulsgate, Bristol Filton, Southampton, Lydd and Manston airports. The subgroups will also include the relevant Government Departments.

To ensure the working group has access to a wide range of views, its considerations are to be supplemented by a written consultation. A consultation document was issued on 20 December.

Until the group has completed its work and has presented its advice to my right hon. and learned Friend, it is not possible to indicate the timing of further steps. The group is to meet for the first time on 1 February.

Gulf Crisis

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to enable British airlines and others directly affected by the economic impact of the Gulf crisis to weather the financial problems facing them at the present time.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to offer financial assistance. He has, however, taken steps to provide certain reinsurance facilities under the terms of the Marine and Aviation Insurance (War Risks) Act 1952, to help ensure that British airlines maintain services that otherwise would not have been operated. These services provide an opportunity for members of the British community in the Gulf region to leave if that is their wish.

Speed Restrictions

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to apprise local authorities of the Department's new proposals for 20 mph speed zones in association with the installation of road humps; and if he will take steps to ensure that local authorities are encouraged to make use of these new regulations.

Mr. Chope: We have issued a new roads circular—4/90—on the guidelines to be followed by local authorities when considering new schemes. We are encouraging local authorities to establish 20 mph zones, and have allocated over £31 million for local safety schemes within the minor works allocation of the transport supplementary grant settlement.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for reducing carbon dioxide emissions in the road transport sector.

Mr. Chope: The Government's strategy for reducing carbon dioxide emissions from road transport is outlined in chapter 5 of "This Common Inheritance"—Cm. 1200.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the trunk road improvement schemes in England for which contracts were awarded in 1990.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 January 1991]: Contracts for the following schemes, valued at over £1 million were awarded in 1990.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the trunk road improvement schemes in England for which his Department plans to award contracts during 1991.

Mr. Chope: [holding answer 18 January 1991]:] I shall make an announcement soon.

Coach Drivers

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to take steps to increase the observance of the 70 mph speed limit by coach drivers on motorways.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 21 January 1991]: Enforcement of the law on speed limits is a matter for the police. Coaches first used on or after April 1984 are already required to be fitted with speed limiters to prevent them from being driven at more than 70 mph. From 1 April this year, coaches first used between 1974 and 1984 will also need to have speed limiters. From the same date we shall be including a speed limiter check in the annual roadworthiness tests of coaches.

Motor Vehicle Emissions

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has received about the possibility of setting MOT motor vehicle emission standards based on individual manufacturers specifications; whether he will discuss with the European Commission whether variable standards would conflict with EC legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 21 January 1991]: Setting emissions standards based on vehicle manufacturers' specifications would result in a more demanding in-use standard than the one which has previously been allowed by the relevant EC type approval directive. We therefore propose to set carbon monoxide testing standards on the basis outlined in our consultation letter of 20 September 1990. I hope to be able to sign enabling regulations shortly.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Sector Manpower

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North dated 19 December 1990, Official Report, column 177, on public sector manning, if he will list those parts of central and local government which have (a) increased and (b) decreased manpower since 1979, giving numbers in each case.

Mr. Mellor: I have placed the information requested in the Library of the House.

Excise Duties

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the price of the most widely selling category of cigarettes is accounted for by excise duties, including value added tax; what are the comparable percentages on petrol, spirits, beers and wines; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The percentage of price accounted for by excise duties and value added tax for the goods specified in the question is as follows:

	Total tax as percentage of price
Cigarettes – 20 king size	72·8
Petrol – 4 star – per litre	59·4
Petrol – unleaded – per litre	55·3
Spirits – 75cl bottle	68·9
Beer – pint	31·3
Wine – still table – 1 litre bottle	52·9

Third World Debt

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any proposals to alter the tax treatment by the Inland Revenue of United Kingdom banks which make provision against Third world debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget Statement.

Tobacco Excise Duty

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would have been the effect on the retail prices index had tobacco excise duty, inclusive of the value added tax, been index linked for 1990-91.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is estimated that the impact on the retail prices index of an indexation of tobacco excise duty in 1990-91 would have been to increase the index by 0·15 per cent.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the gross domestic products of the United Kingdom, France and the Federal Republic of Germany was attributable to manufacturing industry in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 January 1991]: Figures of gross domestic product analysed by industry, including manufacturing industry, are shown in the annual OECD publication on national accounts. The most recent edition, entitled "National Accounts, Detailed Tables, Volume II (1976-1988)", gives these figures in table 12 for each country.

Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the change in Exchequer income during the financial year 1991-92 resulting from (a) maintaining the married couple's allowance for those aged 65 to 74 years at its current cash value of £2,145 and (b) maintaining the married couple's allowance for those aged 75 years and over at its current cash value of £2,185.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 21 January 1991]: It is estimated that at 1991-92 levels of income the revenue yields in a full year would be (a) £40 million and (b) £10 million, compared with statutory indexation.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beer

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the price of hops and barley and of beer in the last 10 years for which records are available.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is given in the table.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of confirmed cases of BSE by county in England and Wales in the months to (a) 17 December 1990 and (b) 17 January 1991.

Mr. Maclean: The information for England and Wales is as follows:

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what expenditure has been incurred by his Department in ensuring slaughterhouses in England meet EC standards.

Mr. Maclean: The Department does not provide any special financial assistance for compliance with EC standards in slaughterhouses. Advice on these standards is available from the Ministry's veterinary staff.

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Ministry's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by civil servants outside his Ministry's offices.

Mr. Curry: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures. These measures are kept under review.

Chernobyl

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the restricted areas in England and Wales where there are still controls in force on the movement of livestock, due to the fall-out effects of the Chernobyl disaster; and how long these will remain.

Mr. Maclean: Some reductions in the size of the post-Chernobyl restricted areas in England and Wales were made on Monday 14 January 1991. Details of the areas still under restriction, in parts of Cumbria, Clwyd, Gwynedd and Powys, can be found in the Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Radioactivity in Sheep) (England) Order 1991 and the Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Radioactivity in Sheep) (Wales) Order 1991. The situation will be reviewed again at the end of the 1991 marketing season with a view to releasing further areas from controls as soon as it is possible to do so without compromising the continuing safety of the food chain.

Farm Subsidies

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to speed up the payment of grants and subsidies to farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The timing of payments depends on a number of factors, including the determination of the relevant rates, rules of eligibility and the availability of resources to carry out detailed administrative checks. Subject to these constraints, payments are made as quickly as possible. I fully recognise the importance of early payments to the farmers concerned.

PRIME MINISTER

War Graves

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to co-ordinate the activities of the different departments and agencies involved in the maintenance of war graves to ensure that a memorial will continue to exist to honour the memory of men killed in HMS Amethyst on the Yangtse River, China, in July 1949.

The Prime Minister: The memorial will remain in St. Nicholas' church and it will be looked after and maintained for anyone wishing to view it or pay tribute.

The Gulf

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what steps have been taken in formulating coalition military policy in the Gulf to avoid damage to cultural and religious sites; and what protection is being afforded to Ur of the Chaldees and to Babylon.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the remarks made on this matter during the debate on the Gulf situation yesterday.

Disabled Workers

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Prime Minister what steps are taken to co-ordinate action by relevant Government Departments regarding the problem of unemployment amongst the disabled.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has the lead responsibility within government for policies to assist unemployed people with disabilities back to work. There are frequent discussions between the Department of Employment and other relevant departments at ministerial and official level to ensure that policies are properly co-ordinated.

ENERGY

Petroleum Coke

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list year by year since 1980 the sources of petroleum coke burned in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will list by year since 1980 his estimate of the tonnage of petroleum coke being burned in domestic appliances in the United Kingdom; and what is the level of sulphur content per tonne burnt.

Mr. Moynihan: All petroleum coke supplied to the metal refining industry is produced in the United Kingdom. All petroleum coke reaching the domestic market and used as an industrial fuel for refractory and cement manufacture is imported. Figures realting to the amount of imported petroleum coke used domestically and its sulphur content are not available.

Petrol Supplies

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from independent petrol retailers about allocation of supplies of petrol under contingency plans for rationing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received one such representation which is now receiving attention. Under the allocation schemes which the Department could activate in the event of fuel shortage there is no differentiation between retail outlets operated by the oil companies and those of independent operators. Both would be subject to the same restrictions on their supplies.

There are ample oil supplies at present. The International Energy Agency has, in addition, brought into effect a contingency plan which will make available an additional 2·5 million barrels of oil per day to the market. This should further reassure the market and the public that, if shortages do occur, additional supplies will be available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Leasing and Rental Agreements

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on his Department's request to Sir Ron Dearing to investigate leasing and rental agreements.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has written to the Accounting Standards Board drawing attention to the problem that the accounts of some companies appear to have paid insufficient regard to potential future liabilities inherent in the business such as the impact of early termination of leases or continuing maintenance obligations. This may be a question of judgment in applying existing requirements or it may suggest a need to strengthen accounting standards. The Accounting Standards Board has confirmed that it will consider this problem.

Knitwear Industry

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies, units and departments of the knitwear industry have ceased trading during the last two years; what action he intends to take to arrest this decline; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: There are no Government statistics available that relate directly to such closures. However, a recent report in the trade journal, Knitting News, suggested that 143 companies, units and departments in the knitwear industry have been affected by closure, closedown of an operation, or change of ownership in the past two years. Decisions on such matters are for the commercial judgment of the firms concerned.

The Department encourages growth in all markets by promoting enterprise and by creating a climate in which all sectors of industry can flourish. There are no plans for any new initiatives specifically for the textile and clothing industries. The Department's general regional, export and consultancy services are, however, already available to these industries.

Textile Industry

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the level of representations at the recent international textile manufacturing exhibition in China by (a) German, (b) Italian and (c) United Kingdom machine manufacturers.

Mr. Sainsbury: Exact information is not available, but it is estimated that there were about 80 exhibitors from Italy; a further 50 or so from Germany; and at least 10 from the United Kingdom.

Political Donations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take proceedings under the Companies Act 1985 against Stock Land and Estates, formerly called J. A. and M. A. Carter Developments, for failure to disclose the recipients of political donations in the financial year ended September 1985.

Mr. Redwood: In accordance with its usual practice in response to specific allegations of non-compliance with statutory disclosure requirements, my Department will look into this and, if there has been a failure to comply with those requirements, it will take appropriate action.

Petroleum Coke

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research has been and is being carried out, and at what cost, to determine the dangers of petroleum coke used in domestic appliances.

Mr. Leigh: My predecessor has met suppliers of petroleum coke. In addition, my Department is looking into what evidence there is from those who have sought controls on the supply of petroleum coke for domestic use, as well as existing research work on the burning characteristics of this fuel.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department is taking to advise members of the public as to risks associated with the use of petroleum coke; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My Department is discussing with suppliers of petroleum coke the instructions for use of the fuel for domestic purposes, the form of these instructions and how they can be best conveyed to consumers.

Sensitive Technologies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives have been taken by his Department to explain to companies wishing to export sensitive technologies, the current regulations and risks involved in such exports.

Mr. Lilley: My Department makes available to exporters a range of guidance booklets and information describing controls on the export of sensitive goods and technology and how they are implemented. We have in addition organised a major programme of seminars to increase awareness of the risks of clandestine attempts to procure such goods for use in nuclear, chemical or biological weapons programmes, or missile delivery systems, and the steps that need to be taken to prevent this. My officials stand ready to provide advice to any exporter seeking guidance on matters relating to export controls.

Disabled Workers

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with manufacturers of computer hardware to make equipment more accessible to disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: No discussions for this specific purpose have taken place since the end of the Concerned Technology campaign in 1989. Concerned Technology was part of the Department's programme to raise general awareness of information technology. The general awareness programme has now ended, and the Department's efforts are directed towards the broader needs of business and commerce through promotion of the use of information technology in accordance with best practice and through support for basic research to strengthen industry's technological capability. My Department's role in serving the interests of disabled people is through encouragement of the develolpment and use of basic technologies which will improve the capabilities and adaptability of all products that utilise them. It is now for those in the industry to respond to demands expressed by the disabled and caring agencies when designing their products.

The Employment Department is responsible for a range of special aids, including special computer equipment, to help the disabled to obtain and keep employment.

Photocopying Companies

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) about which photocopying companies he has received complaints of malpractice;

(2) what action he is taking to investigate the complaints he has received of malpractice by photocopying companies;

(3) when he expects to report on the conclusions of his Department's investigation into malpractice by photocopying companies.

Mr. Redwood: As I made clear in the Adjournment debate on 12 November 1990, at column 423, I am willing to consider any evidence that might warrant an inquiry under the Companies Act. I have now received information from the hon. Gentleman and from other sources. I continue to liaise with the Director General of Fair Trading to whom the complaints have been copied and who has a duty to consider the continued fitness of licensees to retain licences granted to them under the Consumer Credit Act 1974. But, as I explained on 12 November 1990, I will not be able to confirm whether we or any other authority are conducting an investigation.

Insurance Act 1982

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many regulatory inquiries have been carried out by his Department or its inspectors under the Insurance Act 1982 in each year; and, in each case, which section of the Act was involved.

Mr. Redwood: Taking regulatory inquiries to mean actuarial investigations—section 42 of the Insurance Companies Act 1982—or use of powers to obtain information—section 44—the information requested, drawn from the insurance annual reports is:

Year	Section 42	Section 44
1983	8	24
1984	11	29
1985	6	25
1986	4	21
1987	6	39
1988	1	24

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give a detailed breakdown of the planned increases in central Government expenditure by ECGD in each year 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 as announced in the autumn statement as against the plans in the January 1990 public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 January 1991]: This information will be published next month in the new Trade and Industry departmental report.

Soviet Union

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will review existing trade agreements with the Soviet Union in the light of recent events in Lithuania and Latvia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 21 January 1991]: Trade agreements are matters of European Community competence. EC Foreign Ministers have expressed their deep concern at recent developments in the Baltic states. They are keeping all aspects of their relationship with the USSR under review.

School Pupils

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide a table showing for (a) primary school pupils and (b) secondary school pupils levels of expenditure per child in education in Cheshire for each year since 1978-79 in (i) cash terms and (ii) constant price terms.

Mr. Fallon: The available information is given in the table.

Cheshire LEA—net institutional expenditure per pupil[1]

Year	Nursery and Primary[2] schools		Secondary schools
	cash terms (£)	real terms[3] (£)	cash terms (£)	real terms[3] (£)
1978-79	340	745	495	1,090
1979-80	400	755	580	1,090
1980-81	510	810	735	1,170
1981-82	580	840	815	1,185
1982-83	660	895	890	1,205
1983-84	665	865	940	1,220

1986-87	825	935	1,235	1,395
1987-88	900	965	1,410	1,515
1988-89	960	960	1,545	1,545

[1] The figures are based on LEA expenditure returns to DOE and pupil number returns to DES.

[2] Figures for nursery and primary schools were not collected separately from 1987-88. Figures for all years include nursery and primary schools.

[3] The cash figures for earlier years have been repriced to 1988-89 prices using the Gross Domestic Product (Market Prices) Deflator.

Music Working Party

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to publish the interim report of the music working party.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering the interim report of the national curriculum music working group, and will be publishing it soon.

Child Abuse

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list the changes he has introduced in the regime of independent schools as a result of the case involving child abuse at Crookham Court school in Berkshire;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to require head teachers always to inform the police and his Department when a member of staff is required to leave a school because of child abuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: During the past 18 months, my right hon. and learned Friend has introduced further measures to reduce the risk of pupils in independent schools being subject to physical or sexual abuse by members of staff. The measures described later in my reply strengthen the pre-existing procedures under the Education Acts 1944 and 1981; in addition the provisions of section 87 of the Children Act 1989, which includes a new statutory welfare duty on proprietors and those responsible for running certain independent boarding schools, will be brought into effect in October 1991. From the same date, certain independent schools with 50 boarders or fewer will need to register as children homes and will be subject to regulations, including on welfare, to be made under section 63 of that Act.

The Registrar of Independent Schools reminded proprietors on 30 April 1990 of their existing statutory duty to report to the Secretary of State instances where teachers are dismissed on grounds of misconduct or resign in circumstances where dismissal would have been considered. The letter also gave detailed guidance about the standing arrangements for schools to vet prospective employees, noting that in all cases referred to the Department a check would automatically be made of the list of people deemed unsuitable for employment in maintained schools—list 99.

It has also been decided that Her Majesty's inspectors visiting provisionally registered schools for final registration, or on routine visits to registered independent schools will now inquire whether appropriate checks have been made in the case of all recent staff appointments.

In the case of independent schools seeking approval under section 11 of the Education Act 1981 to admit pupils with special educational needs, Her Majesty's inspectors will include in their regular schedule of questions the inquiry whether appropriate checks have been made, including of list 99 in relation to staff appointments.

In order to monitor the volume of enquiries from independent schools about list 99, and so that in any cases of doubt the facts can be verified, the Department has invited those organisations and agencies in the independent schools field who are authorised holders of the list to keep a record of the enquiries they receive. This information, together with the records kept by the Department's teachers misconduct division, will give the Secretary of State a clearer picture in future of how fully the list is being used.

Where it comes to the notice of the Secretary of State that there has been a failure on the part of an independent school adequately to check the background of a teacher or other member of staff and, whether as a consequence of this or otherwise, circumstances have arisen which in his view render the school objectionable in the terms of section 71 of the Education Act 1944, consideration is given to bringing the known facts of the situation directly to the attention of all parents, guardians or agencies who place pupils at the school. In parallel, the Secretary of State will invariably consider the notice of complaint procedure provided for in the Education Act.

In order to provide help and counsel for boarding school pupils who may have worries which they feel they cannot share with staff or other adults, the Department, with the Independent Schools Joint Council, is providing funds for the experimental boarding school line. The line was launched on 13 January and will operate this term and next. We hope that, apart from providing help, the line will give useful indications about the incidence of pupils' problems, including abuse.

Consideration is now being given to how list 99 may be made more comprehensive in its coverage of non-teaching staff, thus supplementing the consultancy service operated by the Department of Health whereby local authorities and voluntary bodies can check the suitability of those they propose to employ in the child care field. This would require that proprietors report to the Secretary of State instances where non-teachers are dismissed on grounds of misconduct or resign in circumstances where dismissal would be considered.

Guidance on the implications for independent schools with boarders of the implementation of the Children Act will be published soon. The Department and Her Majesty's inspectorate will continue to work closely with the Department of Health and the social services inspectorate to devise arrangements and support which will make effective the duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of pupils placed on proprietors, or those responsible for running, independent schools with boarders. In particular, it has been agreed that, in their routine visit to schools, social services departments will expect to see firm evidence that proper checks have been conducted on appointment of any staff who are likely to come into regular contact with pupils.

Finally, in order to minimise the danger of exploitation of students attending English language schools in Britain, the then Minister of State wrote to European colleagues in November 1989 drawing attention to the British Council's recognition scheme, and advising use of recognised schools only.

These additional measures are a mark of the seriousness with which the Secretary of State views the need to prevent any possibility of pupils in independent schools being subject to abuse. He is confident that his concern is shared by the vast majority of proprietors, heads and staff of independent schools, and the independent schools associations, and looks to those in schools to take all reasonable measures to avoid the possibility of abuse, or, in any cases when it does occur, to take swift and decisive action to stop it.

A-Levels

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many A-levels, and at what grades, were obtained per pupil in 1989 and 1990 in (a) Lincolnshire and (b) Humberside.

Mr. Eggar: In the academic year 1988-89, the number of A-level passes, including AS level equivalent, per school leaver, for the areas in question, was as shown. The figures do not include A-levels achieved in colleges of further education. Figures for 1990 are not yet available.

	A-AS levels per pupil
Lincolnshire	0·40
Humberside	0·38
All-England	0·55

GCSE

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many general certificate of secondary education passes per pupil were obtained in 1989 and 1990 in (a) Lincolnshire and (b) Humberside.

Mr. Eggar: Amongst pupils aged 16 in the academic year 1988-89, the number of GCSEs at grade G or above achieved per pupil, for the areas in question, was as follows. Figures for 1990 are not yet available.

GCSE grades A to G
Per pupil, aged 16

	Per pupil
Lincolnshire	6·66
Humberside	6·32
All-England	6·58

Religious Education

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will meet the director of education in Northumberland to discuss the booklet "Religious Education: Topics for the Middle School" and its consistency with the requirement to teach Christianity in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans for such a meeting. I have taken steps to obtain a copy of the booklet in question and will write to my hon. Friend when I have had an opportunity to consider it.

Grants

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out, at current prices, the value per child in each maintained sector school of education support grants and local education authority training grants.

Mr. Eggar: In 1990-91, the grant payable to local authorities under the education support grants and local education authority training grants schemes represents nationally an average of some £26 per pupil in local education authority-maintained schools.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out, at current prices, the value of the special purpose grant (development) for each child in a grant-maintained school.

Mr. Eggar: In 1990-91, special purpose grant (development) of some £26 per pupil is available to grant-maintained schools.

Bullers Wood School

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he received about the admissions policy, including catchment area, for Bullers Wood grant-maintained school in the London borough of Bromley.

Mr. Eggar: The Secretary of State approved Bullers Wood school as grant maintained on 10 October 1990. There have been no representations to the Secretary of State concerning the admissions policy of Bullers Wood grant-maintained school.

Annual Maintenance Grant

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out the basis on which the grant maintained schools' central annual maintenance grant has been calculated at 16 per cent. in the letter of 27 December 1990 to the chief education officer from the head of the grant maintained schools division; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The 16 per cent. is currently the average central annual maintenance grant figure for grant-maintained schools in this financial year. The individual figure for each current grant-maintained school has been calculated in accordance with the provisions of the Education (Grant-Maintained Schools) (Finance) Regulations 1990—S.I. 1990/549.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by his civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures. These measures are kept under review.

Housing Executive

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the public liability claims against the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, area by area, for the years 1985 to 1990.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that the number of claims made against the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, by region for 1985-86 to 1989-90 is as follows:

Public liability claims against the Northern Ireland Housing Executive

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Belfast	1,331	1,458	1,468	1,459	967
South East	413	456	519	454	338
South	371	445	401	281	367
North East	316	385	390	443	414
North West	701	748	697	620	421
West	198	182	202	200	161
Total	3,330	3,674	3,677	3,457	2,668

District Councils

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all bodies and organisations in Northern Ireland to which district councils have the right to nominate members and to which the Government also nominate members.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 16 January 1991]: The information is as follows:

Eastern Health and Social Services Board
Northern Health and Social Services Board
Southern Health and Social Services Board
Western Health and Social Services Board
The Senate of the Queen's University of Belfast
The Court of the University of Ulster
The Trustees of the Ulster Museum
The Trustees of the Ulster Folk and Transport Museum
The Board of Governors of the Arts Council of Northern Ireland
Belfast Education and Library Board

Kincora Boys' Home

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether there is evidence that members of the secret services or the security services sought in 1976 to obstruct any inquiry into events at the Kincora home.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 January 1991]: I have nothing to add to the published conclusions of Sir George Terry's inquiry.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which officials of his Department interviewed persons in the course of duties in connection with the Kincora boys' home from January 1990 to present date.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 21 January 1991]: None.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now publish the full text of the Terry report into the Kincora boys' home.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 21 January 1991]: No.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of parliamentary questions answered by his Department on the Kincora boys' home.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 21 January 1991]: Forty, according to the parliamentary on-line information system.

Ulster Museum

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1990 reported by the Ulster museum, including its outstations, with the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1989.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 21 January 1991]: In 1990 a total of 296,100 people visited the Ulster museum and the Armagh County museum—an increase of 9·6 per cent. on the attendance figure for 1989.

WALES

Environmental Grant Fund

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to introduce an environmental grant fund for Wales in furtherance of policies set out in "This Common Inheritance" (Cm. 1200); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department will in 1991-92 fund suitable projects from voluntary organisations in the Principality via the special grants (environmental) programme.

As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment told the hon. Gentleman on 19 December 1990 the announcement by the Minister for the Environment and Countryside on that date gave details of his proposals to bring the new environmental grant fund scheme quickly into operation for 1991-92. I shall keep the position under review for next year.

Patients

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many North Wales patients used hospital facilities in Wirral, Liverpool and Manchester in 1989 and 1990; and if he will list each of the hospitals.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The available information relates to 1989-90. A total of 13,063 episodes of in-patient and day case care were received by residents from Clwyd and Gwynedd in Mersey and North West regional health authorities in 1989-90. Of these, 3,745 episodes were received in Liverpool, Wirral, North Manchester, Central Manchester and South Manchester health authorities. Information by hospital is given in the table.

Advice and Guidance

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all documents of advice or guidance, all circulars and all other publications it is currently his intention that his Department shall publish in the 12 months from 1 January in respect of (a) the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill and (b) other aspects of the health service in Wales, together with any projected joint publications.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is not possible to develop such a list but the tables in chapter 4 of "NHS Wales: Agenda for Action", a copy of which is in the Library, identify the key management actions to be addressed in 1991 and beyond.

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has offered to Pembrokeshire district health authority and other district health authorities in Wales on the way in which any all-authority national health service trust would operate and the regime under which he would expect such a trust to be regulated in its relations to any purchasing authority and in regard to the national health service directorate in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: All national health service trusts operate under common provisions to provide contractually-based health care to purchasing authorities for their resident populations. The main regulatory factor involving the national health service directorate will be the external finance limit allocated to a trust in any given year.

Pembrokeshire district health authority has received advice on these issues, and others relating to the detail of its own trust proposal and my officials will continue to be available to assist the authority and to other potential applicants in Wales.

United States of America (Agricultural Support)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on direct and indirect support to agriculture by the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Provisional estimates by the Organisation of Economic Co-operation and Development are that total transfers to United States agriculture were some US $67 billion in 1989; and $46 billion of this was directly funded by taxpayers, the remainder by consumers.

New Hospital, West Glamorgan

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his letter to the right hon. Member for Aberavon of 13 September 1990 concerning West Glamorgan area health authority's proposal to build a new hospital, whether he will now announce the Treasury's decision.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Following the submission by West Glamorgan health authority of an approval in principle for the proposed new district general hospital to serve Neath and Port Talbot, the Department requested on 13 September 1990 further information in the form of a business plan. The aim of this business plan is to demonstrate the viability of the development in the new purchaser-provider environment.

The Treasury will reach a decision on the approval in principle submission once this information has been provided.

Salmonella

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had regarding the outbreak of salmonella food poisoning in Ely hospital, Cardiff, in 1990 and its future prevention.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Discussions have taken place between officials of the Welsh Office and the Department of Health about the relevant guidance to the national health service.

Gulf Crisis

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to enable Welsh businesses, especially those in the holiday airline and other fields directly affected by the economic impact of the Gulf crisis, to weather the financial problems facing them at the present time.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government will continue the fight against inflation and the Welsh Office and other agencies will respond swiftly to opportunities as they arise. It is too early to assess the impact which the present action in the Gulf may have upon the Welsh economy.

New Towns

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he has now completed the review of the new town responsibilities of the Development Board for Rural Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Development Board for Rural Wales and its predecessor body, Mid Wales Development Corporation, have worked effectively to achieve a doubling of the population of Newtown, Powys. With that target virtually reached, I have concluded that further development of the community as a new town—whether on the basis of New Towns Act powers or of other provisions in the Development of Rural Wales Act—would not be justified. I am now asking the board to dispose of its housing and community assets by 31 March 1993. That transfer will be effected by the provisions of section 172 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. I am also asking the board to intensify its consideration of means by which its industrial and commercial assets in Newtown can be disposed of to the private sector on acceptable terms.

Teacher Training

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to examine the needs and provision of in-service teacher training in relation to the requirements of the national curriculum in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Yesterday I approved the setting up of an advisory group to act as forum for the exchange of ideas, view points and initiatives on national curriculum teacher training and related activities.

The membership will consist of representatives from local authorities, the Welsh Joint Education Committee, the Curriculum Council for Wales and other bodies currently involved in the field of education. This group will have the status of an advisory non-departmental public body.

National Curriculum

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will announce his conclusions on the application of the national curriculum in Wales for key stage 4.

Mr. David Hunt: I have considered the need for flexibility and pupil choice in key stage 4 of the national curriculum in Wales, and have sought the views of the Curriculum Council for Wales, local education authorities and other interested parties. After consideration of their responses, and subject to the satisfactory completion of the necessary statutory procedures, I intend that key stage 4 of the national curriculum in Wales should comprise the following elements:

All pupils should study English, mathematics, science and, where Welsh is a core subject in Welsh-speaking schools, Welsh to GCSE level. All pupils should study technology and a modern foreign language in key stage 4 but not necessarily to GCSE level; where Welsh is a non-core foundation subject this will also be the requirement, except for those pupils attending schools which are exempted from the compulsory teaching of Welsh at key stage 4. Pupils should be required to study a full course to GCSE in either history or geography or shorter courses in both these subjects, possibly taken in combination. All pupils in Wales should undertake physical education as a compulsory subject during key stage 4.

In reaching my conclusions I have not overlooked the importance of art, music and other creative subjects. Although I do not propose that art and music should be compulsory at key stage 4, I would encourage schools to develop in their pupils a lasting interest in creative activity throughout their compulsory schooling both within the formal curriculum and through extra-curricular activity. Thus I would expect all schools to offer art and music, and the other foundation subjects, to GCSE level to allow pupils to continue their studies if they so choose.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Visual Handicap

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many registered (a) blind people and (b) partially sighted people will receive within the disability living allowance (i) lower rate attendance component, (ii) middle rate attendance component, (iii) higher rate attendance component, (iv) lower rate mobility component and (v) higher rate mobility component.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Caenarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 18 December at column 138 which gives the numbers of visually impaired people expected to qualify for each of the rates of the disability living allowance. These figures, of course, include those who are registered blind or partially sighted.

Rebates (War Pensioners)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will bring forward legislation to require local authorities to disregard war pensions in the calculation of housing benefit and community charge rebate; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Local authorities already have the discretion to disregard war widow's and war disablement pension in excess of the statutory £10 weekly disregard when assessing entitlement to housing benefit and community charge benefit. The special payments for pre-1973 war widows—presently £40 weekly—are fully disregarded. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Benefits and Allowances

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people made a fresh claim or renewal claim for attendance allowance within the last year; how many fresh claims were awarded the higher rate, the lower rate and how many were denied benefit; how many people originally denied attendance allowance are awarded benefit on review; how many people awarded the lower rate of attendance allowance were subsequently paid the higher rate upon requesting a review; how many people awarded attendance allowance at the lower rate lost the benefit entirely as a result of requesting a review; what is the average period for which attendance allowance is paid; in how many cases attendance allowance is paid in respect of babies under two years, and of these how many are awarded the higher and lower rates; what is the average length of time from a claim for attendance allowance and the time the claimant is notified of the decision; and what is the average time taken from the request for a review to the time of a decision.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

—In 1989 there were 365,000 initial claims to attendance allowance.

—In 1989 of the decisions on initial claims to attendance allowance 84,000 resulted in an award at the higher rate, 145,000 in an award at the lower rate and 101,000 were rejected. These decisions do not exclusively relate to the claims received in the same period.

—The total number of awards of attendance allowance, including renewal claims, where the award changed from the lower to the higher rate for the 12 month period ending 30 September 1990 was 31,000.

—In the period April 1990 to December 1990 there were 4,800 awards of attendance allowance to children under two years.

—The average clearance time for initial claims to attendance allowance was 7·2 weeks for the year 1989-90.

—The average clearance time for attendance allowance reviews was 13·9 weeks for the year 1989-90.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether all rates of the proposed disability allowance will be disregarded in full for the purpose of calculating income-related benefits.

Mr. Scott: Disability living allowance will be treated in exactly the same way in the calculation of income-related benefits as the two benefits it will replace: attendance allowance for those disabled before age 65 and mobility allowance. As with attendance allowance, the care component will be regarded as available to help meet the care costs of income support claimants in residential care and nursing homes. Otherwise all rates of the new benefit will be wholly disregarded in calculating entitlement to income-related benefits.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the qualifying conditions for each component and each rate of the proposed disability allowance.

Mr. Scott: The conditions of entitlement to disability living allowance are set out in the Disability Living Allowance and Disability Working Allowance Bill currently before Parliament and in the notes on clauses, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local offices of his Department exceeded their social fund allocations for (a) budgeting loans, (b) crisis loans and (c) community care grants between the time of the High Court decision in February and the issue of new directions in September.

Mr. Scott: No office exceeded its social fund allocation for either loans or grants as a result of the judicial review. Further allocations were made where necessary to offices which faced additional expenditure following the review. Lists of those allocations were placed in the Library in March and September 1990.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the standard rates for the cost of care and maximum rates now payable from the independent living fund; and how these rates were fixed.

Miss Widdecombe: The standard hourly rates for the cost of care and the overall maximum amounts payable from the independent living fund are set out in the table.

In setting these amounts the trustees of the fund had regard to the cost of care provided by private carers and by care agencies in different parts of the country.

Area	Hourly rate (£) (day care)	Night care (£) (per night)	Overall maximum (£) (weekly)
London	4·50	30	400
South[1]	4·00	30	380
Elsewhere	3·50	25	325

[1] Southern counties of England excluding Devon, Cornwall, Norfolk and Suffolk, up to the northern borders of Gloucestershire, Oxfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Bedfordshire and Cambridgeshire.

Refurbishment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, for each of his Department's offices in the Doncaster area, what refurbishment plans are being considered; what is the nature of the work envisaged; and when was the last time they were each refurbished.

Miss Widdecombe: Two offices are involved.

Doncaster East, St. Peters House: the caller area was upgraded two years ago and recent improvements have been made to the staff areas. Future proposals involve refurbishment of all the toilets and further improvements to staff and caller areas, including the provision of wheelchair access. Full redecoration is planned for 1994.

Doncaster West, Castle House: the caller area was upgraded two years ago and recent improvements have been made to the staff areas. Refurbishment of all toilets commenced in 1989. Future plans include improvements to the main foyer, staff restaurant and car park.

Social Fund Loans (Doncaster)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social fund loan applications were refused by each of his Department's offices in the Doncaster area during the financial years (a) 1989-90 and (b) 1990-91 to date, due to perceived inability to repay; and what advice was recommended to those refused.

Mr. Scott: The table shows the number of applications recorded as refused on grounds of inability to repay.

	April 1989-March 1990	April 1990-December 1990
Doncaster East	31	33
Doncaster West	107	43
Wath on Dearne	31	35

All decision letters advise applicants of their right to ask for a review and refer to the citizens advice bureau or local law centre as a source of general advice. Money advice is normally offered to applicants found to be in financial difficulty, including such cases where an applicant is refused because of a perceived inability to repay.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in the Official Report the temperatures used to trigger severe weather payments recorded at the Eskdalemuir weather station for each day during the last two weeks of 1990 and the first two weeks of 1991.

Mr. Scott: A weather station will trigger if there has been a period of seven consecutive days, during which the average mean daily temperature is 0 deg. C or less.

Eskdalemuir weather station did not trigger on any day during the last two weeks of 1990, or the first two weeks of 1991. The mean temperature for the seven days ending Sunday 13 January was recorded as −0·8 deg. C when the station did trigger.

Full details of average mean daily temperatures recorded at all the weather stations can be found in the Library.

Pensioners

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the levels of pension and other items of support for pensioners available in each of the EC countries indicating where appropriate the level of contribution by the individual.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend to the 1989 edition of the Department's publication "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Communities", a copy of which is in the Library. These set out the social security arrangements in the 12 member states of the EC, showing both national currency and sterling equivalent, converted according to the purchasing power parity figures as explained in the introduction to the tables. The 1990 tables will be available shortly. I regret that information on other items of support for pensioners in other EC countries is not generally available.

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance has been given to his Department's officers on dealing with claims for the severe disability premium in the light of commissioners' decision CIS 372/90.

Miss Widdecombe: To date no formal guidance has been issued in the light of this decision which is the subject of appeal proceedings.

Mobility Costs

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the tables in the OPCS reports which indicate the mobility costs of people with behaviour disorders as against those of people with physical handicaps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 20 December 1990]: The information requested is not contained in the tables published in the OPCS reports. We have conducted our own detailed analysis from the OPCS data of the people who were receiving mobility allowance at the time the survey was carried out, compared with those whom we expect to come onto the new lower rate of the disability living allowance. This analysis of the OPCS data indicates that those already in receipt of mobility allowance had total extra costs of around £13 per week, compared with on average around £6 per week for those who are expected to receive the new lower rate mobility component. The figure of £13 would, of course, be lower if everyone with a physical handicap, including many with comparatively minor physical ailments and thus not receiving mobility allowance, were included.

EMPLOYMENT

Sheltered Placement Scheme

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to increase the grant threshold per capita for the sheltered placement scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: We are currently considering this matter and hope to make an announcement as soon as possible.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the relationship between TECs and compacts.

Mr. Jackson: TECs, with local education authority agreement, may take up contracts for existing compacts currently held with my Department. Additionally, TECs will be asked to establish compacts in those remaining urban programme authority areas in England which are not currently covered by compact arrangements.

Disabled Workers

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives exist to assist the disabled to gain employment within the technology-based industries.

Mr. Jackson: My Department's sheltered employment programme provides employment opportunities in technology-based industries, among others, for people with severe disabilities. The special aids to employment scheme includes the provision of special computer equipment and other technological aids which are designed to help people with disabilities to get and keep jobs; these aids can be used by people working in technology-based industries. Among the training opportunities provided through the employment training and youth training programmes, information technology centres have a good record of providing technology related training for people with disabilities.

My Department has many other specialist and general services which can help people with disabilities find work, including employment in technology-based industries.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives he has undertaken over the past three years to encourage employers to provide work place facilities which would assist the employment of disabled persons.

Mr. Jackson: My Department operates a number of initiatives, including:

(a) The Disablement Advisory Service which helps employers of all sizes and in all types of industry and commerce to adopt and implement good policies and practices in the employment of people with disabilities;

(b) A range of special schemes available to help with the employment of people with disabilities, in particular: special aids to employment scheme which provides special equipment which someone with a disability needs to do a particular job; adaptations to premises and equipment scheme which provides a grant towards the cost of necessary adaptations to an employer's premises or equipment to enable someone with a disability to be employed; personal reader service which helps with the cost of a sighted reader for visually handicapped people.

(c) The sheltered employment programme, within which the sheltered placement scheme provides integrated employment opportunities for people with severe disabilities and sheltered workshops provide jobs in Remploy factories and with local authorities and voluntary bodies;
(d) The code of good practice on the employment of disabled people, launched in 1984, which offers practical guidance to employers on adopting good policies and practices in the employment of people with disabilities;
(e) A new symbol launched on 16 October 1990 which gives employers a simple, practical and effective means of showing that they are committed to good policies and practices in the employment of people with disabilities.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the numbers of disabled people who are self-employed.

Mr. Jackson: Research commissioned by my Department's employment service and undertaken by Social and Community Planning Research estimated that there were 143,000 people with disabilities in self-employment. The findings of this research were published in "Employment and Handicap", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the numbers of disabled people employed within the area of information technology.

Mr. Jackson: Information is not available in the form requested. However, a report of research commissioned by my Department's employment service and undertaken by Social and Community Planning Research contains some information on the type of work undertaken by people with disabilities. A copy of the report, "Employment and Handicap" is in the Library.

Road Transport Industry Training Board

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which sources of information are used by the road transport industry training board to ensure that all relevant businesses comply with the levy regulations.

Mr. Jackson: The road transport industry training board uses all relevant sources of information including local knowledge from its training officers, trade and local press and information supplied by employers. These sources are used as the basis for enquiries to companies to ascertain if they are in-scope to the board's levy regulations. Payment of levy is based on statutory returns provided by in-scope companies.

Sky Television

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits for Australian and New Zealand citizens have (a) been applied for and (b) been granted in respect of applications from Sky Television and British Sky Broadcasting in each of the past three years.

Mr. Jackson: No applications for a citizen of New Zealand has been made by either company in the last three years. Sky Television applied for and was granted one work permit in 1989 and one in 1990 in respect of Australian citizens.

SCOTLAND

Schools

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total capital expenditure on local authority schools in Scotland in each year since 1978, in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is given in the table which has been compiled from local authority financial returns. The fall in expenditure in real terms during the period reflects a substantial and progressive decline in pupil numbers which has reduced the requirement for new school building.

Capital expenditure by local authorities on schools

£ million

Year	At outturn prices	At 1989-90 prices
1978-79	51·885	121·400
1979-80	47·598	95·448
1980-81	52·391	88·783
1981-82	60·404	93·350
1982-83	52·378	75·577
1983-84	45·416	62·635
1984-85	45·945	60·302
1985-86	51·124	63·634
1986-87	46·672	56·172
1987-88	47·742	54·492
1988-89	59·392	63·178
1989-90	67·335	67·335

The figures include expenditure on nursery, primary, secondary and special schools.

Outturn figures have been converted to 1989-90 prices using the GDP deflator.

River Pollution

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Clyde Purification Board to discuss the likely effects of opencast mining in the Douglas valley; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has not met representatives of the Clyde river purification board for this purpose and he has no plans to do so.

Discharges of trade effluent from opencast mines require the consent of the appropriate river purification board; applications for consent are advertised in accordance with section 36(1)(a) of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Any representations received about the likely effects of such discharges on the water environment are carefully considered by the board in deciding whether, and subject to what conditions, consent should be granted.

The Gulf

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers and categories of NHS staff who are being called up for military service in the Gulf; and what assessment he has made of the consequences of this call-up on the finances of the NHS, and on the quality of service and waiting lists at hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 119 NHS staff in Scotland have been called up for military service in categories as follows:

Category	Number
Doctors	27
Nurses	74
Laboratory staff	4
Paramedical staff	4
Administrative/Clerical staff	4
Pharmacy staff	2
Ancillary staff	3
Ambulanceman	1

The call up will have some effect on the finances of the NHS but it is not possible to quantify at this stage.

The effect on quality of service and hospital waiting lists cannot readily be determined. The number of staff being called up is a very small percentage of the total and I would expect health boards to maintain the highest level and quality of service to patients.

Overseas Voters

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many former British residents living overseas have applied to be registered for voting in general elections for each constituency in Scotland under the Representation of the People Act 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on overseas electors is not held centrally. The Government intend to obtain this information from electoral registration officers and to present it to Parliament early in 1991.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the latest list of hospitals in Strathclyde which are known to him or the relevant health boards to be considering trust status.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All hospitals and other units within the national health service have been encouraged to consider the possibility of national health service trust status.

Health Service

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what are the executive powers of the health board general managers group; and what is its relationship to himself and to the national health service chief executive;

(2) on what basis the health board general managers group may jointly implement Whitley council agreements based on local health board flexibility;

(3) for what reasons the health board general managers group is to use the HAY job evaluation system as part of the process of implementing advanced letter (PTB) 3/90; and if the decision is binding on all health boards in Scotland;

(4) who authorised the health board general managers group to consider joint implementation of advanced letter (PTB) 3/90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health board general managers as a group have no executive powers and are not responsible for implementing Whitley council agreements; the conclusions they may reach on the matters that come before them are not binding on individual health boards. The chief executive, with his senior colleagues, meets general managers regularly to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Individual health boards will implement advance letter (PTB) 3/90, and will each consider whether there would be advantage in adopting the HAY job evaluation system for works and estates staff. The steps taken by individual health boards to implement the agreement in their areas will follow the procedures prescribed in the advance letter.

Only health boards are authorised to implement Whitley council agreements which allow local health board flexibility.

Health Boards

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial allocations he has made to health boards for 1991-92.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has allocated £2,505·735 million to health boards to meet their expenditure commitment on hospital and community health services in 1991-92. The figure includes £2,244·950 million to meet gross recurrent expenditure commitments, £208·575 million to meet gross capital expenditure commitments, £38·857 million for GP team staff £11·353 million for GP premises and £2 million for GP computers.

The allocation, taken with health board's own cash-releasing efficiency savings, gives an increase in available resources of 10·75 per cent. It amounts to an extra £225 million for health boards in Scotland.

There has been a substantial increase in the resources for nurse training and for HIV and AIDS related services and an additional moneys have been made available to help reduce junior doctors' hours.

Having adjusted for the movement of resources from revenue to capital to account for the new definition of capital, the gross capital amounts available to boards will be £208 million, representing a 10·8 per cent. increase over 1990-91. The capital allocation will continue the high level of investment in hospital building projects of recent years. Substantial investment will be made in major hospital projects now under construction including Ayr hospital, the St. John's hospital in Lothian, the Royal Cornhill hospital in Grampian, the Perth royal infirmary, Tayside, the Western Isles hospital in Stornoway, West Fife DGH phase II in Dunfermline, the spinal injuries unit at Southern general hospital, Glasgow and Udston hospital in Lanark. It will also provide the resources to progress new hospital developments at Oban, Campbeltown, Elgin, Peterhead and Crieff and for improvements to GP surgeries in highland and the island boards.

Details of individual board allocations are contained in the table:

Health board allocations: 1991-92

Health board	HCH revenue allocation[1] £000s	Final allocation for practice team staff 1991-92 £000s	Final allocation for premises 1991-92 £000s	HCH capital allocation[1] £000s

[1] These allocations include a transfer of some £25 million from revenue to capital to reflect a change in the definition of capital expenditure from 1 April 1991.

A further £59·140 million revenue, £22·797 million capital and £2·819 million general medical services will be distributed during the year for cardiac surgery, hospice funding, computer development and other specific initiatives.

Health Expenditure

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide (a) the total gross allocation to Scotland for health expenditure in the year 1991-92, (b) a breakdown of the revenue and capital allocation components of the total gross allocation and (c) a breakdown of the total gross allocation and the revenue and capital allocation components of it, for each of the regional health authorities.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total gross allocation to Scotland for health expenditure in 1991-92 is £3,383 million, of which £3,148 million is for revenue expenditure. As regards revenue and capital allocations to individual health boards, I refer the hon. Member to my answer today to the question from my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker).

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the extent of the importation of waste materials into Scotland during (a) 1987-88, (b) 1988-89 and (c) 1989-90 by major subject heading; and if he will divide these data into hazardous, toxic or other waste.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Waste disposal authorities have reported imports of waste to Scotland for the calendar years 1987, 1988 and 1989 as shown in the following table. Imports of "toxic waste" are not separately identified but 942 tonnes of "other waste" — neither "special" nor "hazardous"—were imported from England and Wales in 1989, the only year for which such figures are available.

"Hazardous waste" is defined in the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988, which govern movements of such waste into and out of Great Britain. "Special waste" is defined in the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980, which relate to movements of such waste within Great Britain.

Year	Type of waste	Quantity (Tonnes)
1987	Waste imported from outside Great Britain	15
	Special waste imported from England and Wales	[1]—
1988	Hazardous waste imported from outside Great Britain	453
	Special waste imported from England and Wales	4,867
1989	Hazardous waste imported from outside Great Britain	480
	Special waste imported from England and Wales	1,000

Scottish Homes

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown of Scottish Homes sales under the rents to mortgage scheme in each of Scottish Homes district office areas from October 1989 to the nearest available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table:

Position at 31 December 1990

Scottish Homes district office area	Sales
Edinburgh	3
Lothian and Borders	28
Central	9
Fife	11
Grampian	17
Tayside	7
Highlands and Islands	4
Lanarkshire	2
Renfrew and Inverclyde	14
Ayrshire, Dumfries and Galloway	8
Glasgow North and East	6
Glasgow South	1
Glasgow West	1
TOTAL	111

In addition, nine sales have been made to tenants of new town development corporations.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what income Scottish Homes received in capital receipts from house sales in the third quarter of 1990-91 from (a) right-to-buy sales, (b) rents-to-mortgage sales, (c) sales under the portable discount scheme and (d) vacant possession sales.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Right to Buy sales	10·430
Rent to Mortgage sales	0·874
Portable Discount scheme	0·276
Vacant Possession sales	0·908
Total	12·488

All the above figures include receipts from miscellaneous items such as building insurance and repair funds. Figures net of these miscellaneous items are not currently available for each type of sale.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what income Scottish Homes has received from (a) enabling receipts, (b) stock disposal, (c) voluntary transfers, (d) house sales and (e) disposal of non-housing assets in the first, second and third quarters of 1990-91.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table.

	1st Quarter	2nd Quarter	3rd Quarter	Total to 31 December 1990
	£ million	£ million	£ million	£ million

Patents

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will bring forward proposals to simplify the laws concerning the protection of patents in Scotland and establish a Scottish patents court similar to the Patents county court in England.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish arrangements for patent litigation were most recently reviewed by a working party under the chairmanship of the hon. Lord Jauncey which concluded that the Court of Session should retain exclusive jurisdiction and that a number of changes should be made to the rules of court to streamline procedures, avoid unnecessary delays and reduce costs. These changes will shortly be brought into effect by the making of amendments to the rules of court. Patent law in the United Kingdom has recently been amended by parts V and VI of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has no proposals for further changes.

School Leavers

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures available for the (a) number and (b) percentage of Scottish school leavers with no qualifications.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number and the percentage of Scottish school leavers who left during session 1988-89 with no Scottish Certificate of Education qualifications were 8,623 and 11·9 per cent. respectively.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a table for recorded crime in Scotland comparable with that provided on 30 October 1990, Official Report, columns 477-80, on crime statistics in Strathclyde.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is available from Scottish Office Home and Health Department statistical bulletins. Information for the years 1980 to 1989 is published in the bulletin entitled "Recorded Crime in Scotland, 1989", and for the year 1979 is published in "Recorded Crime in Scotland, 1988". Copies of these bulletins are in the Library.

M8 (Lighting)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to light the M8 motorway from the St. James intersection at Glasgow airport to Greenock.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

Oil Pollution

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what it costs to clean up the oil spillage around the coast of the River Clyde resulting from the accident caused by the Argyle and Clyde health board; and which bodies paid for this.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Business Rates

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of non-payment of business rates for the financial years 1989-90 and 1990-91 in Strathclyde region.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is not available centrally.

Procurator Fiscal Service

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vacancies and at what grades exist for professionally qualified staff in the procurator fiscal service.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are seven vacancies at legal assistant grade.

Courts Vacancies

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vacancies and at what grades exist for staff in the employment of Scottish courts administrations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 14 January 1991, there were seven unfilled posts in the Scottish court service, three in the AO grade, two in the typist grades, and two in the support grades.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vacancies and at what grades exist for staff in the general department of the Court of Session.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no vacancies at any grade in the general department of the Court of Session.

Civil Servants

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many civil servants and at what grades are currently employed in the private offices of Ministers in the Scottish Office.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

Grade	Number
Grade 5	1
Senior Executive Officer	1
Higher Executive Officer	2
Higher Executive Officer (Development)	3
Executive Officer	4
Adminstrative Officer	6
Personal Secretary	7
Typist	1

In addition, one special adviser is attached to my office.

Further Education Unit

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has completed his examination of the case for a Scottish further education unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Consideration of the case has now been completed and my right hon. Friend and I have decided to reconstitute the curriculum advice and support team—CAST—as a Scottish further education unit with effect from 1 April 1991. The new unit will continue to be located at Jordanhill college, but will have a wider remit than CAST to enable it to provide better support to further education colleges in implementing the Government's recent reforms of college management. It will also be well placed to meet new needs such as those arising from the completion of the single European market when greater labour mobility will have implications for vocational education and training.

In addition to core funding of £294,000 for 1991-92, a further £150,000 will be made available from 1 April 1991. From 1 April 1992 an additional £150,000 will be made available by the transfer of a proportion of the in-service training funding currently made to the Jordanhill college by the Scottish Office education department. I expect the new unit to liaise closely with the Scottish school of further education, Jordanhill college, and others active in further education in Scotland to meet our needs for a highly skilled work force.

Education (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the allocated expenditure for local authority capital expenditure on education in Scotland in every year since 1979 at 1990-91 prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 January 1991]: Details of consents to local authorities to incur capital expenditure on educational building are given in the table:

Capital consent allocations for educational building
£ million at 1990-91 prices

Year	Allocations
1979-80	116·094
1980-81	97·838

1989-90	66·695
1990-91	61·669

Fish Marketing

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the grant of European Community or national funds for the marketing and processing of fisheries and aquaculture produce and the improvement of facilities at fishing ports under EC regulation 4028/86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 January 1991]: Support for the processing and marketing of fisheries and aquaculture produce has been available until recently under EC regulation 355/77. Scottish companies have a high success rate: since the inception of the scheme over 130 awards have been made attracting 25 per cent. grant worth some £9 million. In the last round, 11 companies were awarded £1·1 million in December 1990. Successful projects also receive United Kingdom Government grant of at least 8 per cent. of project costs.

Regulation 355/77 is being replaced, but support will continue. Bilateral discussions with the European Commission on a Community support framework for the United Kingdom under EC regulation 4042/89 are at an advanced stage. Agreement is expected next month opening the way for EC grant aid for projects seeking to improve the marketing and processing of fisheries and aquaculture produce. Administrative arrangements for the new scheme are already in place with an EC grant rate of up to 30 per cent. being available for Scottish projects along with a national back-up grant of 5 per cent.

United Kingdom companies may apply for grants for the improvement of facilities at fishing ports under EC regulation 4028/86. Two Scottish applications have already been successful in this regard and four new applications are with the Commission for consideration.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1990 reported by the national museums and galleries in Scotland, broken down into the individual institutions but including their outstations, with the figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: [holding answer 21 January 1991]: The information is as follows:

	1990	Percentage Change since 1989
National Galleries of Scotland	808,803	+13·98
National Museums of Scotland	1,001,827	+11·39

The national galleries of Scotland comprise the national gallery of Scotland, the Scottish national gallery of modern art and the Scottish national portrait gallery. The national museums of Scotland comprise the royal museum of Scotland buildings at Chambers street and Queen street, Edinburgh, the Scottish agricultural museum, the Scottish united services museum, the museum of flight and the Shambellie museum of costume.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of people registered for community charge payments in each regional authority for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will list the percentage changes in each case compared with the previous year's figures.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 21 January 1991]: The available information, obtained from returns by community charges registration officers, is set out in the table. The figures include students, who are liable for only 20 per cent. of the community charge, but exclude those liable for collective or standard charges. The October 1988 figures were provisional, and unavailable for some areas.

Electoral Registers

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of electors registered in each Scottish parliamentary constituency for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will list the percentage changes which have taken place in each case compared with the previous year's figures.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 21 January 1991]: The information is set out in the table.

Concessionary Travel

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he will establish a nationwide scheme of assistance for retirement pensioners to travel at concessionary rates of 75 per cent. or 66 per cent. on road and rail transport in off-peak hours;

(2) whether he will establish a nationwide scheme of assistance for retirement pensioners to travel free on road and rail transport at off-peak hours.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 January 1991]: We have no plans to change the present arrangements. Local authorities already have adequate powers to provide travel concessions in their areas and there are schemes for free or cheap travel on local public transport in all areas of Scotland. Local authorities may, if they choose, act jointly with other local authorities to establish a scheme which would operate throughout their areas. British Rail and the main long distance coach operators also have their own travel concession arrangements.

ENVIRONMENT

Warwickshire County Council

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what basis his Department assessed Warwickshire county council to earn interest of £6·7 million as set out in the standard spending assessment for 1991-92.

Mr. Key: The basis of the assessment is set out in paragraphs 3.50 and 3.51 of the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) which was approved by the House on 18 January 1990. The assessment for interest receipts is calculated in proportion to an authority's standard spending assessment for all services, except the capital financing element.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have been exempted from paying the community charge in each category of exemption in the Doncaster local authority area.

Mr. Key: The information returned by the local authority is as follows:

Numbers of persons exempt from community charge, 1 June 1990

	Number
Severely mentally impaired	418
Patients whose main residence is a National Health Service hospital	545
People whose sole or main residence is in a residential care home, a nursing home, a private hospital or a hostel providing care, who are receiving care	1,676
Aged 18 and in receipt of child benefit, or aged 18 or 19 and on full-time courses of further education	542
Members of religious communities	34

[1] People in detention, members of visiting forces, international headquarters and defence organisations and their dependants, including diplomats. These categories have been combined because of the small numbers involved.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table of expenditure on city grant in 1989-90, showing final expenditure for the year broken down by standard region, with Greater London shown as a separate region.

Mr. Key: The information requested is as follows:

East Midlands	3,368,489
London	695,633
Merseyside	279,238
Northern	1,762,354
North West	1,653,486
South West	16,387
West Midlands	2,957,808
Yorkshire and Humberside	760,632
Total	11,494,027

This excludes city grant in urban development corporations.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table showing the expected income from the uniform business rate in 1990-91, broken down by standard regions with Greater London shown as a separate region and a similar table showing the level of income had no transitional arrangement been in place.

Mr. Key: The information is not available in exactly the form requested. The following table shows the estimated gross income from non-domestic rates for each region before and after the transitional arrangements are applied. The figures do not include the effects of reliefs for empty or charitable property or other reliefs nor any allowance for losses in collection.

	Gross yield (£m)
	Without transitional arrangements	With transitional arrangements
Northern	386	483
Yorks and Humberside	682	800
North West	858	1,100
East Midlands	559	620
West Midlands	713	888
East Anglia	341	316
London	3,462	2,882
South East	2,214	1,985
South West	719	666
England	9,915	9,741

Gross yield without transition is equal to the gross rateable value on proposed local rating lists at 20 December 1989 multiplied by the 1990-91 non-domestic multiplier. Properties on the central rating list and Crown property are excluded.

Building Regulations

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in specifying minimum fire resistance periods for certain building groups in the proposed amendments to approved document B of the Building

Regulations (England and Wales), what account he has taken of the need to provide adequate protection for fire fighters in low rise buildings and basements.

Mr. Yeo: The primary purpose of part B of the Building Regulations 1985 is the protection of life in the event of fire, and the consultation proposals on amendments to these provisions took account of the safety of firefighters as well as of other persons. In the light of comments received, the Fire Advisory Panel and the Building Regulations Advisory Committee are now considering whether the original proposals, including those relating to fire resistance periods, require to be modified to provide a greater degree of protection for fire fighters, particularly in low-rise buildings and basements.

Endangered Species

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he is giving to the possibilities afforded by the DNA techniques developed by Professor Alec Jeffreys, FRS, of the university of Leicester for the enhanced breeding of captive animals from endangered species; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I am aware of the investigations which are being carried out connected with the possible application of Professor Jeffreys' DNA techniques and I recognise that this biotechnology may have a part to play in the conservation of endangered species. However, research is still continuing into these techniques and it is too soon to make a proper assessment of their full potential.

Specialist Housing

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list, for every local authority in England, the number of non-sheltered housing units for the elderly started by (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) the private sector in 1989;

(2) if he will list, for each local authority in England, the number of sheltered housing units started by (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) the private sector in 1989.

Mr. Yeo: The available figures for starts of newly-built dwellings of these types are published in table 11 of "Local Housing Statistics: England and Wales, No. 94, July 1990", a copy of which is in the Library. Local authorities also report the number of their own dwellings which have been converted or improved to provide dwellings suitable for the elderly, both sheltered and other, and this is listed in table 13 of the above publication.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list, for each local authority area in England, the number of specialist housing units for chronically sick and disabled people provided by (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) the private sector as of 1989-90;

(2) if he will list, for each local authority in England, the number of specialist units of accommodation available for elderly people provided by (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) the private sector as of 1989-90.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities report the number of their own dwellings, and estimates of those owned by housing associations and in the private sector, which have been specially designed or adapted for use by the elderly or disabled in their annual Housing Investment Programme returns (HIP1). The available figures for 1 April 1990 appear in "1990 HIP1 All Items Print". Local authority dwellings for the elderly appear in columns A2a1 (sheltered) and A2b1 (others) and for the disabled in columns A2c1 (wheelchair) and A2d1 (other). The small number of dwellings owned by the local authorities outside their areas are shown at columns A2a6 to A2d6. Corresponding figures for housing associations and the private sector appear in columns A2a2 to A2d2, and columns A2a4 to A2d4 respectively. A copy of the document is in the Library.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority in England, the number of households assessed as needing specialist accommodation for (a) the elderly and (b) the disabled, in 1989-90.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities report estimates of the number of households in their area who require specialist elderly or disabled dwellings in their annual housing investment programme returns (HIP1). The available figures for 1 April 1990 appear in columns B2a1 and B2b1 respectively, of "1990 HIP1 All Items Print". A copy of the document is in the Library.

Rural Housing

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those local authorities which are eligible to bid for a share of the £2 million credit approvals he has announced for low-cost rural housing.

Mr. Yeo: The rural housing programme for 1991-92 totals £50 million of supplementary credit approvals, not £2 million. All English local authorities, except for London boroughs and the City of London, metropolitan district councils, and other districts designated under the urban programme, are eligible to submit bids under the programme.

County Hall, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the maintenance costs of County hall, London SE1, over the past two years.

Mr. Key: I understand from the London residuary body that the cost of maintaining County hall in 1989-90 was £3·8 million and is estimated at £2·7 million for 1990-91. For this purpose maintenance includes security, insurance, cleaning and energy costs as well as repairs and day-to-day maintenance.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the current annualised cost of keeping County hall, London SE1 empty.

Mr. Key: The London residuary body estimates that, if it were not to dispose of County hall in 1991-92, the cost of repairs and maintenance, security, insurance and energy in that year would be £2·5 million.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table of expenditure from his Department on urban development corporations and other forms of public support to urban development corporations in 1989-90, showing separately his Department's grant to urban development corporations and the total cost to the Exchequer of forms of tax reliefs available to urban development corporation areas, with the figures to be shown separately for each urban development corporation.

Mr. Key: Public funding for urban development corporations in 1989-90 was comprised entirely of Departmental grant-in-aid, set out in the table. Tax reliefs are not generally applied to corporation areas, but are available in enterprise zones, some of which overlap with urban development corporation areas. Data on reliefs just for these overlapping areas is not readily available.

Fire Safety

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses there have been to date on his Department's proposed changes to part B of the Building Regulations 1985 relating to the reduction of five resistance periods, increased compartment sizes and relaxation of non-combustibility requirements; and if he will indicate the proportions in favour of these proposals and those against.

Sir George Young: Up to January 18, comments had been received from 220 different organisations, companies and individuals on the proposals for amendments to part B, Safety in fire, of the Building Regulations 1985. Of these:

- 10 per cent. were in favour of and 39 per cent. against the proposals relating to the reduction of fire resistance periods;
- 12 per cent. were in favour of and 27 per cent. against the proposals relating to compartmentation;
- 12 per cent. were in favour of and 20 per cent. against the proposals relating to the relaxation of non-combustibility requirements.

In each case, the remaining respondents expressed no firm view on this aspect of the proposals.

Waste Incineration

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received concerning the volume of toxic materials emitted by incineration of waste and related to the creation and properties of products of incomplete combustion.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 January 1991]: The Department has received reports from various sources, particularly Warren Spring laboratory, on emissions from waste incinerators, including information on the main toxic products of incomplete combustion. The most recent report from the Laboratory covering municipal solid waste incineration and dioxins (Ref. LR 776 PA), will be published in April.

Dioxins

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take action to ban all waste disposal methods and industries which produce dioxins; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 January 1991]: Waste incineration is the main identifiable industrial source of dioxins. It is also an important waste disposal option which reduces the pressure on landfill disposal. Emissions of dioxins can however be reduced to levels at or below the level of detection if efficient combustion and abatement is achieved. That is the aim of present controls on the industry in the United Kingdom, including the provisions of the European directives on municipal waste incineration plants.

Local Government

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has considered proposals other than from parish councils to involve communities in the affairs of local government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 21 January 1991]: A number of district and borough councils have adopted systems to involve their local communities in the delivery of services. This has not involved putting proposals to my right hon. Friend.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to include the financing of parish, community or town councils in the review of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 21 January 1991]: My right hon. Friend announced on 5 December that we shall be conducting a fundamental review of local government finance and structure. This will include the financing of statutory parish, community and town councils.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's policy on the introduction of parish councils in larger city areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 21 January 1991]: The guidelines to the Local Government Boundary Commission for England on the circumstances in which they should recommend the creation of parishes in urban areas are set out in paragraphs 14-23 of DOE circular 121/77 of 12 December 1977 (Local Government Act 1972: Parish Reviews).

Disability

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what discussions he plans to have with organisations representing disabled people and their carers, in his review of the community charge, to discuss the effects of the community charge on disabled people and their carers;

(2) what representations his Department has received concerning the impact of the community charge on disabled people and their carers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 21 January 1991]: I continue to receive representations from such organisations; their views on the community charge will be welcomed by my Department.

Land Development, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the sale by Liverpool city council of public open spaces to developers; if he will call in all development applications involved in inquiries by Merseyside police; if he will hold public inquiries into subsequent applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 21 January 1991]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received 45 letters, including those from the hon. Member, and a petition of 65 signatures. He has no plans for calling-in or holding inquiries into planning applications involving investigation by the Merseyside police. As I stated in my reply to a question by the hon. Member on 14 December at col. 518, the Secretary of State is unlikely to intervene unless applications raise planning issues of more than local importance.

Homelessness

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the Government's initiative on homelessness.

Sir George Young: The Government have committed significant resources to reduce the numbers sleeping out in London, to assist local authorities faced with severe homelessness pressures and to provide direct assistance through homelessness advice and support schemes. As I announced on 18 December, we are making available £96 million over three years to provide short-term direct access hostels for people sleeping on the streets and longer term accommodation in housing association flats and houses for those currently in hostels. Nick Hardwick, director of Centrepoint, has joined my team for six months to work on the development of this programme. £300 million is being allocated over this year and next to local authorities and housing associations in London and the south-east in order to reduce the extent to which they have to use bed and breakfast accommodation for homeless families. In addition we have expanded support to the voluntary sector to £2 million this year, and £4·5 million next year, to establish a national homelessness advice service and to run practical projects to help single homeless people find temporary and permanent accommodation.

HEALTH

Radiation Treatment

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were damaged by excess radiation treatment at the Royal Devon and Exeter hospital, Wonford in Exeter during the period 15 February 1988 to 12 July 1988; how many are alive; how many cases of compensation have been settled on agreed financial terms; and how many are still outstanding.

Mr. Dorrell: A total of 207 patients were treated on the miscalibrated radiotherapy unit. To date, Exeter health authority has been notified of the deaths of 134 patients and so far as the authority is aware the remaining 73 are alive.

I am advised by Exeter health authority that, of the 104 claims received so far, 38 have reached full and final settlement and 21 have reached agreed settlement on the element of the claims concerning pain, suffering and loss of amenity.

AIDS

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been infected by the AIDS virus through the infusion of whole blood or platelets.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people, other than haemophiliacs, are known to have been infected with the HIV virus through national health service blood transfusions; if he will categorise them according to the nature of their requirement for a blood transfusion; how many have developed AIDS; and how many have died.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Up to 31 December 1990, the total number of reports in the United Kingdom of recipients of blood transfusions infected with HIV is 135. This includes persons known to have been transfused in the United Kingdom, those transfused abroad and those where the place of transfusion is unknown.

The number known to have been transfused in the United Kingdom is 49. The number reported with AIDS is 28 of whom 20 are known to have died.

The information is not available centrally to categories the HIV-infected recipients by the nature of their requirement for blood transfusion.

Gulf Casualties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which national health service hospitals that are earmarked to assist in the Gulf dispute to accept casualties have also been granted trust status from 1 April; and if he will make a statement as to those hospitals' financial basis for the financial year.

Mr. Dorrell: Health authorities' plans for dealing with casualties from hostilities in the Gulf involve hospitals throughout the national health service. It is for health authorities to allocate cases to particular hospitals and information on which hospitals will be used is not available centrally.

The Government will provide extra money to meet the full costs of any Gulf casualties. We have told health authorities that they should spend what is necessary and we are giving guidance on how to account for and reclaim Gulf costs. This means that health authorities will be able to continue to use all the money in their normal allocations for their normal workload.

Neurological Disorders

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the grants made to voluntary organisations concerned with neurological disorders in 1990-91, 1989-90 and 1988-89.

Mr. Dorrell: Grants made to voluntary organisations concerned, at least in part, with people who suffer from neurological disorders, in so far as they can be identified, are shown in the table. Grants were awarded by the Department of Health either under section 64 of the Health Service and Public Health Act 1968 or through disbursement of retail prices index error funds.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he received from the chairman of Trent regional health authority its decision to endorse the application made by Doncaster royal infirmary and Montagu Mexborough hospital to become a national health service trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Trent regional health authority formally supported the application made by Doncaster royal infirmary and Montagu Mexborough hospital for trust status at its public meeting on 12 November 1990, and notified the Department of their decision on the same day.

Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the timetable for the third wave of national health service trust applications.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The timetable for third wave NHS trust applications will be broadly the same as for the second wave. On this basis, it would be as follows:

September 1991

All units will be invited to express an interest in applying for Trust status without commitment.

End April 1992

Potential Trusts complete and submit formal applications.

May-July 1992

Consultation by Regional Health Authorities on formal applications.

September 1992

Successful Trusts will be established, with the appointment of Trust Chairmen and non-executive directors.

October-March 1993

Trusts run in shadow form. Arrangements are made for transfer of assets and staff.

April 1993

Third wave NHS Trusts become operational.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultation he proposes to take in order to evaluate the first wave of national health service trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At the local level district health authorities will be closely engaged with NHS trusts in negotiating contracts for services. Trusts will have at least one public meeting each year to discuss their annual report and accounts. Nationally, trusts will be accountable through their business plans and in-year financial monitoring.

Abortions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by year for the last five years the number of abortions over 12 weeks' gestation performed on women under (a) 20 years, (b) 20 to 24 years, (c) 25 to 34 years and (d) over 34 years of age, resident in the Trent regional health authority area, and in each constituent district health authority thereof, respectively.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Births

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will list, for each of the past 10 years, the number of births by postal code of the residence of the mother of each of the following postal code areas (a) NN9, (b) NN14, (c) NN15, (d) NN16, (e) NN17, (f) NN18, (g) PE8 and (h) PE9.

Mr. Dorrell: The table gives the number of live births in the post code sectors specified. These statistics are not available prior to 1982.

Year	Post code sector
	NN9	NN14	NN15	NN16	NN17	NN18	PE8	PE9
1982	477	377	339	288	341	461	185	266

1988	513	404	355	345	399	476	194	306
1989	507	425	361	368	383	489	196	284

Information Technology

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what allowance has been made of the level of capital expenditure by local authorities on information technology for community care purposes in the assessment of central Government grants; and what was the estimate of total such expenditure on which this was assessed.

Mr. Dorrell: Supplementary credit approvals of £4·9 million are available in 1991-92 to help local authorities —LAs—meet the cost of purchasing software to assist them in the work which needs to be done effectively to develop, monitor and review the community care planning process.

The Government have issued to LAs annual capital guidelines—ACGs—of £85 million for 1990-91 and £98 million is available for 1991-92. Because ACGs are unhypothecated, LAs may use them for expenditure on information technology—IT—for the community care programme. These resources may be supplemented by other receipts available to LAs from the sale of capital assets and by revenue moneys. The amount of capital which any individual LA will need to spend on the IT needed to support the community care programme will depend on local circumstances.

Incontinence

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department is funding, or planning to fund, into the problems facing people who suffer from incontinence and the advice available to them.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department is currently funding a project which will draw together existing evidence on incontinence in six OPCS disability survey reports and relate this to previous United Kingdom research on incontinence and incontinence services. The project will also carry out additional analysis of the data on incontinence gathered during the surveys. A new project on the current and future roles of continence advisers is due to start in April 1991.

Family Health, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the practices covered by the Doncaster family health service authority have met the targets introduced in the general practitioners' new contract for (a) cervical cytology, (b) childhood immunisation and (c) boosters; how many minor surgery services they are anticipated to complete in the current year; how many children under five years have registered for child health surveillance with them; how many health promotion sessions they will have; and how many patients they are likely to see in them by the end of March.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is not available in the precise form requested. As at 30 September 1990, the proportion of GPs covered by Doncaster family health services authority —FHSA—who qualified for either a higher or lower target payment is as follows: (a) cervical cytology 100 per cent., (b) childhood immunisations 83 per cent. and (c) pre-school boosters 72 per cent. It is not yet possible to make forecasts of the likely levels of provision of particular services. As at 30 September, 390 payments had been made in respect of minor surgery sessions; 5,320 children were registered for child health surveillance services; and 966 payments in respect of health promotion clinics had been made.

Handynet System

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the current use of the EEC's Handynet system.

Mr. Dorrell: The EC's computerised database of information for disabled people, known as Handynet, is not yet in operation. Preparation for the first module of Handynet, which is concerned with aids and equipment for disabled people and known as Handyaids, was completed in November 1990. The United Kingdom has nominated the Disabled Living Foundation as its co-ordination centre for Handyaids. The foundation will shortly be signing a contract with the EC Commission to enable it to enter its aids and equipment database into the Handyaids system and to gain access to the data provided by co-ordination centres in other member states. It is anticipated that users will then be able to consult the database through the United Kingdom co-ordination centre by the summer of 1991.

Disabled People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has, using the World Health Organisation's classification, of the number of people with (a) impairments, (b) disabilities and (c) handicaps; and what he estimates the numbers to be in each category by the year 2000.

Mr. Dorrell: These concepts were used by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in its surveys of disability in Great Britain carried out between 1985 and 1988, the findings of which include the prevalence of disability among both adults and children. The results of the surveys were published in a series of six reports, which are available in the Library and are as listed. Assuming that the prevalence rate in each age group remains unchanged, we estimate that there will be a 9 per cent. increase in the total number of people with disabilities between 1985 and 2000, as a result of the changing age structure of the population. Actual figures will of course depend on a number of varying factors, including the advance of medical science.

HIV

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many claims for compensation have been received by his Department from those, other than haemophiliacs, with an HIV infection obtained from a national health service blood transfusion; and what has been the response to such claims.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are not aware that writs have been served on the Department of Health by individuals infected with HIV through national health service blood transfusions. Some writs have been served on health authorities.

North Devon Health Care Trust

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of his letter dated 4 December 1990 and that of his Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Hooper, dated 14 January 1991, both addressed to the hon. Member for Devon, North indicating the deferral of the application for establishing a North Devon health care trust; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Both letters will be placed in the Library. I will be making a statement shortly.

Women Doctors

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any proposals to improve the career opportunities of women doctors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am pleased to announce the publication today of the report of the joint working party on women doctors and their careers, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. This proposes practical measures which can be taken to improve the career opportunities of women doctors.

The Government are providing £1·5 million for a number of initiatives—including new part-time training posts, increasing the fee for doctors on retainer scheme from £155 a year to £290 and supporting a new scheme designed to increase the number of women in surgical specialties.

Leukaemia

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report a list of bone marrow transplant units based in hospitals in England; and if he will make extra financial provision available to consultants in the units to fund the prescription of the drug Alpha Interferon to leukaemia patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally. There are no plans to provide extra funding specifically to take account of the cost of prescribing Alpha Interferon to leukaemia patients. Hospitals are funded for the cost of drugs as part of their general allocation, and it is for them to determine locally how this should be spent.

North Devon Health Care Trust

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the sponsors of the proposed North Devon health care trust as at 1 December 1990, together with any subsequent changes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The sponsors of the Northern Devon health care trust as at 1 December 1990 were Mrs. R. Day, chairman of the North Devon health authority and Mr. E. Walker the project leader. Mr. Walker has now been replaced by Mrs. J. Acred as project leader.

Salmonella

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue strengthened anti-salmonella guidelines on the use of eggs and minced meat preparations in hospital catering establishments.

Mr. Dorrell: Existing guidance to the national health service including circular HC(86)14—a copy of which is available in the Library—on food hygiene and pest control and the national health service manual on hygiene sets out the principles of hygiene and good catering practice necessary for the prevention of food-borne illness.

We also issued a letter to all national health service district general managers in July 1988 asking them to ensure that all recipes containing raw eggs that are not likely to be cooked thoroughly should be amended to specify the use of pasteurised egg. It is a matter for local health authorities to ensure that the principles of this guidance are followed within catering establishments.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to reduce the risk of salmonella infection arising in hospitals and other mass catering establishments.

Mr. Dorrell: Existing guidelines to the national health service set out the principles necessary for the prevention of food-borne illness and provides specific advice on the proper handling of eggs. Advice to chief environmental health officers asks them to ensure that catering businesses are also aware of the need to replace raw egg with pasteurised egg in recipes in which eggs are served uncooked.

The Government have recently laid before Parliament the Food (Hygiene) General (Amendment) Regulations 1990 that require all food businesses to maintain safe temperatures of food.

It is a matter for the enforcement authorities to ensure that these procedures are followed in the whole of the catering industry.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Obscene Publications Squad

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to indicate, for each year from 1985 to date, how many operations have been conducted in each year concerning (a) material of a homosexual nature, (b) material of a heterosexual nature and (c) all materials.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information available does not distinguish between operations concerning material of a homosexual and heterosexual nature. The total number of operations conducted by the Metropolitan police obscene publications branch in each year covering all materials was:

	Number
1985	52
1986	46
1987	90
1988	101
1990	142

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the overall cost of operations of the obscene publications squad in each year from 1985 to date and as to the number of officers assigned to the squad on a yearly average, for each of those years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information requested is as follows. The costs given relate to manpower and employment only.

	Cost April-March (£)	Staff Police and Civilians
1985-86	406,982	22
1986-87	440,522	22
1987-88	460,472	22
1988-89	513,063	22
1989-90	804,699	30
1990-91[1]	643,636	30

[1] 1 April to 31 December 1990.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to indicate which officer, and at what rank, is in overall command of the work of the obscene publications squad; and what policy exists as to the priority areas of operations of the squad.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the overall command of the obscene publications branch is undertaken by a detective chief superintendent. The priorities of the squad reflect force policy concerning the exploitation of vulnerable persons, especially children. In order of importance the priorities are:

(a) child pornography
(b) bizarre material
(c) extreme bondage and flagellation
(d) British publication of obscene material.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to indicate, for each year from 1985 to date (a) the number of charges brought as a result of operations by the obscene publications squad, (b) the number of prosecutions conducted and (c) the number of convictions obtained.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information requested is as follows:

(a) Number of charges brought as a result of operations by the obscene publications branch

	Number
1985	54
1986	108
1987	74
1988	65
1989	75
1990	112

(b) Number of prosecutions conducted and the number of convictions obtained

	Prosecutions	Convictions
1985	14	14
1986	15	20
1987	15	11
1988	17	15
1990	27	26

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to list for each year from 1985 to date, the subject of each of the major operations conducted by the obscene publications squad, the duration of the operation, and the number of officers involved.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the subject of each of the major operations conducted by the obscene publications branch was the seizure of either suspected obscene material or suspected indecent material relating to children. No records are kept of the duration of each operation or the number of officers involved.

Immigration

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to see there are adequate numbers of immigration officers at points of entry to the United Kingdom to avoid long delays at peak times; and what steps can be taken to examine passengers at ports of embarkation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Staffing of the immigration service, which is subject to public expenditure constraints, is kept under regular review. Flexible deployment of staff is aimed particularly at maintaining satisfactory clearance rates during peak periods. Delays are however inevitable when carriers or port operators, for their own commercial reasons, bring in large numbers of passengers within a very short period. Carriers and port operators are aware that it is open to them to request additional immigration service staff, provided that they meet the full cost. Such arrangements could include pre-clearance at the point of embarkation abroad.

Benjamin Wilson

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Benjamin Wilson was released following the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights; and what monetary compensation is being considered.

Mr. John Patten: Mr. Wilson has not been released. His case will be referred to the local review committee at the prison where he is then detained in October this year as the first stage of a further review by the parole board.

The European Court of Human Rights upheld Mr. Wilson's claim of a breach of article 5 of the European convention on human rights in that he did not have recourse to a judicial body capable of determining the lawfulness of his detention and ordering his release if that detention was unlawful. However, the court also indicated, in rejecting his claim for damages, that there was no evidence that he would have regained his freedom had procedures consistent with the convention been available to him. We have no proposals to offer him compensation.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department has any plans to extend the decision of the European Court of Human Rights on 25 October 1990 in respect of Benjamin Wilson, who was serving a discretionary life sentence, to people serving mandatory life sentences.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Deaths

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the figures for deaths on public streets in (a) London, (b) Manchester, (c) Birmingham, (d) Liverpool and (e) England and Wales due to causes other than violence or road traffic accidents; and what are the figures for the same areas for deaths due to (i) hypothermia, (ii) malnutrition and (iii) physical neglect.

Mr. John Patten: The only available information is from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and is given in the table.

	Number of deaths registered in 1989 due to:
	Malnutrition[1]	Self-neglect[2]	Hypothermia[3]

[3] Number of deaths with mention of hypothermia.

Prison Meals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by (a) region and (b) Her Majesty's prison establishment the average weekly cost of providing meals for inmates.

Mrs. Rumbold: In 1989-90, the latest figures available, the average weekly cost of providing meals for inmates was as follows:—

West Midlands Police

Mrs. Maureeen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many extra police posts were authorised for West Midlands police between (a) 1974 and (b) 1979 to date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The West Midlands police was created in its present form in April 1974 following local government reorganisation. Between April 1974 and April 1979 the establishment of the West Midlands police was increased by 38. Since this Government took office in May 1979 the establishment of the force has increased by 384 and my right hon. Friend has recently approved a further 48 posts with effect from 1 October 1991.

Dangerous Loads

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines are issued to (a) fire and civil defence forces, (b) ambulance and (c) police forces regarding co-operation with other agencies in planning emergency liaison procedures in case of accident during the transportation of (i) radioactive waste, (ii) nuclear warloads and (iii) toxic waste.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Written guidance is issued to the police by the Association of Chief Police Officers, to the fire service by the Chief and Assistant Chief Fire Officers Association and to the ambulance service by the Regional Ambulance Officers Group. The guidance covers liaison and co-operation arrangements with other agencies likely to be involved in planning for and responding to a major incident as well as operational matters. The Home Office issues guidance, currently under review, to local authorities including fire and civil defence authorities.

Bail Hostels

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of bail hostels in England and Wales as of 1 January; and what was the number on 1 January 1985, 1987 and 1989.

Mr. John Patten: The information sought is not readily available in the form requested, but is presented in the table as at 1 April for the years concerned, prior to 1991.

	Bail hostels	Total probation/ Bail and Bail hostels
1 April 1985	17	102
1 April 1987	16	102
1 April 1989	18	99
1 January 1991	23	105

The total number of places in probation/bail and bail hostels has increased from 1,340 on 1 April 1985 to 2,149 on 1 January 1991. The corresponding increase in places in bail only hostels has been from 246 to 421. There is an expansion programme to increase the number of bail places in these hostels by 1,100 between April 1988 and April 1994.

Offenders

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of organisations and individuals who submitted responses to (a) the White Paper "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public", (b) the Green Paper "Supervision and Punishment in the Community" and (c) the consultation paper "Partnership in Dealing with Offenders in the Community"; and if he will place copies of the responses in the Library.

Mr. John Patten: There were more than 200 responses to the White Paper, "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public", more than 160 to the Green Paper "Supervision and Punishment in the Community" and so far more than 100 to "Partnership in Dealing with Offenders in the Community". The organisations which submitted responses to each of the papers are listed in the table. We also received comments from probation services and probation committees; from magistrates' groups, benches and juvenile panels; from local authorities and social services departments; and from the police and prison services; and from a wide range of individuals, including judges and magistrates. It is for the respondents to decide whether to make their comments available more widely.

Oral Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what savings his Department would make were no notice given of oral questions to Ministers and they were answered without civil service time being used on briefings.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No savings would be made and costs would almost certainly increase significantly. If the oral question is known in advance briefing can be tightly focused, thus avoiding the cost of producing a detailed brief, covering all subjects that could possibly arise.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time taken and the average cost involved of officials' time in his Department preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The time taken in preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions is not routinely recorded in the Home Office. Estimates are, however, made where there is a likelihood of exceeding the disproportionate cost threshold—currently £250. However, following an interdepartmental exercise in 1972 an assessment was made of the average cost throughout all Departments of answering an oral question. This assessment was based on staff time, using average rates of pay and associated costs for the grades concerned, together with a share of the cost of parliamentary sections and any substantial non-staff costs such as computer usage. This assessed figure is regularly updated and currently stands at £99.

Forensic Science

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consideration he is giving to the difficulties encountered by forensic scientists in presenting evidence in an adversarial system of justice;

(2) what consideration is being given to the introduction of an inquisitorial system of presentation of evidence in relation to forensic scientists giving evidence in court.

Mr. John Patten: Sir John May has indicated, in the course of his inquiry into the Guildford and Woolwich convictions, that he would propose to consider various aspects of forensic scientific evidence, including its obtaining, preparation and presentation, and the roles of expert witnesses, the Crown prosecution service and the court.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he is having with Cellmark Diagnostics about the centralisation of forensic laboratories in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No discussions are taking place with Cellmark Diagnostics on this issue.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of work at the Metropolitan police laboratory on chemiluminescent probes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the laboratory is conducting trials in the use of chemi-luminescent probes. It will be for the director of the laboratory to decide on their future use in the light of those trials.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions exist on the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory's freedom to hold membranes from DNA analysis and body tissues, in particular (a) of suspects and (b) of persons found not guilty.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no restrictions on holding evidence obtained from suspects in cases which have not yet come to trial. Section 64 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 requires the destruction of body tissues obtained from persons found not guilty.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Europe exchange of DNA profile standards scheme.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: An informal agreement has been reached between a number of European DNA laboratories on the basic elements of the DNA profiling technique so that, in principle, the results obtained in these laboratories can be compared. A collaborative exercise has confirmed that there is a high level of compatibility. Future work will build on this progress, placing particular emphasis on quality assurance procedures.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidance he gives to police forces in respect of the use of a DNA database in relation to (a) previous cases unsolved, (b) open cases, (c) unidentified remains and (d) missing persons;

(2) whether the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory sees any difficulty in extending its computer-based DNA database for national usage; and whether there are any plans for doing so.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The forensic science service is discussing with the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory the scientific and technical aspects of exchanging DNA data. We are also assessing the practical, legal and ethical questions raised by proposals for a national DNA database. Guidance has not yet been issued to the police, pending resolution of these issues.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy in respect of the future development of forensic science work among police forces in relation to the degree of fragmentation of such work between different police forces.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Work is well advanced to transform the forensic science service into an executive agency so that it can serve all provincial police forces in England and Wales more efficiently and effectively. The Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory will continue to serve the Metropolitan police and the City of London police.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with laboratory managers outside the Home Office forensic science services about the future of the forensic science service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Consultation on such issues takes place at a liaison group of directors of public sector forensic science laboratories in the United Kingdom. Meetings also take place at the working level.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the retention of DNA records of those found not guilty.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is at present no statutory requirement for records of samples taken from a person in connection with the investigation of an offence to be destroyed when he is cleared of that offence. My right hon. Friend is considering whether there should be such a requirement in future as part of the wider debate about a national DNA database.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he is giving to the commercial arrangements made by police forces in relation to DNA testing with the laboratories at Aldermaston and Huntingdon.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These laboratories form part of the forensic science service. Discussions are in hand with police forces on the detailed arrangements for the introduction of direct charging for DNA tests and other work. Police forces may obtain DNA tests elsewhere if they wish.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make arrangements for defence counsel (a) for forensic work relating to London to be undertaken by laboratories outside London and (b) for the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory to make its services available to the defence in cases not relating to London;

(2) what is his policy in making the services of the Metropolitan police laboratory (a) available to litigants and others concerned with dog paternity cases and (b) in relation to other commercial work.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As part of its preparation for agency status, the forensic science service is reviewing its policy on defence work. I understand that the Metropolitan police is also conducting a review of the future of its forensic laboratory and the work which it undertakes. No decisions have yet been taken.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 245, on the numbers of forensic scientists available for police work; whether the answer includes forensic scientists outside the Home Office forensic science service; (a) in Government service, (b) in local authority service and (c) in the private sector.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The figure of 527 provided in the answer of 23 November 1990 was in respect of the Home Office forensic science service. In addition, the Metropolitan police laboratory has 231 scientific and technical staff in post who, directly or indirectly, provide scientific support to the police. No information is held centrally on the numbers of scientists employed by local authorities or in the private sector who could provide a similar service.

BBC

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the timetable for the renewal of the BBC's charter.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The present BBC charter expires at the end of 1996. We have not yet set a timetable for the review which will be necessary before it expires.

Local Government

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table of expenditure under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for 1989-90, broken down into the educational, economic, social and other appropriate categories and cross tabulated by standard regions, with Greater London shown as a separate region.

Mrs. Angela Rumbold: I regret that under present arrangements the information requested is not available.

For information in relation to local authority expenditure under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 within each local authority area I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the question from the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 23 October 1990 at columns 126-28 and to his own question of 13 November 1990 at column 87.

Zebra Crossings

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many on-the-spot fines have been levied on errant motorists in respect of traffic offences on zebra crossings since the provision came into operation.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

The information collected centrally does not separately identify fixed penalty notices issued for offences at zebra crossings.

DEFENCE

Regimental System

15. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the regimental system in the light of future cuts in the size of the British Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As I said during the defence debate last June, the Government believe in the regimental system and are convinced that it must be maintained for the esprit de corps that it brings to our front-line battalions. Regiments may have to be disbanded or amalgamated, but the regimental system will go on.

Personnel Deployment

16. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many services personnel, excluding MOD civilians, are currently deployed in the Mediterranean, near east and Gulf areas.

Mr. Tom King: At the outbreak of hostilities the United Kingdom had some 35,000 service personnel in the Gulf area. Approximately a further 7,500 are deployed in the Mediterranean and near east.

Careers Information and Recruitment

17. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest figure for the number of armed services careers information and recruitment centres.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 290 service careers information offices located throughout the United Kingdom.

Devonport Dockyard

18. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the existing work load at Devonport dockyard with specific reference to both the core programme and unallocated work subject to tendering.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: DML is currently working on three fleet submarines, three frigates and one Royal Fleet Auxiliary, RFA Fort Austin, which was transferred to Devonport's core programme from the unallocated programme. The balance between the core and unallocated programmes is kept under review to ensure we obtain value for money.

Gulf Crisis

19. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to pay a further visit to the Gulf.

Mr. Tom King: I have no present plans to do so.

21. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of British military and civilian personnel now stationed in the Gulf; and what information he has on the total for all members of the European Community.

22. Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the latest military situation in the Gulf.

27. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the military situation in the Gulf.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friends to the answer I gave today to the Members for Pontyprydd (Dr. Howells) and for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) and to my hon. Friends the Members for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) and for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind).

25. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any body bags have been sent to the Gulf.

Mr. Tom King: We have made the necessary provision for casualties arising during the course of military operations in the Gulf.

28. Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the level of operational efficiency of the Challenger tanks serving with the 1st Armoured Division in the Saudi desert.

Mr. Allan Clark: We are satisfied with the level of operational efficiency of the Challenger tanks deployed to the Gulf.

Nuclear Weapons

20. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy on the retention of land-based short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government fully support NATO's policy, as set out in last year's London declaration. Though reaffirming the need to maintain up-to-date nuclear weapons in Europe for the foreseeable future, the alliance acknowledged that there would be a significantly reduced role for sub-strategic weapons of the shortest range. Once negotiations begin on short-range nuclear forces, the alliance will propose, in return for reciprocal action by the Soviet Union, the elimination of all its nuclear artillery shells from Europe.

SSN20

23. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to introduce the SSN20 into service within the Royal Navy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend announced on 25 July that we intend to maintain around 12 nuclear-powered submarines in service. Following the completion of feasibility studies for SSN20, we are considering the procurement plans needed to sustain this force level in the longer term.

Belize

24. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the numbers and responsibilities of British service men and women in Belize.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the eighth report of the Select Commmittee on Defence—HC 624, Session 1987-88—on British forces in Belize. The strength of the garrison remains around 1,550 and there are 10 loan service personnel currently serving with the Belize defence force.

RAF Sculthorpe

26. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received in respect of RAF Sculthorpe, Norfolk.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: One representation has been received from a member of the public. No decisions have been taken as to the future use of the base.

Defence Strategy

29. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his United States counterpart to discuss defence strategy arising from changes in east-west relationships.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend last met Mr. Cheney at the NATO defence planning committee ministerial session held in Brussels on 6 and 7 December 1990. A copy of the communiqué has been placed in the Library.

Operation Granby

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Belgian Government's refusal of permission for the supply of ammunition on a procurement order from his Department for use by British forces in Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Our initial request for additional ammunition was met in full by the United States, Germany and the Netherlands. We did not, therefore, need any ammunition from Belgium, which has provided assistance in a number of other ways. We are grateful to our allies for meeting our needs at such short notice.

"Dispatches"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department afforded any assistance to the producers of the "Dispatches" programme on British nuclear weapons tests broadcast on 16 January; and if he will obtain a copy of the programme for his departmental library.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The producers of the "Dispatches" programme were given a detailed background briefing by officials, and an attributable statement for use in the programme. There are no plans to obtain a copy of the programme for the departmental library.

"Options for Change"

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to announce the changes concerning the naval estate and support services following on "Options for Change".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 12 December 1990 at column 430.

"The Sandy Times"

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any decision has yet been taken to provide funding for "The Sandy Times", which circulates among United Kingdom forces in The Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Costs will be met by the Ministry of Defence.

Defence Quality Assurance

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to reach a decision about the proposed move of the Directorate General, Defence Quality Assurance from Woolwich to Teeside.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: As my right hon. Friend made clear in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South on 4 December, the issues being addressed by my Department are now wider in scope than the affordability of the Directorate General, Defence Quality Assurance move as planned. We will come to a decision as soon as possible.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the total cost of moving the Directorate General, Defence Quality Assurance to Teesside as compared to constructing a new headquarters building at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department is currently re-examining the range of facilities that the Directorate General, Defence Quality Assurance will require in the long term to support the armed services, and is re-estimating the construction costs that need to be incurred. Indications to date are that the cost of retaining existing London sites and undertaking necessary reconstruction on them would be considerably more than the cost of constructing facilities outside London.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on (a) the design and preparation for a new Directorate General, Defence Quality Assurance headquarters building at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich and (b) the proposed move to a new headquarters on Teesside.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the responses given to him by my predecessor on 20 April 1988, Official Report, columns 501-2, and 12 April 1989, Official Report, columns 515-17. Sketch plans for a headquarters building at the Royal Arsenal west, Woolwich for the Quality Assurance Directorate were completed in 1983 at a cost to the Property Services Agency of £300,000. The identified costs of studies on other buildings amounted to £120,000. The departmental costs of the staff carrying out feasibility studies and investment appraisals on the future location of the Directorate General, Defence Quality Assurance were incurred in the normal course of their work and have not been separately identified.

Expenditure on the proposed move to new headquarters and technical facilities on Teesside currently totals around £4·3 million.

Royal Arsenal, Woolwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on the repair, maintenance and refurbishment of buildings at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich over each of the most recent 10 years for which figures are available together with the estimated expenditure for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The details of expenditure requested are as follows:

	Repair and maintenance (£ thousands)	Refurbishment (£ thousands)
1980-81	1,083	277
1981-82	1,212	300
1982-83	1,552	357
1983-84	1,802	471
1984-85	2,272	715
1985-86	1,785	1,593
1986-87	1,846	1,584
1987-88	1,749	2,427
1988-89	1,514	662
1989-90	1,629	642
1990-91[1]	1,550	500
1991-92[1]	1,450	300

[1] Estimated.

The refurbishments from 1985-86 include expenditure needed to house DGDQA units moved from Harefield, Middlesex and Garland Road, Plumstead.

Black Officers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the highest rank in each of the services held by a black officer; and what the current numbers of black officers are in each service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No records are kept of the ethnic origins of serving personnel by rank or otherwise. I am, therefore, unable to provide the information requested.

Civilian Employees

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilians are employed by the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Alan Clark: The number of United Kingdom-based civilian staff employed by the Ministry of Defence on 1 January 1991 was 139,917.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 23 January 1991

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

London House

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, under what terms the Commissioners hold 8 Barton street, London house; who else has a legal interest in the property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: The Commissioners own the freehold of London house, 8 Barton street, and there are no other legal interests in the property.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Record Office

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Attorney-General whether the report of the efficiency scrutiny of the Public Record Office has been completed and when it is expected to be published.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has received the report of the efficiency scrutiny of the Public Record Office. The report is being published today and copies placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The scrutiny was set up in August 1990 to look at the functions, management and organisation of the Public Record Office, to examine the services it provides and to make proposals on its future status. The Lord Chancellor is most concerned to ensure that the priceless national asset of the records held by the Public Record Office is maintained efficiently and that the best possible quality of service is provided to those who wish to use them.

The scrutiny team has produced a wide-ranging report and the Lord Chancellor will be considering the detailed recommendations that it contains. He accepts the broad thrust of the report and agrees with the scrutiny team's conclusion that the Public Record Office should become an executive agency under the Government's "next steps" programme. Officials of the Public Record Office and the Lord Chancellor's Department will be drawing up an action plan for the transition to agency status and associated management changes.

TRANSPORT

Shipping Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what records are kept by his Department of the number of shipping accidents there have been in the coastal waters of the United Kingdom, involving (a) collisions, (b) groundings and (c) sinkings; how far the records go back; and what is the date of the latest records available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The records kept show the numbers of collisions and groundings for each year for United Kingdom merchant vessels over 100 gross tons and United Kingdom fishing vessels, on a worldwide basis, back to 1972. They also show individual merchant and fishing vessels lost from any cause in each year.

The information for the years 1972-88 is available in the Department's publication "Casualties to Vessels and Accidents to Men". This publication was discontinued with the setting up of the marine accident investigation branch (MAIB) in July 1989. For 1989—the latest year for which figures are currently available—the information is contained in the MAIB publication "Review for 1989".

The figures for the past 10 years are as follows:

Year	Collisions and contacts	Strandings and Groundings	Losses (all causes)
Merchant vessels
1980	153	49	8
1981	125	45	11
1982	154	44	4
1983	107	25	5
1984	91	35	5
1985	69	28	6
1986	55	21	4
1987	46	16	5
1988	56	22	6
1989	62	28	3
Fishing vessels
1980	23	26	39
1981	20	25	52
1982	38	29	50

Oil Tankers

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the environmental risks associated with oil tankers using the route through the Minches, as opposed to the recommended deep water route west of the Western Isles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie) on 14 November, columns 139-40.

Since the deep water route was implemented in October 1987 I have received a number of representations from hon. Members, environmental organisations and members of the public, all expressing concern about the use of the Minches by oil tankers.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what are the annual figures for the number of laden oil tankers which sailed through the deep water route west of the Western Isles in a southerly direction for each of the past 10 years and the amount of oil carried;

(2) what are the annual figures for the number of laden oil tankers which sailed through the Minches in a southerly direction for each of the past 10 years and the amount of oil carried.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available.

My Department commissioned a survey of southbound traffic in the two routes in September and October 1989. The survey ran for 21 days and nights, excluding three interruptions by bad weather which forced the survey vessels to seek shelter for a total of six days. During the survey period a total of 25 laden oil tankers, 16 of which were over 10,000 grt, proceeded south through the Minches compared with four laden tankers, all over 10,000 grt, which proceeded south through the deep water route. Sea conditions were such as to render use of the deep water route an impractical alternative in the opinion of many of the masters involved.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he intends that cost-benefit analysis should be used in considering any proposals from ScotRail to electrify the Edinburgh-Glasgow, via Falkirk, and the Edinburgh-Dunblane-Glasgow railway lines; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what assurances have been given that the social benefits of electrification will be taken into account in considering proposals to electrify the Edinburgh-Glasgow, via Falkirk, and Edinburgh-Dunblane-Glasgow railway lines;

(3) what criteria will be used to assess any proposals to electrify the railway line between Edinburgh and Aberdeen.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Parkinson), the then Secretary of State, set out the criteria for rail investment in his letter of 19 December 1989 to the then chairman of the British Railways Board, which set the board's objectives for the period 1990-91 to 1992-93. I am sending a copy to the hon. Member.

Speedlink

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total value of moneys paid out under section 8 of the Transport Act 1974 to assist in the provision of Speedlink rail freight services.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1975 grants of £69 million (cash) have been awarded under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974. Around £10 million assisted the provision of rail facilities serviced by the Speedlink network representing less than 10 per cent. of the total grant-aided traffic. These figures include a number of schemes no longer subject to the conditions of grant which normally apply for 10 years and others which have ceased operation at some time during the period.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department of Transport monitors energy consumption and undertakes detailed energy efficiency surveys in its major buildings. These activities have, for example, produced improvements in air conditioning plant and have led to the introduction of new building management systems and to the installation of new lighting systems. New opportunities continue to be sought and implemented.

In 1989-90, the last full year for which data are available, the energy bill of the Department was reduced by about £120,000, 5 per cent. compared with the previous year.

Red Routes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his oral answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 606, if he will outline the programme of monitoring for the pilot red route scheme being undertaken by his Department; and if he will make a statement on the effects so far of the routes' introduction.

Mr. Chope: Monitoring will cover safety, public transport performance, vehicle flow counts, parking surveys, shopping activity, pedestrian movement, journey times, enforcement data, loading activity and the use of rat runs.

Present indications are that traffic, including buses, is flowing more freely and that there is less illegal parking, but it is too soon to reach firm conclusions.

WALES

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what expenditure has been incurred by his Department in ensuring slaughterhouses in Wales meet EC standards.

Mr. David Hunt: No special financial assistance is provided by my Department to ensure slaughterhouses in Wales meet EC standards. The Department's veterinary staff are available to provide advice on these standards.

Green Belts

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration he has given to the establishment of green belts in Wales and in Cardiff, North in particular.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This matter is being considered as part of the current exercise to review the Department's existing strategic planning guidance. The Assembly of Welsh Counties has accepted the invitation to take forward that review in consultation with the Council of Welsh Districts and other interested bodies. To launch the debate on green belts, my right hon. Friend has convened and will address a conference at the Welsh Office on 28 January 1991.

Council for the Protection of Rural Wales

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration he has given to the report of the Council for the Protection of Rural Wales entitled "How Green Was My Valley"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend has read the report with interest. Some of its central concerns will be considered at the green belts conference in the Welsh Office, on 28 January 1991, when the CPRW will present a paper.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many job vacancies there are for (a) machine operators, (b) catering staff, (c) sales distribution staff, (d) cleaning staff and (e) clerical employees in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is shown in the table.

Total vacancies unfilled—October 1990 (latest)

Vacancy	Number
Machine Operator (Engineering)—skilled	60
Machine Operator (Engineering)—unskilled	6
Catering	1,907
Selling—Distribution	1,312
Cleaning and Personal Services	1,944
Clerical and Machine Operators	1,367

Pembrokeshire Health Authority

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones), on 14 January, Official Report, column 433, if he will now set out his proposed timetable for (a) the submission of the application for Pembrokeshire district health authority to become a trust, (b) the consultation process on the application and (c) his decision on the application.

Mr. David Hunt: If Pembrokeshire district health authority decides to submit a formal application it will be subject to a statutory consultation period of three months after which I would hope to issue an early decision.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the amount of money spent in Wales during 1990 on the set-aside scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: A total of £231,137 was paid out in Wales during 1990.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the number of people admitted as visitors and the number of people refused entry and returned abroad by the immigration authorities at United Kingdom ports of entry for each month in 1990 who were nationals of (a) Jamaica, (b) Barbados, (c) Trinidad and Tobago and (d) Guyana.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is given in the table.

Total visitors admitted to, and total passengers refused leave to enter and removed from, the United Kingdom for selected nationalities, 1990

Nationality	January	February	March	April	May	June	July	August	September	October

Election Returning Officers

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether for the 1987 general election any chief executive of a local authority (a) refused appointment as an acting returning officer or (b) took unpaid leave from their authority in order to carry out the function of an acting returning officer.

Mrs. Rumbold: Chief executives of local authorities in England and Wales who are acting retuning officers are not directly appointed to that office: they have a statutory responsibility to carry out the duties of acting returning officers by virtue of the fact that they are electoral registration officers appointed by a district or London borough council. We are not aware of any chief executive who took unpaid leave in order to carry out the duties of acting returning officer at the last general election.

Prison Visits

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are limited to closed visits.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not recorded centrally and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there is any provision within the prison system for unsupervised visits to take place.

Mrs. Rumbold: Under standing order 5, a copy of which is in the Library, there is no provision within the prison system for any visits to take place out of the sight of prison staff.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) at which prison department establishments visits are normally restricted to 30 minutes' duration;

(2) which prison department establishments allow only one visit every four weeks.

Mrs. Rumbold: Convicted prisoners are normally able to receive at least two visits every four weeks, and sometimes more, at all establishments except Brixton, Durham, Liverpool, Manchester, Preston, Shrewsbury and Swansea.

Visits normally last at least one hour, and frequently longer, at all establishments except Durham, Leeds, Liverpool and Wandsworth.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the annual expenditure on assisted visits each year since 1986-87; and what is the estimated annual expenditure in 1990-91.

Mrs. Rumbold: The annual expenditure on the payment of claims made under the assisted prison visits scheme in the past four years has been as follows:

1986-87	905,628
1987-88	793,407
1988-89	1,332,598
1989-90	1,491,204

The scheme is not cash limited and all valid claims are met in full. It is therefore possible to estimate only annual expenditure in 1990-91. It appears likely that end-of-year expenditure will be around £1,650,000.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what special circumstances can prisoners be denied open visits.

Mrs. Rumbold: Standing order 5, a copy of which is in the Library, stipulates that visits to prisoners should take place in open visiting rooms unless security or control considerations require that a special or closed visiting room or a closed visiting box should be used. This may be considered necessary in individual cases in order to prevent, for example, the smuggling of drugs.

Wormwood Scrubs

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the amount of money spent on A wing of Wormwood Scrubs prison, London, over the last five years.

Mrs. Rumbold: A total of £811,000 has been spent on building work in A hall at Wormwood Scrubs prison over the last five years.

Prisoners' Letters

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to stop the censorship of prisoners' letters in prisons in England and Wales, except where prisoner security is necessary; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: In 1986, routine censorship of prisoners' correspondence in category D prison establishments was abolished. Since 1988 only a random 5 per cent. sample of incoming and outgoing letters are routinely read in category C and equivalent female and young offender establishments. During 1990, a trial took place to test the reduction of censorship to a 5 per cent. sample in selected category B—non-dispersal—establishments. We are currently studying the results of that trial.

Warwickshire Police

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to meet the chief constable of Warwickshire to discuss the standard spending assessment for the police service in Warwickshire.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Prisoner Statistics

Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were in categories A, B, C and D, respectively, on the most recent available date.

Mrs. Rumbold: The latest information readily available centrally is given in the table.

Population[1] of adult male sentenced prisoners in local and training prisons in England and Wales on 30 September 1990: by security category of prisoner

	Number
A[2]	431
B	5,240
C	13,866
D	5,135
Not recorded	3,064
Total population	27,736

[1] The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate: detailed checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.

[2] Including prisoners provisionally placed in Category A.

Fire Service, Warwickshire

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet the chief fire officer of Warwickshire to discuss the standard spending assessment for the county's fire service.

Mr. John Patten: Representatives of Warwickshire county council have had a number of opportunities to discuss their standard spending assessments with Ministers at the Department of the Environment. We will consider carefully any request from the Warwickshire fire authority for a meeting to discuss standards of fire cover. The chief fire officer met Her Majesty's chief inspector of fire services on 17 December to discuss those standards.

Missing Persons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for the South Yorkshire police force area how many (a) children and (b) adults are known to have gone missing for each of the last five years he has records; and how many were subsequently traced.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The following annual figures are given in relation to the total number of missing persons reports received in the South Yorkshire police force area for the years 1986-1990. Children and adults are not categorised separately, nor do the figures take account of those individuals who regularly leave their homes and may be reported missing several times a year. Separate records are maintained of children and adults who are still missing at the end of each year.

Year	Total number of missing persons reports	Outstanding at end of year
		Children	Adults
1986	3,990	16	4
1987	3,908	32	5
1988	3,420	13	4
1989	4,281	14	3
1990	4,740	27	7

Home Security

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many elderly people have so far benefited from the provision of home security and alarm systems under the safer cities and other projects (a) in London and (b) in the London borough of Wandsworth.

Mr. John Patten: Four safer cities projects are based in London: at Islington, Lewisham, Tower Hamlets and Wandsworth. Twenty-two safer cities grants, worth £209,000, have been approved for agencies and organisations in those areas so that they can provide better home security or alarm systems to elderly people. The estimated number of beneficiaries is 3,500 elderly people, including 400 in the London borough of Wandsworth.

Iraqi Nationals

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deportation orders are in force against Iraqi nationals; and how many are held in custody at present.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait on 2 August, notices of intention to make deportation orders have been served on 128 Iraqi nationals. Deportation orders have been made against three of these Iraqi nationals. As of 22 January 1991, a total of 61 Iraqi nationals are detained pending their appearance before the advisory panel established under paragraph 157 of the immigration rules—HC 251—or consideration of other representations. Two further Iraqi nationals, who are military officers, are being detained as prisoners of war.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Iraqi nationals are currently in the United Kingdom by virtue of (a) permanent residence, (b) student, (c) exceptional leave to remain and (d) asylum application.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The revised estimate from the latest labour force surveys and immigration control data is that some 7,000 Iraqis are usually resident in the United Kingdom, including students. In addition, some 1,300 Iraqis have been granted exceptional leave to remain and around 1,600 have applications outstanding for asylum.

Adoption

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of children admitted into the United Kingdom in each of the last five years, for the purpose of adoption, without the necessary entry clearance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available. Statistics collected on passenger admissions do not separately identify children who come to the United Kingdom for adoption.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Housing

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of subsidies to council housing as a percentage of gross domestic product in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Yeo: Housing and rent rebate subsidies from Government and rate fund contributions from local authorities to council housing in Great Britain between 1990-91 and 1989-90 are:

Year	£ billion	GDP Per cent.
1980-81	2·5	1·0
1981-82	2·1	0·8
1982-83	2·1	0·7
1983-84	2·8	0·9
1984-85	3·1	0·9
1985-86	3·2	0·9
1986-87	3·4	0·9
1987-88	3·5	0·8
1988-89	3·4	0·7
1989-90	3·8	0·7

Local Government Finance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by local authority the percentage of uncollected (a) community charge and (b) uniform business rates outstanding for the latest date for which he has figures.

Mr. Key: I am arranging for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 7 December 1990, Official Report, column 220, if he will publish in the Official Report his letter of 19 December 1990 to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside.

Mr. Portillo: The information contained in my letter of 19 December 1990 is now out of date. The latest position with regulations on local government finance still to be made is as follows:

LOCAL GOVERNMENT FINANCE

Statutory Instruments (all subject to the negative resolution procedure) to be laid by 31 March 1991.

The Community Charge

1. Introduction of community charge reduction scheme.
2. Form of the community charge bill and content of rate demand notice for 1991-92.
3. Content of community charge bill and of rate demand notice for the City of London for 1991-92.
4. Miscellaneous administrative matters—billing on change of address, attachment of earnings orders, costs of summonses, notification of entry.
5. Revised rules for calculation of relevant population.
6. Amendment to increase the amounts of financial loss and travel and subsistence allowance payable to VCCT members.

Rating

1. Miscellaneous amendments to the Collection and Enforcement (Local Lists) Regulations.
2. Miscellaneous amendments to the Collection and Enforcement (Central Lists) Regulations.
3. Amendments of the domestic/non-domestic boundary in respect of bed-and-breakfast accommodation.
4. Valuation of non-domestic property in former enterprise zones.
5. City of London minimum and maximum rating multipliers for 1991-92.
6. Amendments to regulations on valuation of caravan sites consequent on Caravans (Standard Community Charge and Rating) Bill.
7. Amendment of regulations on payment of interest to provide for cases where successive payments are made in respect of the same period.
8. Closedown of precept and rate rules under old rating system.
9. Further consequential amendments and repeals.
10. Regulations on definition of hereditament used for electricity generation.

Capital Finance

1. Regulations to set rate of discount used in calculating the cost of credit arrangements.
2. Miscellaneous amendments to the capital finance regulations.
3. Regulations to apply the new system, with modifications, to the Lea Vally regional park authority.
4. Regulations to enable local authorities to issue sterling commercial paper and medium-term notes.
5. Regulations to apply to new system to parish and community councils.
6. Miscellaneous amendments to the list of approved investments.
7. Regulations to apply part VII of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 to the City of London and the South Yorkshire and London pension authorities.
8. Consequential amendments and repeals.

Order subject to positive resolution to be laid by 31 March 1991.

Rating

1. Technical amendments to Electricity Supply Industry (Rateable Values) Order 1989 and Electricity Generators (Rateable Values) Order 1989.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for the Doncaster local authority area (a) the number of individuals who are liable to pay the personal community charge, (b) the number of people who are liable to pay the standard community charge and (c) the number of premises liable for the uniform business rate.

Mr. Key: The information reported by the local authority is as follows.

(a) By 31 December 1990, a total of 224,102 people were liable to make a payment in respect of a personal community charge.

(b) There were 3,232 properties liable to a standard community charge on 1 June 1990, excluding those with a multiplier of zero.

No information is available on the number of premises liable for the uniform business rate. There were 7,086 hereditaments on the authority's rating list on 31 December 1990.

Care in the Community

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the programme he intends to follow in providing additional finances to (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) voluntary bodies, in each of the four district areas in south Yorkshire, in (i) the present financial year, (ii) the 1991-92 financial year and (iii) subsequent financial years in order to ensure adequate availability of appropriate housing to match the requirements of his Department's programme for the implementation of care in the community.

Mr. Yeo: We hope to make an announcement shortly about the regional distribution of the Housing Corporation's 1991-92 approved development programme. The distribution of resources within its regions is a matter for the corporation.

Barnsley, Doncaster, Rotherham and Sheffield all receive allocations of urban programme resources before the start of each financial year for expenditure on projects targeting deprived inner-city areas and disadvantaged minorities in them. Mainstream housing provision is not an appropriate objective of the urban programme, although expenditure on support for housing workers in the voluntary sector and hostel bed spaces may be.

Any additional burden on services which are supported through revenue support grant will be reflected in future standard spending assessments. This support is unlikely to be hypothecated.

Any additional demands for housing resulting from the implementation of care in the community will be taken into account in future public expenditure surveys and in the distribution of resources for housing capital expenditure to individual local authorities. No account has been taken for 1990-91 or 1991-92.

Warwickshire County Council

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what calculations underlay his assessment that Warwickshire county council would earn interest of £6·7 million, as set out in the standard spending assessment calculation for 1991.

Mr. Portillo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key), to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) yesterday.

Property Services Agency

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether persons refused severance allowances by the Property Services Agency in accordance with circular SWOP3/91 will still have the same conditions of service entitlement should they later be made redundant by the successor employer, a Government-owned company.

Mr. Yeo: The Government are committed to ensuring that any staff who are transferred out of the civil service either into a Government-owned company—GOCO—or into a privately owned company will enjoy as far as possible redundancy compensation provisions identical to those they have at present.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether persons refused severance payment by the Property Services Agency under the terms of circular SWOP3/91 will be given an explanation for such refusals.

Mr. Yeo: Yes.

Housing, London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each of the last 10 years, in London (a) the number of local authority dwellings built, (b) the number sold, (c) the number built by housing associations, (d) the number of homeless persons and (e) his estimate of the number sleeping on the streets.

Mr. Yeo: The latest available information about the numbers of dwellings built by London boroughs and by housing associations in London can be found in tables 1.1 to 1.10 inclusive of "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Areas 1980-1989", a copy of which is in the Library.

Tables of council house sales showing year-by-year sales for each local authority are regularly placed in the Library. A table showing sales to September 1990 will be placed in the Library shortly.

Local authorities have a statutory duty to secure accommodation for households who have been found to be homeless, or threatened with homelessness, under part III of the Housing Act 1985. The numbers of households accepted and found accommodation are reported quarterly to the Department. Estimates for London for the years 1980-1989 are set out in the table.

Year	Number of households accepted and found accommodation
1980	17,480
1981	18,470
1982	21,110
1983	24,050
1984	25,180
1985	27,390
1986	29,740
1987	29,710
1989	33,160

Having consulted front-line voluntary organisations, my Department estimates that some 2,000 or 3,000 people sleep on the streets in London. A count of persons sleeping rough is to be carried out as part of the 1991 population census.

Water Pollution

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a report has been sent to the Commission as required under article 16 of Council directive 78/659/EEC on the quality of fresh waters needing protection or improvement in order to support fish life.

Mr. Trippier: A report covering monitoring in 1989 has been submitted to the Commission recently and copies have been placed in the Library.

Private Water Supplies

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for regulations in respect of private water supplies.

Mr. Trippier: We have issued today a consultation paper seeking views on proposals for regulations dealing with the duties and functions of local authorities in respect of private water supplies. This has been published jointly by my Department, the Scottish Office Environment Department and the Welsh Office. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The consultation paper proposes that regulations should specify the information that local authorities are able to obtain in respect of private supplies in their areas and should require local authorities to prepare and maintain a register of such supplies. Proposals are made about the different classes into which private supplies should be allocated, the parameters for which each class of supply should be monitored, and the frequencies at which local authorities should carry out sampling and analysis in order to determine whether supplies comply with the requirements of the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 and the parallel Scottish regulations. The paper puts forward proposals for maximum charges that local authorities would be able to make for carrying out sampling and analysis. It is intended that regulations should come into effect on 1 July 1991 and that local authorities should begin to monitor private supplies from 1 October 1991.

Reserve Forces

Sir Robert McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take to protect the pensions of local government employees who are called up for service as reservists during the present crisis.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has today gone out to consultation on amendments to the local government superannuation scheme designed to preserve full superannuation rights for any local government employee serving as a reservist. They would apply retrospectively with effect from 17 December 1990, the date of the order authorising the call-out of reserves.

If, in any case, an authority declines to make good any shortfall between service and civilian salary, the regulations will provide for the cost of both the employee's and the employer's contribution to be met by the authority. I understand, however, that authorities are in the main indicating their readiness to make good any shortfall in salary and I hope that all will conclude that they should do so.

British Waterways Board

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the level of Government grant to the British Waterways Board for each year since 1979 at current prices; and what is the planned level of grant for future years.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 21 January 1991]: The table shows in current prices the Government's grant to the BWB in the years 1978-79 to 1990-91, together with the board's external financing limit—EFL—which covers grant and borrowing from the national loans fund, for the same period.

	Grant		EFL
	Cash £ million	1990-91 prices £ million	Cash £ million	1990-91 prices £ million
1978-79	23·0	58·1	26·0	65·7
1979-80	22·8	49·4	25·7	55·7
1980-81	25·6	46·9	30·0	54·9
1981-82	28·4	47·4	31·6	52·7
1982-83	37·6	58·6	39·3	61·2
1983-84	39·8	59·3	40·8	60·8
1984-85	41·8	59·3	42·8	60·7
1985-86	43·5	58·5	44·1	59·3
1986-87	43·9	57·1	44·8	58·2
1987-88	44·0	54·2	45·0	55·5
1988-89	45·9	52·7	44·9	51·6
1989-90	48·1	52·0	46·5	50·2
1990-91	49·3	49·3	49·4	49·4

As a result of the latest public expenditure round, the BWB's EFL, which is expected to be the same as grant for 1991-92, will be £48·7 million, with guideline figures of £46·9 milllion and £45·3 milion for the following two years.

Minerals Act 1981

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to go to full public consultation on the review of the Minerals Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 21 January 1991]: The review of the Minerals Act 1981, announced in "Our Common Inheritance", is already under way. The issues are complex and require careful consideration. The review is expected to take up to 18 months. Any proposals for change arising from the review will be the subject of full public consultation thereafter, in the normal way.

Inner Cities

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table showing the expenditure on each inner city task force and city action team in 1989-90, including both the cost of running the unit concerned and the funds disbursed by the unit and including separately the cost of central support to task forces and city action teams.

Mr. Key [holding answer 22 January 1991]: The task forces are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. Responsibility for the Government's city action teams transferred to the Department of the Environment in December 1989. Task force and city action team expenditure in 1989-90 was as follows:

Task forces	Running costs £'000 estimated	Funds disbursed £'000
East Birmingham	129	959
Handsworth		312
Wolverhampton		1,270
Leeds	112	1,212

Newcastle	190	1,134
Nottingham/Leicester/ Derby	129	719
Leeds/Bradford	109	661
Total	1,031	6,200

The combined cost of central support by both DoE and DTI to the city action teams and task forces in 1989-90 was approximately £716,000. In addition, £1,685,000 was spent centrally on projects to support the work of the CATs and task forces, including research, consultancy and projects by national organisations which operated in most areas.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Unemployed People (Education)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to extend the life of his Department's REPLAN programme of education for the adult unemployed for at least a further year beyond October 1991.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now make an announcement on the future of REPLAN.

Mr. Eggar: The REPLAN programme in England and Wales has been evaluated by the National Foundation for Educational Research, and I have today placed a copy of its report in the Library. Among its main findings were that REPLAN had been successful in raising the awareness of local education authorities and education providers to the needs of the adult unemployed and that as a result provision had improved and participation increased.

It is now for the adult education providers and the LEAs to continue to develop provision for the adult unemployed, drawing on the lessons learnt under the REPLAN programme. We look to them to work particularly closely with the training and enterprise councils which are responsible for delivering the major training programmes for the adult unemployed.

The REPLAN programme will have largely fulfilled the purpose for which it was established when its current term is completed next October, and it is not the intention therefore of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Wales to extend it for a further term. Neither do we believe that there is a need for a successor programme of general promotion and support to the providers of education and training for the adult unemployed.

We will however take specific action to address specific problems and my right hon. and learned Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Employment and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales are today launching a new initiative to improve and increase the provision of adult literacy and basic skills training.

This new initiative will be targeted at unemployed people and at those in work who cannot progress without improved basic skills. It will be overseen by the adult literacy and basic skills unit and will encourage LEAs and TECs to work together to improve basic skills provision in their areas.

The three Departments are making available nearly £3 million over the three years 1991-92 to 1993-94. We expect to fund a pilot programme of some 30 local development initiatives worked up by LEAs and TECs.

The initiatives will be based on an examination of needs and of existing provision in the area. It will be for LEAs and TECs to decide what to propose, but we would expect to see such developments as "compacts" which would prepare people for specific employment; basic skills training in the workplace; and supported self-study and open learning. The lessons learnt from the pilot will be disseminated nationally to assist the development of similar activity in other areas.

Schools Expenditure

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was spent per pupil at primary and secondary schools in Lancashire in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure in 1978-79, at constant prices.

Mr. Fallon: Lancashire spent £320 per nursery and primary pupil in 1978-79 and £985 in 1988-89, the latest year for which figures are available. It spent £495 per secondary pupil in 1978-79 and £1,620 in 1988-89. At 1988-89 prices those figures are £700 and £985 respectively for nursery and primary schools, and £1,085 and £1,620 respectively for secondary schools.

Loan Sanctions

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria he used to determine to grant (a) the London borough of Greenwich and (b) all neighbouring boroughs loan sanction for education capital projects; and what the level is in (i) Greenwich and (ii) each neighbouring borough.

Mr. Fallon: The criteria for all LEAs in England were set out in the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 17 December 1990, Official Report, columns 41-50.

In-service Training

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to abolish the five in-service training days for teachers which were added to the second year in 1987.

Mr. Eggar: The Government have no plans to change the provisions in the school teachers' pay and conditions document with regard to non-contact days for in-service training and other activities. These require teachers to be available for work for 195 days in any year, of which 190 days shall be days on which they may be required to teach pupils.

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers in (a) England and (b) Wales have taken early retirement in each of the years since 1979 on grounds of (i) redundancy/interests of efficiency and (ii) health.

Mr. Fallon: Separate figures in respect of ill-health retirements from (a) England and (b) Wales are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The information relating to premature retirement figures, together with the total number of ill-health retirements, is as follows:

Higher Education

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn, Official Report, 16 January 1991, column 506, if he will place in the Library the report, "International Comparisons and Higher Education."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A copy of the report "International Comparisons of Higher Education" has been placed in the Library.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table in the Official Report listing the capital allocations for each grant-maintained school for 1990-91 and 1991-92, with the number of pupils on the roll of each school and the name of the local education authority in which it is situated with totals.

Mr. Eggar: The table lists the total value of the allocations for named capital projects in grant-maintained schools to begin in the two years. Each grant-maintained school is eligible to claim an amount of capital grant calculated according to a formula which takes account of the number of pupils on roll. Schools becoming grant-maintained during the course of the financial year are also eligible to claim grant for the part year. The grant is to be used for small capital works and purchase of items of equipment. For 1990-91 the formula was £13,000 plus £6 per pupil on roll. For 1991-92 the formula will be £19,000 plus £9 per pupil on roll.

[1] Financial Year.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the changes in financial arrangements when a school obtains grant-maintained status.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The principal changes when a school becomes grant-maintained are:

Annual maintenance grant is paid to it by the Department and recouped as appropriate from the school's former maintaining local education authority;

Certain specific grants are available to the school which may also apply for capital grant; and

The school's accounting, financial control and reporting arrangements must take account of guidance from the Department.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the plans for capital grant expenditure on grant-maintained schools for the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: The planned level of capital expenditure on grant-maintained schools in 1991-92 is £10·5 million. Grant-maintained schools are receiving allocations for named capital projects with a total value of £8·4 million to begin in 1991-92. It is assumed that about £4·5 million of this sum will be spent in 1991-92.

When schools become grant maintained we want to ensure they are set up on a sound basis. This has led, on average, to higher capital allocations for the GM sector in 1991-92 than for LEA-maintained schools.

Of the 56 eligible schools, 28 have received an allocation for a named capital project; two have a project on a design list which will enable the school to proceed with the planning stages of the project; and nine schools which were approved for grant-maintained status towards the end of 1990 will have their capital bids considered in the next few weeks. An announcement will be made in due course.

Priority in the allocations has been given to schools' most pressing needs, including projects related to the health and safety of pupils, and to projects concerned with the introduction of the national curriculum, especially in science and technology. Each grant-maintained school is eligible to receive a formula-based allocation to be used for small capital works and items of capital equipment. The average allocation is £25,000, which is 50 per cent. higher on average than the allocations in 1990-91. The total cost in 1991-92 for the grant-maintained schools already approved for grant-maintained status is about £1·5 million.

The remaining £4·5 million of expenditure in 1991-92 is available to allow for expenditure arising from projects begun in 1990-91, the prospect of allocations to some of the nine schools whose bids were not requested until the latter part of January, part-year formula allocations for schools becoming grant-maintained during the 1991-92 financial year, and a contingency margin.

The following is a list of the named capital allocations.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Forestry Conservation

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total amount of aid given in each year since 1980 for forestry conservation projects.

Mrs. Chalker: 1. The Overseas Development Administration's statistics do not show separate figures for aid expenditure on forestry conservation. Figures for bilateral aid expenditure on all types of forestry in the years 1980 to 1986, including research, training, other technical co-operation and Commonwealth Development Corporation projects, were provided in the written answer of the then Minister for Overseas Development, my right hon. Friend the Member for Bath (Mr. Patten), to the question of the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 9 May 1988, at column 9. Figures showing Overseas Development Administration vis-à-vis Commonwealth Development Corporation expenditure for the years 1983 to 1987 were provided in my right hon. Friend's written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 15 May 1989, at column 21.

2. Estimated bilateral aid expenditure on all types of forestry, except training, for the calendar years 1988 and 1989 was:

	Expenditure by Overseas Development Administration £'000	Commonwealth Development Corporation £'000	Total £'000
1988	7,768	3,391	11,159
1989	8,903	2,820	11,724

Details of expenditure on training could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The expenditure on agreed commitments in these years is subject to the time lag effect and will show mainly in 1991 and beyond.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether participants in job interview guarantee work trials will be subject to benefit penalties if (a) they refuse to participate in a work trial employment placement, (b) they leave a work trial placement early, (c) they reject the job at the end of the work trial period, or (d) they are dismissed for whatever reason by the work trial employer; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many employers have participated in job interview guarantee work trials in each of the 20 pilot areas; how many claimants have participated in these work trials; how many claimants are currently participating in work trials; and how many participants have got full-time employment with their work trial employer;

(3) whether participants in job interview guarantee job preparation courses will be entitled to the same conditions and terms as those claimants attending conventional restart courses; and if he will make a statement;

(4) how many agreements have been made with employers to operate the job interview guarantee scheme in each of the 20 pilot areas; how many unemployed people have taken part in the scheme in each area; and how many participants have secured full-time employment with their sponsoring employer.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred these questions for reply.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. Forth: My Department has introduced a range of measures to promote energy efficiency, including:

the creation of a Departmental energy strategy which inter alia commits us to achieve an energy saving of 15 per cent. over the next five years.
the appointment of a Departmental Energy Manager to co-ordinate initiatives in energy conservation.
the setting up of an intensive basic training programme for energy managers at regional and area level.
the setting up of a "spend to save" budget to fund various initiatives.
the setting up of a programme of energy surveys, targeting those buildings with the best potential for savings.
the setting up of computerised energy monitoring and targeting systems to identify energy waste. guidance to staff on how to become more energy conscious.
the relamping of buildings with energy saving lighting, particularly when a building is being refurbished.

My Department's energy strategy will be closely monitored and other energy-saving measures will be introduced when suitable opportunities arise.

In the financial year 1989-90, expenditure on energy rose by 3·3 per cent., which is less than the increase in energy prices in the same period. Consumption figures for this year are not available. Moreover, my Department's new and revised energy strategy was not introduced until April 1990.

Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each region and for Great Britain as a whole the number and proportion of employment training leavers who obtained a vocational qualification.

Mr. Jackson: The following table gives the proportion of trainees leaving employment training between July 1989 and June 1990, the latest date for which information is available, who obtained a qualification or credit or who were awaiting results. Numbers of trainees achieving qualifications or credits towards qualifications are not available.

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people attended a Restart interview in the last six months available for each region and for Great Britain as a whole; and what were the results of those interviews broken down in the manner of the answer to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Lee) of 18 December, Official Report, column 148.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what numbers of unemployed people (i) attended and (ii) refused to attend Restart training courses (a) nationally and (b) in Bolton in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred these questions for reply.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the current average tariff for bed-and-breakfast accommodation in three-star hotels in central London.

Mr. Forth: My Department does not have this information in respect of the star schemes operated by the AA and the RAC. However, for the English tourist board's "crown" classification and grading scheme, figures from the London tourist board indicate that the current average bed-and-breakfast tariff in central London for three-crown accommodation is £70·00 per night for two people occupying a double room with en-suite facilities.

Factory Inspectors, Stockport

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the occasions on which factory inspectors visited Vernon Mill and Taymar Gas in Stockport during the last 10 years.

Disabled Workers

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last discussed with (a) the Confederation of British Industry and (b) the Trades Union Congress the special difficulties experienced by disabled people seeking work.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 22 January 1991]: I have not discussed this subject with either organisation. However, both the Confederation of British Industry and the Trades Union Congress were invited by my Department to comment on the consultative document "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities", which was published on 29 June 1990, and on the summary paper, "Evaluation of Special Schemes for People with Disabilities", which was published on 2 November 1990.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Syria

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Syria about the human rights situation in Syria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 4 December 1990, Vol. 182, c. 63.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communications he has had with Amnesty International and other human rights organisations about the human rights situation in Syria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We maintain informal contact with Amnesty International and receive representations from other organisations and individuals, including hon. Members, about human rights in Syria.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on whether Syria has ceased to provide safe haven for any groups involved in the promotion of international terrorism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received welcome assurances from the Syrian Government that Syria rejects acts of international terrorism and will take action against the perpetrators of such acts where there is convincing evidence.

Hong Kong

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he intends to take to ensure that immigration officials in Hong Kong are following correct immigration procedures for Vietnamese applicants; and if he will increase funding to the mission of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Hong Kong.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The criteria applied by the Hong Kong immigration authorities to determine refugee status are those laid down in the 1951 convention and the 1967 protocol relating to the status of refugees. Their procedure follow UNHCR guidelines. The UNHCR is free to monitor these procedures as well as the appeals procedure which is to an independent refugee status review board headed by a former judge. UNHCR provides counselling and legal advice to all asylum seekers during the determination process. In addition, private lawyers are allowed access to the boat people centres to provide legal advice to individual clients.

Although we do not directly fund the mission of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Hong Kong, we are among the major contributors to UNHCR. In 1990 we contributed £19·9 million of which some £8·5 million was for the comprehensive plan of action for Indo-Chinese refugees. We expect our contribution in 1991 to be at least as high as our contribution in 1990.

Ammunition, Belgium

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral reply of 16 January 1991, Official Report, column 836, if he will indicate what discussions are taking place on the restrictions placed by the Belgium Government on the supply of ammunition to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During the past weeks we have put several requests to Belgium and other partners for logistic and other support for British forces in the Gulf. Details are confidential. The requests have been under discussion both bilaterally and within the Western European Union. Although the Belgian Government felt unable to meet all our requests, other allies were able to meet the shortfall. The Belgian Government have helped in other ways, notably in providing medical and air transport support. They have also deployed combat aircraft to Turkey and provided other assistance in the region. At the WEU ministerial meeting on 17 January we advised partners that we might be making further requests in due course. We would hope that any such requests would receive swift and sympathetic consideration.

The Gulf

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government were first consulted on the timing of the allied attack on Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister was in regular consultation with President Bush about the possibility of needing to use force if Iraq did not withdraw from Kuwait at the end of the deadline. He discussed with President Bush the precise timing of the attack very shortly after the conclusion of the debate in the House on 15 January.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Bregenz House, Bangor

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will arrange for a local public inquiry to be held under article 103 of the Planning Order 1972 into the application to build premises to be known as Bregenz house on the seafront at Bangor.

Mr. Hanley: No. The application did not meet any of the criteria set down in the Planning Order (Northern Ireland) 1972.

Fair Employment

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to assess whether the Brownlow community trust at Craigavon is following good employment practice in keeping with the policy of the Fair Employment Commission.

Mr. Hanley: Brownlow community trust is not a registered concern under the Fair Employment (NI) Act 1989. The commission has had no dealings with the trust.

Hospitals

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the nature of the proposed capital expenditure envisaged under the heading "Mater Hospital Vacated Spaces" in the draft review entitled "Management Content" issued by the Eastern health and social services board.

Mr. Hanley: It is the adaptation of existing accommodation to provide facilities for a gynaecological unit and a medical unit, including the upgrading of the existing sanitary annexes and ward pantries.

The estimated cost of the works including fees and equipment is £791,000 spread over three years, with £200,000 being expended in 1991-92.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the reason for the proposed replacement of the cooling towers at Belfast city hospital; and what is the estimated cost.

Mr. Hanley: It is to eliminate the risk of an outbreak of Legionnaires disease, with regard to the type of towers in use, their age and the Department of Health guidance document "The Control of Legionnellae in Health Care Premises—A Code of Practice" (1988).

The estimated cost is £700,000.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Eastern health and social services board is permitted to use the proceeds of sale of land, buildings and equipment at the Royal group of hospitals and the Mater Infirmorum.

Mr. Hanley: Each health and social services board is permitted to use the proceeds of sales of its surplus land, buildings and equipment for reinvestment and is free to decide where these funds should be used.

Skilled Workers

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to how many firms in England and Wales experiencing shortages of skilled workers have transferred to or established subsidiaries in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Over the last five years, 12 companies from England and Wales have accepted financial assistance from the Industrial Development Board (IDB) to establish operations in Northern Ireland. These operations are in addition to public sector organisations, such as the Inland Revenue, the Department of Social Security and the Passport Office which have set up in Northern Ireland to serve clients in Great Britain.

It is unlikely that their decisions were based entirely on the skill shortages being experienced by many companies in Great Britain, although this may have been the driving force in some instances. Certainly the Province's abundant supply of well-educated and skilled people, eager for work, is a compelling attraction; but Northern Ireland also offers an excellent infrastructure, including a state-of-the-art fibre optic telecommunication system, a lower operating cost base and a very good quality of life for managers who may be asked to transfer. It is for a combination of these reasons, plus the availability of assistance from the IDB, that Ministers remain confident that companies from Great Britain will continue to locate in Northern Ireland.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Loans

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what figures he has on the proportion of commercial property loans to equity in each of the major banks.

Mr. Maples: The Treasury does not have such figures for individual banks. However, aggregated figures showing shareholders' funds and exposure to particular sectors of the economy for members of the Committee of London and Scottish Bankers are published in the committee's annual "Abstract of Banking Statistics" and the monthly updates of this.

Tobacco Tax

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on taxation on tobacco; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on the taxation of tobacco products, but I cannot anticipate his Budget statement.

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show the tax paid on a pack of 20 cigarettes in each Economic Community country as a percentage of the total price and the average price of a pack of 20 cigarettes in each country; and what the figures were five years ago.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The figures for current and 1986 taxation and price levels of a pack of 20 cigarettes in each EC country are as follows.

Excise and VAT on 20 cigarettes in the most popular price category as at 18 January 1991

Day Nurseries

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost in 1991-92 of replacing the exemption for day nurseries with zero-rating.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Nurseries are not registrable for VAT, so there is no reliable information available on the cost of replacing the current exemption with zero rating.

Trade Balance

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the trade balance with the other countries of the European Community in 1979, expressed in 1990 prices; and what it is now.

Mr. Mellor: Information on trade with member countries of the European Community is not available at constant prices. Information for the EC as a whole is available at current prices on the Central Statistical Office database, which may be accessed through the Library of the House.

Manufactured Goods (Exports)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of exports of manufactured goods.

Mr. Mellor: In volume terms, exports of manufactures in the year to date—November 1990—show an increase of 9½ per cent. over the same period a year earlier.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the export performance of United Kingdom manufacturers during 1990.

Mr. Mellor: In the 11 months to November 1990 the volume of manufactured exports, excluding erratics, was 9½ per cent. higher than a year earlier. United Kingdom manufacturers' share of world trade is likely to have risen in 1990 for the second successive year. This share has stabilised since the early 1980s, after decades of decline.

Departmental Relocation

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress Departments have made under the Government's relocation policy.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My predecessor informed the House on January 1990 that, in accordance with the policy announced by the then Paymaster General on 31 March 1988, Departments had already announced decisions to relocate well over 16,000 posts away from the south-east. There are no central targets or preferred locations under this policy. Departments review the location of their work systematically, with a view to finding easier labour markets and better value for money. The guidelines require Departments to consult the regional policy and territorial Departments and DOE Property Holdings about potential relocation venues, and to report progress to the Treasury in the annual public expenditure survey.

By the end of June 1990 Departments had identified nearly 7,000 further posts for location or relocation away from the south-east, bringing the total since 1988 to nearly 23,000. More than 1,000 others have been identified for cost-effective transfer within the south-east, and some 15,000 have been reviewed but judged not suitable for relocation at this stage. Almost 13,000 are still at various stages in the review process. When these reviews are complete, over 51,000 posts in the south-east will have been subject to review—equivalent to 24 per cent. of total posts in the region; and further posts will be reviewed in the coming year.

Three quarters of the posts identified for transfer are destined for locations within assisted or urban programme areas and at least half are expected to be filled through local recruitment. Around 6,000 posts have already been moved since the beginning of 1988, which exceeds the figure for the whole of the period 1974-79 and compares favourably with the 12,000 posts moved or created outside the south-east between 1979-1987.

Successful relocation requires careful planning. Departments exchange experience and, where appropriate, co-ordinate action with other Departments, with some transfers between Departments for staff not wishing to move and with good use being made of the extra flexibilities now available in the personnel management field.

Local Government Finance

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his reply of 14 December 1990 to the right hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham, Official Report, column 538, if he will estimate by how much the standard rate of personal income tax would need to be increased if (a) education and (b) education, fire and police were financed by income tax, assuming no change in the grants paid by central Government to the local authorities; and if he will also estimate savings in community charge benefit in each case.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 15 January 1991]: If local authorities spend in line with central Government's assessments in 1991-92, expenditure on education in Great Britain will be around £21 billion, expenditure on education, fire and law and order services will be around £28 billion, and total income from the community charge would be around £14·5 billion.

Assuming no change were made in the level of revenue support grant and non-domestic rates paid by central Government to local authorities, the basic rate of income tax would need to increase by (a) 8½p and (b) 10p if these services were financed by income tax. However, if education, fire and law and order services were funded in line with these proposals, the extra central Government funding would more than exceed anticipated community charge income for 1991-92. The saving on community charge benefit would be around £2 billion.

Government Telecommunications Unit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the reply given to the hon. Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 15 January, Official Report, column 463, what direct costs to public funds there were as a result of the negotiations with Racal Data Network Ltd. from 15 February 1990 onwards; where in the public accounts those costs will be recorded; and whether he proposes to allocate additional resources to the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency to continue to prepare a future Government telecommunications service.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 22 January 1991]: The costs to public funds of the Government telecommunications service—GTS—negotiations, and related telecommunications research, were some £2·4 million. These costs were borne by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency—CCTA—the five participating Departments, and the Treasury Solicitor's Department. Expenditure on the project prior to 31 March 1990 was accounted for in the appropriation accounts of CCTA—class XIX vote 13—Department of Employment—class VI vote 2—Department of Social Security—class XV vote 7—Inland Revenue—class XVIII vote 6—Her Majesty's Customs and Excise—class XVIII vote 5—Department of Finance and Personnel (Northern Ireland)—DFP vote 1—and Treasury Solicitor's Department—class X vote 9. Expenditure in the 1990-91 financial year will be accounted for in the following appropriation accounts: Her Majesty's Treasury—class XVIII vote 1—Department of Employment—class VI vote 2—

Department of Social Security—class XVI vote 7— Inland Revenue—class XVIII vote 6—Her Majesty's Customs and Excise—class XVIII vote 5—Department of Finance and Personnel (Northern Ireland)—DFP vote 1—Treasury Solicitor's Department—class X vote 9.

There are no plans to implement an alternative GTS. As I reported to the House on 15 January, the Departments concerned in the GTS negotiations will now be considering, with the CCTA, how best to meet future telecommunications requirements.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to exempt carers of mentally handicapped people from tax on a proportion of their earnings as carers.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 22 January 1991]: Whether income tax has to be paid on payments received for caring for a mentally handicapped person will depend on the circumstances. In particular, these payments will give rise to a tax liability only if they exceed the actual costs which the recipient incurs in caring for the handicapped person.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received concerning the backdating of tax on income earned caring for mentally handicapped people.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 22 January 1991]: None.

HEALTH

Theft

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member of Norfolk, North dated 7 December 1990, Official Report, column 217, on health service theft, fraud, and so on, what is (a) the number of cases reported to the police by Norwich health authority in each year since 1982, (b) the number of cases in which prosecutions subsequently took place and (c) the number of convictions and sentences which ensued;

(2) pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member of Norfolk, North of 7 December 1990, Official Report, column 217, on health service theft, fraud, and so on, if he will give details of cases (a) reported to police, (b) where prosecutions took place and (c) of conviction and sentence, stating the name of health authority concerned and the nature of the offence in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I have written to my hon. Friend.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the numbers of operations and waiting lists for ear, nose and throat operations carried out by year since 1985 in (a) Sunderland area health authority, (b) Durham area health authority and (c) Hartlepool area health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The available information is given in the table. 1987-88 is the first year for which details of operations by specialty and by district health authority are held centrally.

Ear, Nose and Throat Operations.

	Number of operations 1987-88	Waiting list 31 March 1988	Percentage waiting over one year
Hartlepool	585	142	1
Sunderland	4,122	842	0

	Number of operations 1988-89	Waiting list 31 March 1989	Percentage waiting over one year
Hartlepool	553	67	7
Sunderland	4,640	1,256	0

	Number of operations 1989-90	Waiting list 31 March 1990	Percentage waiting over one year
Hartlepool	523	282	3
Sunderland	4,558	1,188	0

Note: Durham figures are included with those of Sunderland. Sunderland provides an ENT service for Durham and South Tyneside District Health Authorities.

Nurses (Prescribing Rights)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to permit limited prescribing rights for nurses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We support the principle of nurse prescribing. Implementation is dependent on the outcome of work currently being carried out, in particular on the economic implications.

NHS Laundries

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what technical criteria are taken into account by health authorities when appointing independent technical consultants to evaluate competitive tenders for national health service laundry services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for the health authority concerned. The usual requirements are for wide experience in laundry operations, expertise in assessing the capabilities of tenderers to perform to contract requirements, and knowledge to assist the authority in selecting the most cost-effective service options.

Hospital Meals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by (a) regional health authority and (b) area health authority the average weekly cost of providing meals for in-patients, for the latest date for which he has figures.

Mr. Dorrell: The health service indicators for 1988-89, which are available in the Library, include the average daily cost of meals for in-patients for regional and district health authorities—indicator CA01. These are the latest figures available.

Disability

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received over the past year about when the Disabled Persons' (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 is likely to be fully implemented.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 13 November 1990 at column 111. Since then we have answered two parliamentary questions and one letter on this issue.

Land Sales (Trent)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the capital expenditure of the Trent regional health authority he expects it to obtain from sales of land.

Mr. Dorrell: It is currently forecast that Trent regional health authority's land sales will make up 21 per cent. of the region's capital spending in 1990-91.

Incontinence

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for reviewing the quality of service and advice available to people with problems of incontinence.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department is currently considering ways in which good practice in the provision of incontinence services can be disseminated more widely throughout the country.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Computers

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects Her Majesty's Government to respond to the 1989-90 report of the Select Committee on House of Commons (Services) about computer services for Members (HC614).

Mr. MacGregor: I hope to be able to find time for a debate on this important report before long.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Orders in Council

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the Orders in Council which have been approved in the current year.

Mr. MacGregor: No Orders in Council have been made in 1991.

Privy Council

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the Privy Council last met; and what topics were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: The last meeting of the Privy Council was on 19 December 1990. It is not the practice to disclose the proceedings at such meetings.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the current Privy Councillors.

Mr. MacGregor: An alphabetical list of Privy Councillors is published annually in "Whitaker's Almanack" and a list by precedence is published quarterly in Vacher's Parliamentary Companion. The list shown in the November 1990 edition of the latter shows all current Privy Councillors with the exception of Mr. Richard Ryder. The formalities for the appointment to the Privy Council of Mr. Alan Clark and Mrs. Angela Rumbold announced in the new year honours list will take place next month.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Glass

17. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to promote the British glass industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My Department encourages growth in all markets by promoting enterprise and by creating a climate in which all sectors of industry can flourish. There are no plans for any new initiatives specifically for the glass industry.

Post Office

18. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any proposals to introduce greater competition into the Post Office.

Mr. Leigh: The Post Office's letter monopoly is a privilege, not a right. While we keep the options on the letter monopoly under review we have no present plans to alter the scope of the letter monopoly, although in the event of a cessation or serious disruption to the letter service we would consider suspending it. The Government and the Post Office remain fully committed to the existence of a national letter service available to everyone, including those in rural areas, at a reasonable and uniform tariff.

25. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to ensure that all parts of the country continue to receive a high standard of letter and parcel delivery services.

Mr. Leigh: Decisions concerning aspects of the day-to-day running of the Post Office, such as those affecting the quality of the postal service, are the operational responsibility of the Post Office. The chairman of the Post Office regards quality of service for the customer as a key priority and is constantly searching for ways to improve performance in this crucial area. We welcome his emphasis on achieving better quality of service.

GATT

19. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress of the Uruguay round of the GATT and its implications for the manufacturing sector in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley: As I said earlier, negotiations in the Uruguay round are continuing, and we hope they will yield results which will be of substantial benefit to United Kingdom industry. As we export about a quarter of what we produce, we stand to gain from the opening up of world markets, and to share in the greater wealth that trade generates.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

21. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Multilateral negotiations to agree a successor regime to govern international trade in textiles after the MFA expires on 31 July 1991 have been taking place as part of the wider GATT Uruguay round. The United Kingdom and EC, together with all other negotiating partners, are committed to integrating the textiles sector into GATT on the basis of strengthened rules and disciplines.

Regional Policy

22. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department intends to bring forward any new proposals in the field of regional policy.

Mr. Leigh: We have no plans to introduce new regional measures, but policy is kept under continuing review. The Government remain committed to an effective regional policy and will continue to make the necessary resources available.

Brewing

23. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any proposals to increase the degree of competition in the brewing industry.

Mr. Redwood: The measures that we have already introduced following the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of beer are designed to sharpen competition in the brewing industry. We have asked the Director General of Fair Trading to keep the effect of these measures under review and will consider further steps to promote competition if it should be shown that they are needed.

Manufacturing Industry

24. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet the president of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss manufacturing industry.

Mr. Redwood: Ministers and officials of my Department keep in touch with the CBI on a wide range of business matters. I met the CBI twice during the week beginning 14 January, once to discuss wider ownership and once to discuss the outlook for pay and productivity.

Iraq

26. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the effect of sanctions against Iraq on British industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: In 1989 visible exports to Iraq and Kuwait formed 0·75 per cent. of our exports worldwide. The effect of sanctions against Iraq on British industry has varied according to companies' reliance on that market, and the extent to which they had taken out insurance.

Political Donations (Company Law)

27. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any proposals to amend company law in respect of political donations.

Mr. Redwood: Companies are required to disclose in their directors' report details of every political donation exceeding £200 made in the course of the financial year. These provisions operate satisfactorily and no amendments are needed.

Office Equipment

28. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the present balance of trade in office equipment with (a) the EC and (b) the rest of the world.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is no sector in official statistics which covers all office equipment. In the sector of office machines and automatic data-processing machines, however, the United Kingdom had a positive crude balance of trade of £547 million with the EC countries and a deficit of £1,939 million with the rest of the world in the year to November 1990.

Solvent-based Products

29. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received regarding the adequacy of the provisions contained in the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act designed to restrict the sale of solvent-based products to minors.

Mr. Leigh: I have received a small number of representations, but I am satisfied that the provisions in the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act are adequate to cut off sniffers' supplies at source. It is now a matter of local enforcement of the law.

Company Sizes

30. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the average size of companies in (a) other EC countries and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: No comparable data on the average size of companies in different EC countries are readily available. However, the vast majority of companies in all EC countries are bound to be very small.

Accounting and Auditing

31. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will review the regulations on accounting and auditing in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: The statutory provisions on company accounts and auditing are extensive. If the hon. Member has a particular problem in mind and cares to send me details, I shall be pleased to consider it.

Biotechnology Products

32. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the present United Kingdom share of the world market in biotechnology products.

Mr. Leigh: There are no market statistics for biotechnology products since they are aggregated within those for pharmaceuticals, chemicals, agriculture and food.

Business Investment

33. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment has been made of new business investment in the black country.

Mr. Leigh: No official survey of new business investment in the four black country boroughs of Wolverhampton, Sandwell, Dudley and Walsall has been undertaken. Since the beginning of 1988 my Department has, however, committed £19·7 million to industry in the black country in the form of regional selective assistance grants. This figure is associated with an overall investment of £187·3 million and the creation and safeguarding of nearly 10,000 jobs.

Soviet Union (Aid)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, what role his Department is playing in the European Communities' aid provision for the Soviet Union.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department has been closely involved in the discussion about the Community's package of aid to the Soviet Union.

As the House will be aware from the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 15 January, the Community's package of aid will not be implemented unless the Soviet authorities reverse their recent actions in the Baltic states.

Information Technology

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to facilitate the move to open systems for hardware and software.

Mr. Leigh: The Department is currently playing a leading role in promoting the uptake and use of open systems across business. It is contributing significantly towards generation of international and European open systems standards. Many of these standards are now being implemented by IT suppliers in new products and systems. Encouragement is being given towards establishing a United Kingdom open systems interconnection (OSI) conformance testing facility. Harmonisation of European and international certification schemes, essential for providing assurance that products and systems conform to open systems standards, is being promoted.

The Department's programme of open systems technology transfer (OSTT) aims to make all sectors of industry, both public and private, aware of the business benefits that can be achieved through use of open systems. As part of this programme the Department is assisting in the production of a comprehensive guide listing computer products which are available in the United Kingdom, conforming to open systems standards. Progress in the development of open systems standards for use in the public sector has enabled the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency of Her Majesty's Treasury to produce the United Kingdom Government OSI profile (GOSIP). This advises Departments on how open systems interconnection standards may be adopted when implementing their IT computer procurement programmes.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the present level of his Department's investment in safety-critical software systems.

Mr. Leigh: The Department of Trade and Industry uses administrative computer systems which by their nature do not raise issues of safety. However, as part of its responsibility for stimulating best practice in the software industry, it has led the "Safe IT" initiative to stimulate action to improve the reliability of safety-related software and systems. The consultative document, launched in June 1990 in conjunction with several Government Departments represented on the Interdepartmental Committee on Software Engineering (ICSE), includes proposals for standards, training and education, research and development and technology transfer. The Department's aim is to stimulate action which will reflect the concerns of all interested parties—from Government Departments through professional institutions and suppliers to all users of safety-related systems.

Mineral Stockpile

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what type of material is contained in the strategic mineral stockpile.

Mr. Leigh: The hon. Member has asked similar questions on two occasions. I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave on 16 November at column 236.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Finance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the capital and current costs and budgets incurred by central Government Departments and local authority departments to cover the planning, implementation and enforcement of the poll tax for each year since 1986-87 until the end of 1992-93 in respect of expenditure on (a) transitional grants and other transitional arrangements, (b) additional members of staff, (c) capital costs of administrative systems, (d) collection and enforcement costs, (e) expenses involved in diligence, (f) additional payments of benefits and (g) additional costs of administration for benefit systems, together with total costs incurred in any advertising or promotion relating to new poll tax procedures.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The available information is as follows:

Local Authority Costs

Current expenditure—administration of community charge

Based on local authorities' returns to the Scottish Office, the costs of administering the community charge for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91 are as follows:

	1989-90 Budget estimate £ million	1989-90 Provisional outturn £ million	1990-91 Budget estimate £ million
Community charge collection	23·3	17·2	38·9
Community charge registration	8·5	8·7	14·3
Total	31·8	25·9	53·2

Notes:

1. Any current expenditure costs incurred in the years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 were included within the cost of the running of the rating system and are not separately identifiable.
2. The information for 1991-92 will not be received before mid-February. Information about 1992-93 will not be received before mid-February 1992.
3. Although these figures include staffing costs as well as expenditure incurred in the recovery of arrears, these costs are not identified separately in local authorities' returns.

Current Expenditure—Administration of Community Charge Benefit Scheme

Again based on local authorities' returns to the Scottish Office, the costs of administering the Community Charge Benefit Scheme are as follows:

£ million

1989-90 Budget Estimate	1989-90 Provisional Outturn	1990-91 Budget Estimate
9·60	9·45	11·02

Note: These figures include the cost to the 3 Islands Councils of administering the Housing Benefit Scheme. In the case of these authorities the figures for the Community Charge Benefit Scheme are not identified separately.

Current Expenditure—Administration of Community Charge Transitional Relief Scheme

Information about the costs incurred by local authorities in administering the Community Charge Transitional Relief Scheme is not yet available centrally.

Capital Expenditure

No information is held centrally on the capital costs actually incurred by local authorities in connection with the administration of the community charge, but additional capital consent amounting to £21 million was provided in the years 1988-89 and 1989-90 for this purpose.

Central Government Costs

Costs in connection with the Community Charge Benefit Scheme are a matter for the Department of Social Security. So far as the Scottish Office is concerned, the costs do not vary greatly from those incurred in connection with the domestic rates system.

Publicity Costs

Costs incurred by the Scottish Office on publicity in relation to the community charge system are as follows:

1987-88 £	1988-89 £	1989-90 £	1990-91 £
481,000	524,000	74,000	10,000

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of local government income in Scotland came from (a) domestic rates/poll tax, (b) non-domestic rates and (c) rate/revenue support grant and specific grants, in each year since 1973-74.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Figures are not available for 1973-74 and 1974-75. The information for later years is given in the table.

	Domestic rates/ Community charge per cent.	Non-domestic rate per cent.	Rate/Revenue support grant and specific grants per cent.
1975-76	15·55	19·63	64·82
1976-77	14·23	18·62	67·15
1977-78	14·80	19·72	65·48
1978-79	12·01	22·48	65·51
1979-80	12·11	22·89	65·00
1980-81	13·14	24·54	62·32
1981-82	15·58	28·23	56·19
1982-83	16·12	28·57	55·31
1983-84	15·48	27·64	56·88
1984-85	16·19	28·36	55·45
1985-86	17·62	28·34	54·04
1986-87	18·92	29·83	51·25
1987-88	19·47	29·94	50·59
1988-89	19·22	29·19	51·59
1989-90	21·52	25·77	52·71
1990-91	21·73	23·82	54·45

Notes:

1. The figures for domestic and non-domestic rates are derived from data published in the Rating Review for the relevant years up to 1988-89. For 1989-90 and 1990-91 the amounts for the community charge and non-domestic rate income are taken from the Provisional Outturn/Budget Estimate returns made by local authorities to the Scottish Office.
2. The forecasts for rate and revenue support grants and specific grants are final amounts or those applying to the most recent Order.
3. Domestic rates figures are net of domestic rate relief.
4. All figures of domestic rate and community charge income are inclusive of rebates.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what expenditure has been incurred by his Department in ensuring slaughterhouses in Scotland meet EC standards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Office does not provide any special financial assistance for compliance with EC standards in slaughterhouses. Advice on these standards is available from the state veterinary service.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the annual level of unemployment in Scotland in each year since 1974.

Mr. Allan Stewart: This information is available on the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. Library staff are ready to assist in accessing the information if necessary.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the Scottish industrial work force is unskilled.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Estimates from the 1989 labour force survey indicate that 6·1 per cent. of those in employment in Scotland were in unskilled occupations.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was Scotland's share of United Kingdom employment in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In June 1979 Scotland's share of the civilian work force in employment in the United Kingdom was 9 per cent. In June 1989, the Scottish share was 8·5 per cent.

Fixed Capital Formation

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the gross domestic fixed capital formation per head in Scotland as a percentage of the United Kingdom total in each year from 1974 to the most recent available date.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The table gives the available information on gross domestic fixed capital formation—GDFCF—per head in Scotland as a percentage of the equivalent GDFCF per head for the United Kingdom from 1974 to 1988, the latest year for which figures are available. The footnotes to the table explain the coverage of the estimates in different periods.

[1] Leased assets are excluded.

[2] All figures exclude investment in land and existing buildings.

[3] Industries covered are Agriculture, Forestry and Fishing, Energy and Water supply, Manufacturing, Dwellings and Transport and Communications (excluding sea and air transport). United Kingdom figures exclude GDFCF on the Continental Shelf.

[4] Between 1974 and 1976, there is no information on GDFCF for Transport and Communications.

[5] The 1974-1979 estimates for private dwellings are not strictly comparable with estimates for later years.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures for Scotland's gross fixed capital formation as a percentage of the United Kingdom's, excluding the continental shelf, fixed capital formation for (a) all industries and (b) manufacturing for 1988 in a form comparable to that provided in his answer of 31 October 1990, Official Report, columns 589-90.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is given in the table.

Gross domestic fixed capital formations in Scotland for selected industries as a percentage of the United Kingdom excluding the continental shelf in 1988 are as follows:

Industry	Per cent.
All industries covered[1]	8·4
Manufacturing	8·3

[1]The industries covered are Agriculture, forestry and fishing, Energy and water supply, Manufacturing, Transport and communications (excluding sea and air transport) and Dwellings.

Note: Figures exclude leased assets and investment in land and existing buildings.

Manufacturing Plants

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the closest estimate he can provide of the percentage of manufacturing plants in Scotland which are United Kingdom-owned or controlled; and what percentage of Scottish manufacturing output is derived from (i) Scottish and (ii) United Kingdom-owned or controlled firms.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In 1988, according to the annual census of production, 95·8 per cent. of manufacturing plants in Scotland were United Kingdom-owned or controlled. The corresponding share of Scottish manufacturing gross output was 71·8 per cent. Information on Scottish ownership of manufacturing plants is not available.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what investment from the Scottish Development Agency has been allocated in the Monklands, West constituency since 1983.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is set out in the table.

1983-84	941,000
1984-85	1,727,000
1985-86	1,338,000
1986-87	551,000
1987-88	297,000
1988-89	118,000
1989-90	57,000

Skye (Crossing)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the rights of Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd. with regard to its future provision of a passenger or a passenger/vehicular ferry service between Kyle of Lochalsh and Kyleakin in the light of a bridge to Skye; what assessment he has made of the potential financial impact upon the economic viability of a toll-funded bridge of some form of ferry service continuing to operate after its completion; what advice he has given to Highland regional council and to the tendering companies, respectively, on these points; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd. will discontinue its vehicle service on the Kyle of Lochalsh-Kyleakin crossing when the Skye bridge is opened. It has no plans to operate any vehicle service on this crossing after that time.

A socio-economic study is about to be undertaken jointly by the Scottish Office environment department, HIDB, Highland regional council and Skye and Lochalsh district council on the impact of the bridge on the local communities. This study will assess the local need and demand for a passenger-only ferry.

Highland regional council and the companies tendering for a Skye bridge are fully aware of the situation.

Nurses (Grading)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail in the Official Report, broken down into each health board area within Scotland, the total numbers of (a) nurse regrading appeals, (b) successful appeals from the above total and (c) total additional expenditure associated with (b) arising from the last nursing regrading procedure.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the total number of nurse regrading appeals and on the number and cost of successful appeals in Scotland is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Poinding

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to eliminate the use of poinding to gather in poll tax.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No. Poinding is an integral part of the recovery of arrears of community charges.

Criminal Justice Legislation

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce legislation to incorporate any of the provisions of the Criminal Justice Bill into Scottish legislation.

Mr. Lang: Provisions in the Criminal Justice Bill which would increase the maximum levels on the standard scale of fines in summary procedure, alter the related periods of imprisonment in default, and enable the courts to recover fines through the attachment of income support, extend to Scotland.

The Bill also provides for changes in the parole system for England and Wales. We intend to introduce, at a suitable opportunity, legislation to implement our proposals, published in July 1990, in response to the Kincraig report "Parole and Related Issues in Scotland" (Cm. 598).

Proposals in the White Paper "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public"—Cm. 965—which other provisions in the Bill reflect, extended only to England and Wales.

Timber

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to introduce a freight subsidy for the carriage of timber felled in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Support for the carriage of timber by sea from Scottish island communities will continue to be provided by the tariff rebate subsidy —TRS—scheme. Following a review of the tariff rebate subsidy scheme in 1988, the subsidy for the transport of certain bulk commodities, including timber, by sea from mainland areas is being phased out and will end on 31 March 1991. There are no plans to introduce any freight subsidy for timber traffic carried by other transport modes.

Hospices, Renfrew

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide financial assistance for the development of hospices proposed or being operated by voluntary organisations in Renfrew district.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since 1 April 1990 all independent hospices in Scotland which do not require patients to make a financial contribution towards their care qualify for Government funding of at least 50 per cent. of their running costs.

Redundancies

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the number of people made redundant from the former Talbot factory in Linwood who have not worked in full-time employment since its closure.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I have no such information.

Sports Facilities

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is, for each year since 1985, the average expenditure of (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in sports facilities for their pupils in (i) Greater Glasgow, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not collected centrally.

British Sign Language

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which national health service district general hospitals in Scotland provide British sign language interpreters for deaf people; and which charge for this service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Scottish Civil Service

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by department the total number of persons employed by the Scottish Office on 1 January 1991 and on the same date in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table.

Personal Secretary (part-time)	2

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons and at what grades are employed as clerks in (a) the sheriff courts, (b) the Court of Session and (c) the High Court of Justiciary.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Staff of the Court of Session and of the High Court of Justiciary are now trained to be competent in all the work of the supreme courts and are no longer separately identified. Clerks in both the supreme courts and the sheriff courts have specific and separate job titles but are shown in the equivalent civil service grades in the table.

Overseas Representation

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any changes are being made to the overseas representation of Locate in Scotland and the Scottish Development Agency/Scottish Enterprise in the current year.

Mr. Allan Stewart: For the current year, neither the Scottish Development Agency nor Locate in Scotland have made, nor do they have any firm plans to make, any substantive changes to their overseas representation. The question of overseas representation is, however, kept under regular review to ensure that it is appropriate to prevailing market conditions.

Development Agencies

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make available the staffing structure of the Scottish Development Agency at its headquarters office and its equivalent under Scottish Enterprise.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The staffing structures of the Scottish Development Agency and of Scottish Enterprise are essentially operational matters to be determined by the board of each body. Details of the senior staff employed by the agency are set out in its annual report for 1990, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) which industrial sectors had Scottish Development Agency teams working in them in 1988; and how many staff were employed in each team;

(2) which industrial sectors have Scottish Enterprise teams scheduled to start on 1 April; and how many staff are to be employed in each team.

Mr. Allan Stewart: These are operational matters for the bodies concerned and I have asked their chief executives to write to the hon. Member.

Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the relevant expenditure for education on which his Department was willing to pay grant in every year since 1979 at 1990-91 prices.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is set out in the table.

Provision/grant aided expenditure at 1990-91 prices

	£ million
1978-79	1,631·2
1979-80	1,594·0
1980-81	1,466·4
1981-82	1,705·4
1982-83	1,860·4
1983-84	1,842·5
1984-85	1,770·6
1985-86	1,743·9
1986-87	1,746·1
1987-88	1,992·2
1988-89	1,925·5
1989-90	1,936·8
1990-91	1,973·1

Notes:

1. The figures for the years 1978-79 to 1983-84 inclusive include provision for libraries and museums as well as education in accordance with the provision categorisation provided in the Rate Support Grant Orders.
2. The figures for 1978-79 to 1988-89 inclusive are provision figures. Provision was replaced by grant aided expenditure (GAE) with effect from 1990-91.
3. The figures for all years are at 1990-91 prices calculated by means of the Treasury GDP deflator (October 1990).

Local Government Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the outturn figures for (a) all local government expenditure and (b) local government education expenditure in every year since 1979 at 1990-91 prices.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is set out in the table.

	Expenditure at 1990-91 prices £ million	Education expenditure at 1990-91 prices £ million
1978-79	4,224·6	1,792·8
1979-80	4,573·8	1,799·1

Notes

1. The figures in column 1 are inclusive of loan and leasing charges while those in column 2 are exclusive of such charges as separate loan and leasing charges for education are not readily available.
2. The figures are at final outturn to 1988-89, provisional outturn for 1989-90 and budget estimate for 1990-91.
3. All years have been converted to 1990-91 prices by means of the Treasury GDP deflator (October 1990).

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, following his announcement of increased assistance for business ratepayers, if he will make a statement on non-domestic rates for 1991-92.

Mr. Ian Lang: I am delighted that the additional resources which have become available to me allow greater progress to be made next year towards full harmonisation of non-domestic rates. The reduction of £100 million which I announced to the House on 17 January is more than twice what we included in the spending plans made last year and will mean a significant reduction in the gap between rate burdens north and south of the border. In spite of this major increase in funding, local authorities are still being asked to contribute only £10 million through efficiency savings.

The table shows the rate poundage which I intend to prescribe for each local authority in regulations that I shall lay before Parliament shortly. These regulations will revoke those made last week. The rate poundage reductions apply across the board to all authorities with the exception of Shetland where a reduction of about 6 per cent., around two thirds of the average, is sufficient to bring the local rate into line with next year's national non-domestic rate in England of 38·6p. There will, therefore, be no need for reductions in the Shetland rate poundage in future years under this policy and the number of areas in Shetland's position will increase as the policy proceeds to its conclusion.

As I also announced on 17 January, as a result of the larger reduction in poundages than previously intended I propose to reduce the level of derating next year from its present level of 35 to 30 per cent., not 32 per cent. I have already indicated that I intend reviewing the way in which poundages and derating may be reduced in future and the powers available to me, which do not allow me at the present time to set different levels of industrial derating in different areas within Scotland, and I would welcome the views of interested bodies on these matters.

GP Budgets

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the number of general practitioner firms that have applied to become budget holders in each health board area in Scotland; how many of these firms operate practices in rural areas; and when he expects to be able to confirm the final numbers of practices to be approved.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 January 1991]: So far, four practices—or in some cases groups of practices—have sought formal approval to commence fundholding from 1 April 1991. The health boards responsible are currently in the final stages of determining these applications. Details of these applications are provided in the table, including location as an indicator of degree of rurality.

Health Board and Location	Number of Practices
Tayside	2
Forfar
Dundee
Lothian	1
Edinburgh
Argyll and Clyde	1
Helensburgh

There is no time limit for the submission of applications, and a number of other practices are known to be working towards taking part in the scheme as from a later date.

Carstairs Hospital

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the number of patients at Carstairs hospital who have been kept there principally because (a) they are mentally disturbed criminals, (b) they are mentally ill but not criminals, (c) they are mentally handicapped and (d) other reasons for each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 January 1991]: Patients at the state hospital are classified as either restricted or state patients or detained non-restricted patients. Restricted patients have either been convicted of, or have been alleged to have committed, a criminal offence, but are considered by medical opinion to be suffering from a treatable mental disorder and to constitute a serious danger to the public. Detained patients will have previously been receiving treatment in ordinary psychiatric hospitals for mental disorder on a compulsory basis but have become sufficiently dangerous either to themselves or others to require to be detained in the secure conditions at Carstairs. The majority of these will not have committed any criminal offences.

The numbers in the categories requested are as follows:

	(a) Mentally disturbed patients who have committed offences	(b) Patients who are Mentally ill	(c)[1] Patients who have mental handicap	Other
1986	157	70	42	—
1987	146	64	49	—
1988	148	68	48	—
1989	163	66	40	—
1990	163	59	44	—

[1] These patients are also included under (a) and (b)

Notes: The figures are at 31 December in each year.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sewage Sludge Dumping

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on which two most recent dates the sites were monitored at which he allows Wessex Water and Welsh Water to dump, respectively, 55,000 and 300,000 tonnes of sewage sludge; what were the results; and what traces of organic and metal contaminants were found.

Mr. Curry: Monitoring at the Bristol channel sewage sludge disposal site was carried out in 1988 and 1990. The surveys were undertaken jointly by the Welsh and Wessex water authorities in 1988 and by the successor water companies in 1990 under conditions of disposal licences issued by the Ministry.

Sheep Dipping

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will arrange for any inquiry into changes of regulations on sheep dipping to be held in public.

Mr. Maclean: I announced on 21 June 1990 the Government's intention to review arrangements for the control of sheep scab during 1991. I am ready to take account of views expressed by any interested party on this as on all other issues.

Carlisle Office

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date his Carlisle office received the application forms at the end of 1989 for the sheep annual premium; on what date they were distributed to farmers; and on what date they were due to be returned.

Mr. Curry: Claim forms for the first application period under the sheep annual premium scheme 1990 could not be completed until certain important details had been clarified by the European Commission. The Carlisle divisional office received the forms on 11 December 1989, and dispatched them to interested farmers on 12 December. The closing date for the lodging of first period applications was 27 December 1989.

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent his Carlisle office is currently undermanned; and what requests he has had for extra staff appointments to be made.

Mr. Curry: The number of staff employed in our Carlisle office is currently one below complement in the administrative grades, and one below complement in the farm and countryside service. We have not received any direct requests for additional staff appointments to be made.

Food From Britain

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, for the three counties of Yorkshire and for Humberside, the sales of speciality food or drink products that Food From Britain has supported during 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Curry: Neither Food From Britain nor this Department have details of sales by groups supported under the speciality food group scheme, nor has any group in the counties mentioned in fact applied for such support.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received a copy of the report of the Institute of Economic Affairs concerning salmonella contamination in eggs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have received a copy of this report and have noted its contents. The Government's policy in relation to salmonella in eggs and poultry has been set out in evidence provided to the Select Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) of 14 January, Official Report, column 392, what existing measures will continue to be taken where necessary to protect public health with regard to poultry flocks infected with salmonella typhimurium.

Mr. Maclean: The Minister's authority to exercise his powers under the Animal Health Act 1981 and the Zoonoses Order 1989 remains in force in relation to all types of salmonella. The arrangements for the compulsory slaughter of breeding flocks infected with salmonella typhimurium are to continue unchanged. For commercial egg-laying flocks, the automatic slaughter policy will continue in relation to salmonella enteritidis which remains the prime cause of salmonella food poisoning in humans. If infection from another type of salmonella is confirmed in a laying flock, slaughter will be required if this is considered necessary in the circumstances in order to safeguard public health.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in the development of a diagnostic test for bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make a statement on the progress of his research programme into this disease.

Mr. Curry: A considerable programme of research is in progress, including priority work to try and develop a diagnostic test for bovine spongiform encephalopathy. However, the nature of bovine spongiform encephalopathy, including its long incubation period, means that answers cannot be expected for some time.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the future of milk quotas and whether milk quotas will remain at existing levels.

Mr. Curry: Since 1984 we have accepted milk quotas as the only negotiable means of controlling the cost to the Community of market support in the dairy sector. That cost is still excessive and I should welcome proposals from the European Commission for non-discriminatory quota cuts, together with support price adjustments as a step towards a more market-oriented regime. In the longer run the objective must be to move to levels of support which would permit the abandonment of quotas and allow market forces to influence production levels. In the meantime I have made it very clear that I could not contemplate discriminatory cuts in quota.

Sandwiches

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the British Sandwich Association concerning its quality assurance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The association has recently informed my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and the Border (Mr. Maclean) of the codes of practice that it is introducing for manufacturers and retailers of sandwiches. In his reply, my hon. Friend has acknowledged the efforts which the association has made since its formation in 1990 to raise safety and hygiene standards in the sandwich industry.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has, by port, on the number of fishing vessels up for sale since the introduction of the new EEC fishing regulations.

Mr. Curry: None. This Department does not collect information about the number of fishing vessels up for sale.

Skimmed Milk Powder

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is proposing to take in respect of the lead-contaminated skimmed milk powder currently held in storage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The butter and skimmed milk powder manufactured from milk withheld from sale in 1989 following the distribution of animal feedingstuffs contaminated by lead was tested by the Ministry. Restrictions on sale were removed after lead levels were found to be well below the limits laid down in the Lead in Food Regulations 1979 as amended. The subsequent disposal of these products was a matter for the milk marketing board, which owned them. I understand that all the product in question has been exported.

Eggs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to complete the funding of the British eggs marketing initiative; and what discussions he has had with the EEC Commission concerning this scheme.

Mr. Curry: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the provision of funds to the British Egg Industry Council for the purpose of promoting the marketing of eggs out of the assets of the Egg Authority, which was abolished in 1986. When due provision has been made for the outstanding liabilities of the former authority it is expected that the remaining funds will be made available to the British Egg Industry Council for promotion and other activities until they are exhausted. It is not possible to say when this will be. Our officials have discussed the British Egg Industry Council's current promotional campaign with the Commission.

Milk

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether there are to be any changes to the existing system of purchasing milk quotas.

Mr. Curry: EC regulations do not permit the sale of quota as such, but quota is transferred in proportion to the areas used for milk production when all or part of a dairy holding is sold, leased or transferred by inheritance. The EC Commission is aware of pressure for greater flexibility in the quota transfer rules, which apply in their present form until the end of March 1992. Proposals for their extension or amendment have yet to be made.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the European Community directive on milk quality; what actions he is taking in respect of that directive; and if he foresees any future change in its conditions.

Mr. Curry: Council directive 85/397/EEC on intra-Community trade in heat-treated milk came into force on 1 January 1989. It is implemented in England and Wales by the Importation of Milk Regulations 1988 and in Scotland and Northern Ireland by similar provisions. Under the directive our domestic milk production has been formally recognised as achieving the higher "step 2" milk hygiene standards. Denmark is the only other member state to have achieved this.

The Commission has tabled proposals for two Council regulations which would replace the directive and extend its standards to all Community-produced milk and milk products made from cows', goats', sheep's or buffaloes' milk. Discussions are under way and the United Kingdom is seeking an outcome which maintains and improves milk hygiene standards across the Community.

Dairy Inspections

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the charges, in cash and real terms, for statutory inspections of dairies for each year since 1980.

Mr. Gummer: Charges for statutory inspections of dairy farms by Ministry dairy officers were introduced in 30 March 1987. Since then, charges have been as follows:

	30 March 1987 to 31 March 1989 £	1 April 1989 to 26 August 1990 £	Since 27 August 1990 £
Routine visit
(a) higher rate	90	78	87
(b) lower rate	80	60	67
First follow-up visit
(a) higher rate	—	—	87
(b) lower rate	—	—	67
Subsequent follow-up visits
(a) higher rate	—	78	87
(b) lower rate	—	60	67

If the charges for routine visits had been raised in line with the retail prices index since March 1987, they would now be £116 (higher rate) and £103 (lower rate). The lower rates apply to inspections of farms with herds of fewer than 20 cows.

Salmon

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement about the report published by his Department on east coast salmon fisheries.

Mr. Curry: No report has yet been published. Work on the review is being completed and we hope to present it to Parliament shortly.

Southern Sea Fisheries

Mr. Adley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about fines for the contravention of local fishery legislation in the southern sea fisheries area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The question of the levels of fines for contraventions of local fishery legislation was raised with me when I met representatives of the Southern Sea Fisheries Committees on 23 October 1990. The matter is under consideration.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 21 and 22 January.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting, together with my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary.

The Council heard an oral presentation from Commissioner MacSharry on his personal ideas for possible changes to the common agricultural policy. His approach was based on the desirability of retaining the largest number of farmers as possible in the Community irrespective of the viability of their farms. He envisaged significant cuts in prices and quotas, the introduction of some new direct payments to producers, an expansion of the Community's agro-environmental policies and that a revised policy should be deliberately slanted so as to favour smaller producers. He did not quote figures, but it appeared that changes on the lines suggested would result in a significant increase in budgetary costs.

It was my intention to welcome the Commission's willingness to contemplate radical reform and certain strands of Mr. MacSharry's thinking, but to insist that changes should involve a reduction in costs, to advocate a closer integration of agricultural and environmental policies, and to reject the proposed discrimination against larger farmers on the grounds that this would prevent the emergence of a genuinely competitive European agriculture and would also involve unacceptable distortions between member states. However, only the Irish Minister was able to comment before the Commissioner was suddenly called away by a family bereavement. Discussions will resume at the next meeting of the Council of 4 February. It is not clear if the Commission will have adopted a definite position on CAP reform by them. The Council agreed to extend the Community's sugar regime for two years from 1 July 1991 on the current basis except for a small reduction in the permissible maxima for national aids, including that for cane sugar refining.

Fish Landings

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the increase in the value of United Kingdom fish landings by United Kingdom vessels in comparison with the retail prices index in the period 1980 to 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In 1989 the value of United Kingdom fish landings by United Kingdom vessels was £396 million. This was 78 per cent. higher than in 1980 and compares with an increase of 72 per cent. in the RPI during the same period. The latest provisional figures for 1990 suggest that the value of these landings has kept pace with the increase in the RPI.

In the fisheries debate on 13 December 1990 I may have inadvertently misled the House when responding to a point made by the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) by referring at column 1180 to individual years rather than to the period as a whole.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Savings

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much revenue would be raised by putting national insurance contributions on the income from savings above (a) £3,000 and (b) £5,000; (i) including pensioners and (ii) excluding pensioners.

Mr. Jack: If such contributions were charged at the current employees' main percentage rate of 9 per cent. on all investment income above £3,000 and above £5,000 the gain to the national insurance fund would be as shown in the table. However, national insurance contributions are levied only on earnings from employment and this is consistent with the approach since the establishment of the National Insurance Scheme in 1948.

Investment Income	National insurance contribution income including pensioners	National insurance contribution income excluding pensioners
above £3,000	£1·73 billion	£0·96 billion
above £5,000	£1·35 billion	£0·74 billion

This estimate is based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes and is therefore provisional.

Tax Withdrawal Rates

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing (i) the number of working heads, (ii) dependants and (iii) families with children facing marginal tax and benefit withdrawal rates in excess of 50 per cent., in the manner of his answer of 25 March 1988, Official Report, column 244.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is set out in the table:

Combined marginal tax and benefit withdrawal rates 1990-91
Benefit units where at least one partner works full time (000)
Numbers facing combined rates of over 50 per cent.—in bands
Great Britain

Per cent.	Families with children	Couples and single people	Total
90 to 99	45	0	45
80 to 89	160	30	190
70 to 79	105	55	160
60 to 69	0	0	5
50 to 59	0	0	0

Projections based on 1985, 1986 and 1987 Family Expenditure Surveys. Uprated to 1990-91 prices, taxes and benefits. Figures are rounded to the nearest 5,000. Totals may not add due to rounding.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the level of expenditure by his Department on the independent living fund for each of the past five years; and how much of this was spent in Scotland in each year.

Mr. Scott: The Independent Living Fund was established in June 1988. Expenditure published by the Fund in their annual reports was £1·35 million in 1988-89 and £10·08 million in 1989-90. Provision for 1990-91 is £32 million. Information on the cost of awards in Scotland is not available. However, around 9 per cent. of the fund's beneficiaries live in Scotland.

Telephonic Liaison Service

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reason the Department of Social Security Leicester, has discontinued the telephonic liaison service on a special line; and if he will take steps to have this restored.

Miss Widdecombe: The DSS local office at Leicester (Norton street) has replaced its telephone line dedicated to welfare rights inquiries with normal access to benefit sections plus, for particularly complex cases, reference to the assistant manager (liaison). It did so following complaints that the former system was not working. The effects of the new arrangements will be closely monitored.

Income Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by year for the last 10 years the number of households (a) below and (b) above average income.

Mr. Jack: Information on the basis of income before housing costs is available for 1981, 1983, 1985 and 1987 and is in the table.

1981	12·0	7·9
1983	12·6	8·2
1985	12·8	8·3
1987	13·7	8·1

Industrial Injury Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, for each of his local Department offices in the Doncaster area, how many people have made claims for industrial injuries disablement benefit during the current year to date and by year for the last 10 years; how many had their claims accepted; and what has been the total amount paid out in benefits.

Mr. Scott: Figures relating to years before April 1984 are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, as could figures about the number of claims accepted and the amount paid in benefit. Such information as is available is in the table.

Claims received

April	Doncaster East	Doncaster West
1990-91	[1]399	[1]382
1989-90	484	721
1988-89	454	523
1987-88	507	568
1986-87	599	844
1985-86	760	1,051
1984-85	425	610

[1] Figures available to December 1990 only.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the budgets for 1990-91 for community care grants for each local office of his Department in Scotland and expenditure by each local office in Scotland to the end of December 1990.

Mr. Scott: Details of annual social fund budget allocation and expenditure for community care grants in local offices are placed in the Library.

Resettlement

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, by departmental region, expenditure on (a) resettlement units and (b) grants to voluntary organisations and local authorities in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 to date.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the exact form requested, as expenditure on these grants is not recorded by DSS region. However, information is held as follows:

a. Expenditure on resettlement units

Region	1988-89 £000s	1989-90 £000s	[1]1990-91 £000s
Scotland	550	645	411
North Eastern	1,104	1,330	722
North Western	1,086	1,235	813
Midlands	2,200	2,466	1,477
Wales and South Western	816	973	633
London North	1,408	1,558	925
London South	5,403	6,291	3,808
Total	12,567	14,498	8,789

[1] To 31 December.

b. Grants to voluntary organisations and/or local authorities

	£000s	£000s	£000s
Scotland	Nil	Nil	Nil
North Eastern	124	164	587
North Western	22	119	55

	£000s	£000s	£000s
Midlands	43	579	939
Wales and South Western	100	655	630
London North[1] / London South[1]	1,768	1,900	1,322
Total[2]	2,057	3,417	3,533

Note: [1]A split of grants between London North and London South Regions is not available.
[2]Grants were also made to non replacement projects as follows

	£000s	£000s	£000s
Scotland	11	11	8
England and Wales	205	268	190
	216	279	198

A split of these figures between the departmental regions is not available.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a timetable for the closure of resettlement units.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no specific timetable for the resettlement unit replacement programme. The Resettlement Agency, which is responsible for implementing the Government's plans to replace the 22 Department of Social Security resettlement units, is required to replace two units in 1990-91 and a further four in 1991-92. The first two will be the units in Brighton and Fazakerley (Liverpool), on 31 March 1991. Final decisions for 1991-92 have not yet been made.

Social Fund

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the social fund may be used for a single homeless person to meet the cost of a deposit on private rented accommodation.

Mr. Scott: No, but help with rent in advance is available through crisis loans.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the 1991-92 budget for the social fund in gross and net terms broken down into community care grants, budgeting loans and crisis loans.

Mr. Scott: The 1991-92 budget will be announced nearer the time.

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the new take-up figures for income-related benefits.

Mr. Jack: Work on the take-up estimates is well advanced and we hope to publish them around Easter.

Benefit Applications

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest average length of time taken to process applications for (a) family credit, (b) income support and (c) housing benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available information is as follows:

	Working days
Family credit[1]	20·4
Income support[1]	6·4
Housing benefit[2]	—

[1] Data derived from claims cleared during December 1990.
[2] Precise data is not available in respect of housing benefit. Approximately three-quarters of all claims are dealt with within the statutory 14-day period.

Child Support

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the value of child support for each child in standard rate tax-paying families in 1990 prices from 1958 to 1991-92.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is in the table. Figures for April 1991 cannot be given at April 1990 prices until the retail prices index (RPI) for April 1991 is published.

Dependants

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate for the latest date available the number of dependants of unemployed people broken down into spouses and children.

Mr. Jack: On the basis of the statistical information regarding unemployment benefit and income support in payment at May 1989, the number of dependants of unemployed people is estimated to be as follows:

	Estimated number
Adults[1]	378,245
Children[2]	607,000

[1] It is not possible to isolate spouses. The figure is based on the number of cases where income support is payable in respect of a partner and, in the case of unemployment benefit, the number of adult dependency increases.
[2] All children under 16 plus those under 19 in full-time education.

Deductions from Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households, from data taken for the Annual Statistical Inquiry, in 1989 and 1990, are having weekly deductions made from their supplementary benefit or income support as appropriate, for (i) electricity and (ii) gas of (a) under £2 per week and (b) in each £1 band above £2 per week up to £40 per week.

Miss Widdecombe: The information available is shown in the table.

May 1989[2]

Amount of deductions[1]	Gas	Electricity
0·00-2·00	3,000	3,000
2·01-3·00	3,500	5,500

24·01-30·00	[3*]	1,000
30·01 and over	Nil	Nil
Total	[4]13,400	131,500

[1] Deductions cover the cost of current consumption and where necessary, a specific amount to clear an outstanding bill. Number of cases have been rounded to nearest 500.
[2] Data for 1990 are not yet available.
[3] For figures over £20 per week the bands have been amalgamated as shown, since in single pound bands most would contain no cases or less than 500. The method by which these estimates are obtained does not imply a high level of precision for such numbers.
[4] Columns may not total to sum due to rounding.
[3*] Denotes figures under 500.

DEFENCE

Near Miss, Perranporth

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Royal Air Force Harrier involved in an air miss with a hang glider near Perranporth on 17 July 1986 was found to have made an unauthorised penetration of (a) the Perranporth aerodrome traffic zone and (b) the Penhale hang gliding site.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No, since (a) no report of an unauthorised penetration of the Perranporth aerodrome traffic zone was received; and (b) military aircraft are not prohibited from overflying the Penhale hang gliding site; they are advised only to keep a good lookout if flying in the area.

Air Misses

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates, locations, aircraft involved, circumstances and heights of all category A air misses between civil and military aircraft in United Kingdom airspace during 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The following category A airmisses between civil and military aircraft occurred over the United Kingdom between January and June 1990. The joint air miss working group has not yet completed its assessments for the remainder of 1990.

Date involved	Location	Aircraft	Circumstances[1]	Approximate height
1 April 1990	Ballykelly	Cherokee/Gazelle	Late sighting by both pilots	2,300 ft.
11 April 1990	Tibenham	Rollason Condor/A10	Unauthorised penetration of Tibenham airfield area by A10 pilot	600 ft.
4 May 1990	22 NM[2] NE Flamborough Head	SK76 helicopter/untraced military jet	Conflict of flightpaths	3,000 ft.
8 May 1990	Barton Stacey	Gazelle/Cherokee	Failure of Cherokee pilot to see Gazelle in time to give way and very late sighting of Cherokee by Gazelle pilot	2,000 ft.

[1] Based on assessment by Joint Airmiss Working Group of cause of airmiss.
[2] NM—nautical miles.

Borders Tactical Training Area

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of retaining the separation of the borders tactical training area into two distinct parts.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The separation of the borders tactical training area into two distinct parts allows for more efficient management of the airspace by permitting simultaneous use of the eastern and western parts by two different units, should this be needed.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what powers Her Majesty's Government have to take disciplinary action against pilots of allied air forces who are found to have breached low-flying regulations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Her Majesty's Government have no disciplinary jursidiction over personnel of other air forces. If, however, personnel of a NATO member state based in the United Kingdom were to breach our low-flying regulations, legal jurisdiction for disciplinary proceeding would be dealt with under the NATO status of forces agreement and the Visiting Forces Act 1952. If personnel from another country not based in the United Kingdom were to breach these regulations, they would be dealt with under the arrangements contained in the memorandum of understanding with that particular country.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many operational low-flying movements were authorised in the borders tactical training area on Saturday 11 August 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Ten.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research has been conducted by his Department on the impact of noise from low-flying aircraft on deer stalking activities.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the visits by aircraft from the 57 fighter interceptor squadron, United States air force, to RAF Leuchars on 16 to 19 July 1990; and what authorisation was given to these aircraft to carry out low flying over the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There were no such visits.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when No. 4 Squadron Royal Air Force first commenced night low-level training on the Harrier GR7; and if he will list the countries in which such training has so far taken place.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. 4 Squadron Royal Air Force has not yet commenced night low-level training on the Harrier GR7.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying movements were authorised in the borders tactical training area in each month from the earliest available records to the latest available date; and if he will provide a breakdown of the figures from September 1989 onwards into movements in the eastern and western parts of the borders tactical training area.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The borders tactical training area was formally incorporated into the United Kingdom low-flying system in 1984. Low-flying movements authorised in the area in each month from January 1984 to December 1987 are as follows:

	1984	1985	1986	1987
January	0	94	42	85
February	3	63	196	98
March	0	16	24	129

September	0	0	24	11
October	50	0	248	23
December	78	0	0	17

The number of low-flying movements authorised in the borders tactical training area in 1988 and 1989 were provided in the reply given to the hon. Member on 19 December 1990 at column 208, and for the period January to October 1990 in the reply given on 3 December 1990 at column 48.

The numbers of low-flying movements authorised in the eastern and western parts of the borders tactical training area since September 1989 are as follows:

Territorial Army

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many members of the Territorial Army have been enlisted for service in the Gulf or to replace regular soldiers deployed to the Gulf;

(2) how many of those members of the Territorial Army who have been enlisted for service in the Gulf or to replace regular soldiers deployed to the Gulf are in the Army medical services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: About 500 members of the Territorial Army have volunteered and been called out for service in the Gulf or to replace regular soldiers deployed to the Gulf. About 470 of them are medical specialists.

TA and Cadets

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the Territorial Army, Army cadets, Air Training Corps and sea cadets budgets was expended in the northern region year by year since 1985.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The percentage of Territorial Army, Army cadet force, Air Training Corps and sea cadets manpower and administration cost which can be separately identified as being spent in the northern region are:

Year	TA Percentage	ACF Percentage	ATC Percentage	Sea cadets Percentage
1985-86	7	9	5	13
1986-87	7	10	6	13
1987-88	6	8	6	13
1988-89	7	9	3	13
1989-90	7	9	3	13

The figures for the sea cadets reflect only the MOD-funded element, and do not include moneys provided by the Sea Cadet Association.

Recruits

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of new recruits into Her Majesty's armed forces, Army, Royal Navy and Royal Air Force, come from the northern region year by year since 1985.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The percentage of new recruits into the Royal Navy, Royal Marines, Army and Royal Air Force recruited in the northern region during the financial years 1985-86 to 1989-90 is set out in the table. Applications for entry as officers are dealt with centrally and regional breakdowns cannot be produced.

Technology Exports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has any plans to inform companies involved in the manufacture and export of militarily sensitive technologies of their responsibilities when engaging in such export trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. Information and guidance on security export controls of strategic goods and technology are provided to United Kingdom exporters by the Department of Trade and Industry which is responsible for export licensing.

End-user Certificates

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are taken by Her Majesty's Government to ensure that end-user certificates attached to arms exports and military technology sales are adhered to by importer states.

Mr. Alan Clark: Sole-use clauses in sales agreements are designed to ensure that British defence equipment is not transferred to third parties without the agreement of the British Government.

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures. These measures have been kept under review and my right hon. Friend has approved revised rules covering the use of lap-top computers.

Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to introduce a Bill to acquire the common rights at Greenham Common.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Crown Proceedings Act 1949

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give his best estimate of the number of prospective claims communicated to his Department and which were barred from action when section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1949 was in force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No central records were kept of such prospective claims prior to 1978. However, 805 claims have been recorded as being received since late 1978.

Gulf and Falklands Forces

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by month for the last three months the cost of maintaining (a) the Gulf forces and (b) the Falklands forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current full monthly operating cost of maintaining our forces in the Gulf and the Falklands for October, November and December 1990 is estimated to be as follows:

Area	October £ million	November £ million	December £ million
Gulf	60	70	110
Falklands	5	5	5

British Nuclear Test Veterans Association

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A number of representations have been made by the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association and its members. As the Government have made clear on many occasions, we would be ready to pay compensation wherever the Crown's legal liability was established and where there was firm evidence to show that, on a balance of probabilities, ex-service personnel had suffered ill-health as a result of exposure to radiation during the course of their duties as members of the armed forces.

Journalists (Gulf)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many journalists are accredited to armed forces facilities in the Gulf; and what restrictions are placed on their broadcasting or relaying of stories.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Some 45 journalists are accredited to various British service units in the Gulf. In filing reports they are required to abide by published ground rules designed to protect the security and safety of allied forces. Where necessary, their reports may also be subject to vetting by military authorities to which they are attached.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each training agency area the employment training training agents and training managers who have since the start of the programme (a) gone into liquidation, (b) not had contracts with the training agency renewed and (c) ceased to provide employment training for any other reason.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available in the form requested.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, for the latest available period, the number and proportion of employment training trainees who three months after leaving were (a) in a full-time job, (b) in a part-time job, (c) in a full-time education or training course, (d) employed in their own business, (e) in a jobclub, (f) unemployed and claiming benefit and (g) unemployed and not claiming benefit.

Mr. Jackson: The following table gives the proportions of trainees leaving employment training in the last 12-month period for which information is available and their destinations. Detailed numbers as requested are unavailable.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each region and for Great Britain as a whole for each quarter since employment training was introduced the number of participants who (a) fell within the guarantee group and (b) fell within the aim group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of places available on the employment training scheme for each year of operation; and how many places were in urban programme and partnership areas.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available in the precise form requested. However, information is available on the estimated number of ET starts, as shown in the table:

	ET starts (GB)	Percentage in inner cities
September 1988-March 1989	238,600	42
April 1989-March 1990	430,600	39

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was Government spending on employment training at 1989 prices for each year of operation.

Mr. Jackson: The table shows expenditure on employment training for each year of its operation to date at 1989-90 constant prices.

	£ million
1988-89 (from 5 September 1988)	452
1989-90	1,097
1990-91 (to end December 1990)	675

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who is now responsible for recovering any overpayments that are made to people in receipt of the enterprise allowance scheme in areas covered by training and enterprise councils; in what circumstances recovery of overpayments will be sought; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils are responsible for recovering overpaid moneys to people who are in receipt of the enterprise allowance in the areas they cover. Each training and enterprise council assumes this responsibility from the date it becomes operational.

The decision to take recovery action rests with the training and enterprise council.

Part-time Workers

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the proportion of female part-time workers in Great Britain in April 1990 whose hourly earnings exclusive of overtime fell below (a) £3·10, (b) £3·40, (c) £4·00, (d) £4·60 and (e) £4·75.

Mr. Jackson: The estimated percentages of part-time adult female employees earning below specified amounts in the new earnings survey sample in April 1990 were:

Hourly earnings excluding overtime less than:	Percentage
£3·00	36
£3·20	44
£3·40	52
£4·00	69
£4·50	78
£5·00	83

Estimates of the percentage earning below £3·10, £4·60 and £4·75 are not available; the nearest available figures have been given. The figures relate to employees on adult rates whose earnings for the survey period were not affected by absence.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of male part-time workers in Great Britain in April 1990; and what was the proportion of those workers falling below the hourly earnings threshold of (a) £3·40, (b) £4·60 and (c) £4·75.

Mr. Jackson: There were an estimated 906,000 part-time male employees in employment in March 1990. The estimated percentages of part-time adult male employees earning below specified amounts in the new earnings survey sample in April 1990 were:

Hourly earnings[1]	Per cent.
£3·40	49
£4·60	72
£4·80	74

[1] Including overtime.

Estimates of the percentage earning below £4·75 are not available; the nearest available figures have been given. The figures relate to employees on adult rates whose earnings for the survey period were not affected by absence.

Training Agency

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a table of expenditure on the programmes run by the Training Agency in 1989-90, broken down by programme and cross-tabulated by standard regions, with Greater London shown as a separate region.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is shown in the table:

Training Agency Programme Expenditure 1989-90

Notes:

1. Expenditure excludes training allowances and other costs administered centrally.
2. The TECs and National Provider's Unit (TNPU) is based centrally and holds contracts for major companies who provide training throughout Great Britain.
3. Figures given for residual AT include Voluntary Projects Programme (VPP), Community Programme (CP) and New JTS.
4. Figures quoted are as at end March 1990 and some minor adjustments may have been made when the end year definite statistics were produced.
5. London is Greater London.

Youth Training

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what account he has taken of the representations on youth training funding for special needs young people, made to him by the Arthur Rank centre in its letter of 19 December 1990, in determining levels of such funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 23 January 1991]: Decisions on the appropriate levels of funding for youth training providers are for local negotiation between the providers themselves and their local training and enterprise council.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Housing

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the public expenditure on housing as a percentage of gross domestic product in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Yeo: The figures given are for Great Britain. They are based on gross expenditure on housing including spending from receipts and expenditure on housing benefits:

Year	Gross domestic product per cent.
1980-81	2·7
1981-82	2·2
1982-83	2·3
1983-84	2·8
1984-85	2·8
1985-86	2·5
1986-87	2·4
1987-88	2·3
1988-89	2·1
1989-90	2·2

Sewage Disposal

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what date the present method of dumping sewage into the sea will cease or be amended at Ilfracombe, Combe Martin and Lynmouth.

Mr. Baldry: The target date for completing improvement schemes for sewage discharges at Ilfracombe, Combe Martin and Lynmouth is end 1995.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his timetable for his review of local government finance and structure.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is conducting a thorough and fundamental review of local government functions, structure and finance to identify a stable basis for the future development of local government. It is premature to say when it might be complete.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for 1990-91 for each local authority (a) the total amount of national non-domestic rate income to be collected, (b) his best estimate of the amount collected thus far and (c) the amount of national non-domestic rate income being made available to each authority in 1990-91.

Mr. Portillo: I am arranging for copies of the information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the personal community charge payable in 1991-92 by each couple eligible for the community charge reduction scheme where the personal charge for 1990-91 was £350, and that for 1991-92 was £390, and where the total domestic rates paid by the household in 1989-90 was (a) £225, (b) £325, (c) £375 and (d) £275.

Mr. Key: In general, assuming that the couple did not benefit from or contribute to the safety net in 1990-91, the amount payable by each partner in 1991-92 would be as follows: (a) £204·50, (b) £254·50, (c) £279·50 and (d) £229·50.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to use a de minimis rule on the operation of community charge capping in 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend will decide whether to adopt a de minimis proviso and the figure for any such proviso in making his designation decisions under section 100 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988. As we have made clear local authorities should not assume that there will be such a proviso.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish his final criteria for the purposes of community charge-capping designation in 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend intends to take his designation decisions under section 100 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 as soon as reasonably practicable after authorities have set their budgets for 1991-92.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the qualifying date relating to residence in a property for eligibility for the community charge reduction scheme in 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: Broadly, as with the current transitional relief scheme, a person may be eligible if he or she was subject to a personal community charge by virtue of residence in the relevant property on 31 March 1990.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the maximum number of assumed poll tax charges that will be used per household for the purposes of calculating help under the community charge reduction scheme in 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: As with the current transitional relief scheme, two community charges will be used in the calculation of a reduction where there are two or more eligible charge payers in a property. However, special rules will apply to residents of sheltered housing schemes who will be able to qualify for a reduction in their own right.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assumption of population mobility for 1990-91 and 1991-92 he used for the purposes of calculating the numbers of poll tax payers likely to qualify for help under his proposed community charge reduction scheme.

Mr. Portillo: A depletion rate of 10 per cent. per annum has been assumed in arriving at the estimates for the community charge reduction scheme, to allow for cessation of entitlement for charge payers who have moved or have died.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table of expenditure on the urban programme 1989-90 showing expenditure broken down into economic, environmental and social categories and cross-tabulated by standards, region, with Greater London shown as a separate region.

Mr. Key [holding answer 22 January 1991]: Approved urban programme expenditure levels for 1989-90 for economic, environmental and social categories are shown below. The urban programme regions are cross-referenced to standard regions.

Urban programme region (£ million)

	Economic	Environmental	Social
Northern	21·006	5·656	9·695
Northwest[1]	21·452	5·577	9·010
Merseyside[1]	14·163	7·698	6·466
West Midlands	19·828	5·665	10·925
East Midlands	4·994	2·157	3·405
Yorkshire and Humberside	13·521	4·917	4·671
Southwest	0·998	0·499	0·689
London	24·416	13·270	11·147

[1] These two urban programme regions form one standard Northwest region. All other urban programme and standard regions are identical.

North Devon Coast

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the cause and the content of the layers of brown, greasy material that coat areas of the sea bed off the coast of north Devon.

Mr. Baldry: I have no information on any unnatural or unusual materials coating the sea bed off the coast of north Devon.

HM Inspectorate of Pollution

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the current staff complement of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and how many staff will be in post by the end of the current financial year;

(2) how many inspectors and how many administrative staff are employed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and what the numbers are expected to be for the next financial year;

(3) how many staff will ultimately be required to enforce integrated pollution control.

Mr. Trippier: There are currently 220 staff in post in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP)—115 professional and 105 administrative staff.

The approved complement for the end of the current financial year has recently been increased from 223 to 248, and the approved complement for the end of 1991-92 to over 300. HMIP will therefore continue to recruit and expand during 1991-92.

Thereafter, complement may need to be increased further as IPC is progressively implemented and HMIP's workload increases further. Provisional assessments suggest that HMIP may ultimately require a total staff of up to around 400 when IPC is in full operation, but these assessments are subject to practical experience of operating IPC and are being kept under review.

When HMIP was formed in April 1987 from the merger of three previous inspectorates, there were 133 staff in post. The substantial increase in HMIP's strength demonstrates the Government's commitment to the highest standards of environmental protection.

Recruitment of further pollution inspectors is now in progress. Salary scales have been increased by 18 per cent., and this has overcome the recruitment difficulties previously experienced. The competition currently in progress has attracted nearly 600 good-quality applicants, showing a very encouraging level of interest among scientists in joining the inspectorate and being involved in its work of protecting the environment.

The table shows the detailed complement and staff-in-post figures for HMIP since its formation in April 1987.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution staffing[1]

	1 April 1987[2]	1 January 1991	1 April 1991	1 April 1992
Complement	199	223	248	[3]300-310
Staff in post	133	220	—	—

[1] All figures exclude the former Radioactive Waste Policy and Administrative Division, (25 administrative, two professional staff) which transferred from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution to the DOE Directorate of Pollution Control and Waste in November 1990.

[2] Date of formation of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he is satisfied that the price being agreed for the sale of the Crown Suppliers transport section fully reflects alternative uses of all five sites which form part of the sale;

(2) whether the sale of the five land sites belonging to the Crown Suppliers transport section provides for a valuation based on existing use value, planning hope value, or a valuation based on approved planning applications following the completion of any sale.

Mr. Yeo: The Government are concerned to ensure that they obtain a fair price for the business, having regard, among other things, to the market value of the assets, including the land. To this end independent professional valuations of the freehold sites have been obtained.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make it his policy not to permit control of the transport section of the Crown Suppliers to be varied prior to the payment of moneys by the management buy-out for the transport section of the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Yeo: The Secretary of State will retain control of the transport business of the Crown Suppliers in the run-up to any sale.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date Mr. Bill Pinkney first approached the Crown Suppliers or his Department directly with an offer to purchase the Crown Suppliers transport section.

Mr. Yeo: In April 1989.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what moneys have been allocated, paid or contracted for payment to the management buy-out for the Crown Suppliers transport section connected to Mr. Bill Pinkney and Mr. Bramall of Dewsbury.

Mr. Yeo: A total of £36,000 has been paid in support of professional fees incurred by a team lead by Mr. Pinkney. Provisional agreement has been reached to provide additional support of up to a further £111,000, subject to certain conditions being met. No commmitment to this further amount has so far been given. If Mr. Pinkney's team were successful in acquiring the business, the new company would have to repay all Government support.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will make a statement as to the investigation carried out by the Property Services Agency audit section into the activities of Mr. Bill Pinkney;

(2) whether he will list the actions taken by Mr. Bill Pinkney which led to an investigation being carried out by the Property Services Agency audit section.

Mr. Yeo: An audit of travel and subsistence, and certain other expenditure in the Crown Suppliers, including the transport business in which Mr. Pinkney is employed, has been undertaken by the Property Services Agency internal audit. The Crown Suppliers management have considered and are following up the matters arising from that audit.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the value of the orginal bid in cash terms submitted by the management buy-out led by Mr. Bill Pinkney for the transport section of the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Yeo: It would not be in the interests of a successful sale to reveal at this stage the details of any bids for the business.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he took to satisfy himself that the offer to purchase the Crown Suppliers transport section by a group of persons led by Mr. Bill Pinkney is a valid management buy-out initiative.

Mr. Yeo: The members of the team, the sources of finance, control and structure of the proposed new company will be included in the factors to be taken into account in assessing their bid for the business.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what values have been placed on the five sites comprising the property portfolio which forms part of the assets of the Crown Suppliers transport section.

Mr. Yeo: The market values of the three freehold sites in 1989 were as follows:

	£ million
Nine Elms, London	1·5
Burnett, Bristol	0·7
Biggleswade	1·5
Total	3·7

The leasehold sites are not considered to have any realisable value.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any Minister in his Department or their officials have met Mr. Bramall of Dewsbury to discuss the privatisation of the Crown Suppliers transport section.

Mr. Yeo: Yes.

Housing, Hyndburn

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses in Hyndburn are classified as unfit.

Mr. Yeo: The latest available information on unfit dwellings relates to 1 April 1990 and was provided by Hyndburn borough council in their April 1990 housing investment programme return (HIP 1), a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of housing investment programme allocation made to Hyndburn borough council for each year from 1978-79 up to the present time.

Mr. Yeo: Details of the allocations made to Hyndburn borough council since 1978-79 are listed in the table. Since 1981-82 authorities have been able to augment the borrowing power of their housing investment programme allocations by using the prescribed proportion of their capital receipts. For 1990-91 and 1991-92, under the new capital finance system, the housing investment programme allocation does not convey borrowing approval directly.

Housing investment programme allocations for Hyndburn borough council

	£ thousands
1978-79	2,210
1979-80	2,388
1980-81	2,358
1981-82	3,600
1982-83	4,350
1983-84	3,390
1984-85	3,675
1985-86	3,315
1986-87	3,375
1987-88	3,870
1988-89	3,599
1989-90	5,401
1990-91	[1]4,386
1991-92	[2]3,525

[1] Provisional.
[2] Initial allocation only.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the housing investment programme for Hyndburn to take account of the number of unfit houses in Hyndburn.

Mr. Yeo: No. Account was taken of all relevant factors, including the likely demand for renovation grants arising from unfit housing, in determining Hyndburn's housing investment programme allocation for 1991-92.

Her Majesty's Prison, Belmarsh

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what delays there have been in the Property Services Agency paying sub-contractors for work carried out on the construction of Her Majesty's prison, Belmarsh; and if he will take steps to ensure that the outstanding sums are now paid.

Mr. Yeo: Payments to sub-contractors who have worked on the construction of Her Majesty's prison, Belmarsh are the responsibility of the management contractor.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each enterprise zone, the number of (a) new businesess created, (b) jobs created, (c) business bankruptcies and (d) jobs lost in each year since the creation of each enterprise zone.

Mr. Portillo: The latest published information on new businesses and jobs is included in the Department's report "Enterprise Zone Information 1987-88", a copy of which is in the Library. Information for 1988-89 will be available shortly. Data on business bankruptcies and jobs lost in each year are not collected.

Building Regulations

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent to which the changes proposed in his Department's amendments to approved document B of the Building Regulations (England and Wales) will affect levels of life safety.

Mr. Yeo: The consultation proposals for amendments to part B, "Safety in Fire" of the Building Regulations 1985 incorporate a number of provisions to improve levels of life safety. These include the new requirements relating to access and facilities for the fire service, the extension of the means of escape requirements and the proposals relating to smoke alarms in dwellings. A number of those who have commented have suggested that other proposals, such as those relating to the reduction of fire resistance periods, reduce levels of life safety, and these comments are being carefully examined by the fire advisory panel and the building regulations advisory committee.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of the effect that the larger compartment sizes proposed in his Department's amendments to approved document B of the Building Regulations (England and Wales) will have on means of escape planning and the evacuation of a building in the event of fire with particular regard to maximum travel distances.

Mr. Yeo: The consultation proposals for amendments to part B, "Safety in Fire", of the Building Regulations 1985 incorporate detailed practical guidance relating to means of escape, including the provision and protection of escape routes, and maximum travel distances for escape purposes. This guidance is not affected by the proposals relating to compartmentation, as maximum travel distances are measured to a protected escape route or final exit, regardless of compartment size.

Housing

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the new role of local authorities as housing enabling authorities under the Housing Act 1988;

(2) how local authorities will fulfil their statutory responsibilities under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 in their enabling role under the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities have been acting as enablers for many years—although often in a small way. The new emphasis on local authorities acting as enablers rather than direct providers of subsidised housing parallels the expansion of the housing association movement. Housing associations are becoming the principal providers of new subsidised housing. Local authorities can fulfil their duties under the homelessness legislation by placing those they accept as homeless in their own dwellings; by using nomination arrangements to place them in dwellings owned by housing associations; or through similar arrangements made with other providers.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest evidence he has on changes in the level of private rented accommodation arising from the implementation of the Housing Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: There is a significant anecdotal evidence of an increase in the amount of property available for new lettings in the private rented sector. We have a survey in hand which will provide firmer evidence, the results of which should be available within the next two to three months.

Large Combustion Plants

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to issue his formal plan for reducing sulphur dioxide and NOx emissions from existing large combustion plants.

Mr. Trippier: The United Kingdom's programme and national plan for reducing emissions of sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen from existing large combustion plants was published on 20 December. Notice of the making of the plan was given in the London, Edinburgh and Belfast Gazette. Copies have been laid in the Libraries of both Houses and are also available from my Department.

Long Sea Outfalls

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy in respect of disposal of leachate from landfill sites through long sea outfalls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: It is for the NRA to set conditions on discharges through long sea outfalls.

Ministerial Responsibility

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report a list of all those Ministers who have been given a specific responsibility for environmental matters within their respective departmental portfolios.

Mr. Heseltine: I am responsible, supported by my ministerial colleagues, for all environmental matters within my Department's remit. The current list of Ministers nominated to be responsible for considering the environmental implications of all their Department's policies and spending programmes and for following up the relevant parts of the White Paper "This Common Inheritance" (Cm. 1200) is as follows:

Department and Minister
Lord Chancellor
The Rt. Hon. The Lord Mackay of Clashfern
Environment
The Rt. Hon. Michael Heseltine, MP
Transport

Local Government

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a list of statutory bodies set up to carry out successor functions of the Greater London council and metropolitan counties, showing the expenditure of each successor body in 1989-90 and the principal sources of income of each successor body.

Mr. Key [holding answer 22 January 1991]: I have today arranged for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Interest Rate Swaps

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement in the light of the House of Lords' judgment on local authority interest rate swaps.

Mr. Heseltine: The House of Lords' judgment concerns local authorities' powers to undertake interest rate swaps and similar business. The Government are considering the implications of the judgment.

The statutory powers of local authorities to borrow money, and the protection provided by legislation to those who lend to local authorities, were not in issue in the Hammersmith and Fulham case. The legislation provides that a person lending money to a local authority does not have to ask whether the authority has power to borrow the money and the lender is entitled to repayment of the loan, together with any interest thereon, regardless of whether the borrowing was within the authority's power or not.

TRANSPORT

London Underground

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the occasions, within the last 12 months, when a London Underground station has been evacuated, or closed for a period exceeding 10 minutes, listing (a) the length of time the station was closed or evacuated, (b) the reason for the closure or evacuation and (c) whether the closure or evacuation took place during the peak period.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not kept by my Department. It is an operational matter for London Underground Ltd.

Public Bodies

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all those bodies to which he makes appointments, giving the number of people whom he appoints to each body.

Mr. Rifkind: The majority of the appointments for which I am responsible are listed in either "Public Bodies 1990" published by HMSO or "Women into Public Appointments" produced by the Women's National Commission, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The appointments which are not listed in either document are:
Acting conservator of the River Mersey;
Four delegates to the Central Rhine Commission;
Chairman and six members of the honorary medical advisory panel on driving and diabetes;
Chairman and five members of the honorary medical advisory panel on driving and disorders of the cardiovascular system;
Chairman and eight members of the honorary medical advisory panel for driving and disorders of the nervous system and chairman and two members of the panel's sub-committee on mental health drug and alcohol misuse.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Since 1983, the Energy Efficiency Office (EEO) has promoted a range of programmes and other services to encourage the adoption of cost-effective energy efficiency measures in industry and the domestic sector. These initiatives have led to recurrent annual energy savings now worth over £500 million a year and currently include:

the ministerial group on energy efficiency which aims to promote awareness and raise the profile of energy efficiency; encourage an energy efficiency lifestyle at home, at work and in transport; and lead by example in the development of policy initiatives and by taking forward the energy efficiency campaign on the Government estate and in other public sector bodies; the best practice programme which provides independent and authoritative advice and information on energy use and efficiency in industry and commerce, and in the public sector and in housing; the programme will continue to promote combined heat and power;

regional energy efficiency officers who lead the drive to encourage energy efficiency by visiting main energy users to guide them in developing energy management programmes, promoting EEO programmes and energy efficiency seminars and exhibitions, and encouraging the energy efficiency industry; in the domestic sector, the home energy efficiency scheme, which began on 1 January 1991, replacing the community insulation programme which has insulated some 850,000 homes; it will offer grants towards the cost of basic energy efficiency measures in low-income households; the EEO has also launched a new domestic advertising campaign to motivate those moving house or improving their homes to improve their energy efficiency; This campaign is supported by a new information pack —"Energy in Your Home"—which provides information and advice on a wide range of measures.

The EEO is also carrying forward a number of new initiatives which were announced in the White Paper on the Environment, "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200), and which include:

developing proposals for a new scheme of project management assistance for implementation of energy efficiency investments; considering with the lighting industry how to overcome barriers to the uptake of high-efficiency lighting; pursuing appliance labelling and minimum standards with our own appliance industry and in the EC.

With regard to the Department of Energy's own energy use, during the first year of occupation in our new headquarters building, which incorporates energy-efficiency systems, major energy initiatives were precluded by the process of ensuring that all plant and equipment were operating correctly and efficiently. However, during the coming year, my officials together with those of Property Holdings, will be investigating the feasibility of a contract energy management package. In addition, my Department will be running year-long schemes designed to promote staff awareness of the importance of energy efficiency through a variety of means including leaflets, poster campaigns and staff suggestions schemes.

Orimulsion

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he has received approaches seeking consent by National Power for the use of Orimulsion in any of their power stations:

(2) if he has received approaches seeking the consent by Power Gen for the use of Orimulsion in any of their power stations.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consideration he has given to the postponement of the flotation of National Power and PowerGen until after the cessation of hostilities in the middle east.

Mr. Wakeham: Preparations for the flotation of National Power and PowerGen are proceeding to timetable. Subject to market conditions, I intend to float both companies next month.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the present plans and timetable for the installation of flue gas desulphurisation equipment at Ferrybridge and Ratcliffe power stations.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: PowerGen has submitted applications for consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 to install flue gas desulphurisation equipment at its Ratcliffe-on-Soar and Ferrybridge C power stations. These applications are under consideration.

WALES

Bristol Channel (Pollution)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what date Welsh Water will cease the dumping of sewage sludge into the Bristol channel; and what quantities were disposed of by this method in the latest two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The sea disposal of sewage sludge is to be terminated as soon as possible and by 31 December 1998 at the latest. Welsh Water is preparing plans to meet this requirement. The amount of sewage sludge deposited by Welsh Water in the last two years for which figures are available is as follows:

Thousand tonnes (wet weight)

1988	1989
55	62

Community Charge

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give his estimate of the community charge for 1991-92, including precepts for each of the district councils in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The level of community charges for 1991-92 will depend on the spending decisions of each local authority. If counties and districts spend in line with the realistic settlement that my right hon. Friend announced to the House on 17 January the average community charge component for each tier should be around £190 and £38 respectively, giving a combined community charge for standard spending of £228. The average community charge payable should not exceed £200 after allowing for the £62 million which the Government has provided for the community charge reduction scheme. This is £23 lower than the average actual charge for 1990-91 after relief, and is eminently achievable.

Irradiated Food

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to ensure the adequate protection of the public in respect of irradiated food in Wales since last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Regulations permitting the irradiation of food came into operation on 1 January this year. The regulations incorporate a strict control framework both in respect of the licensing of food irradiation premises, and in respect of the categories of food which may be subjected to irradiation. Additionally, official recognition is needed for the use of the process in connection with imported foodstuffs.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency to discuss Wales's share of inward investment projects going to United Kingdom assisted areas.

Mr. David Hunt: I have regular discussions with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency about a range of matters concerning the development of the Welsh economy, including inward investment.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Crawfordsburn Hospital

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations have taken place about the closure and subsequent disposal of Crawfordsburn hospital between the Eastern health and social services board and the Department of Health and Social Services.

Mr. Hanley: The Eastern health and social services board first sought the approval of the Department of Health and Social Services to the closure of Crawfordsburn hospital in September 1987. A further submission was made to the Department in September 1990 and formal approval to the closure was conveyed to the board on 25 October. No consultations between the board and the Department about disposal of the property have so far taken place.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the future of Crawfordsburn hospital was first discussed at a meeting of the Eastern health and social services board.

Mr. Hanley: A proposal to close Crawfordsburn hospital was first discussed by the Eastern health and social services board at its meeting on 26 March 1987.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will consider the conversion of Crawfordsburn hospital and its grounds into a retirement village for the elderly of North Down.

Mr. Hanley: The future use of Crawfordsburn hospital is a matter for the Eastern health and social services board in the first instance. Decisions about the disposal of the hospital will be taken in the light of any proposals put forward by the Board for its future use.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the future of Crawfordsburn hospital was discussed at a meeting of the North Down and Ards unit of management of the Eastern health and social services board.

Mr. Hanley: The future of Crawfordsburn hospital was first discussed by the then North Down and Ards district executive team in August 1982.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the owners of the Bryansburn Inn in Bangor were first notified by the eastern health and social services board that Crawfordsburn hospital was to be closed.

Mr. Hanley: A document containing proposals for the closure of Crawfordsburn hospital was issued for public consultation by the Eastern health and social services board in March 1987. I am not aware of any contact between the Eastern board and the owners of the Bryansburn Inn about the future of the hospital.

Hospitals

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to reduce the concentration of hospital provision in west Belfast so as to achieve more equitable provision over the province as a whole.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the provision of hospital services in Northern Ireland lies in the first instance with the four health and social services boards acting within the regional strategic guidelines issued by the Department of Health and Social Services. I am aware that the Eastern board is at present developing a strategic approach to the delivery of acute hospital services to its population, but so far no firm proposals have been put to the Department for approval.

Health Service Funding

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated amount of funding that goes directly to the Eastern health board area for the treatment of residents of other board areas.

Mr. Hanley: Under the present arrangements, resources are allocated to health and social services boards on the basis of the levels of service provided by each board. Resources are not specifically earmarked or identified in the Eastern board's allocation for the provision of services to the residents of other board areas.

Historic Buildings

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide an estimate for the total Government expenditure on the upkeep, care and protection of historic buildings and monuments in Northern Ireland in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Needham: Estimated expenditure for 1990-91 is £4,664,000 and for 1991-92 is £5,028,000.

Director and Co-ordinator of Intelligence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement as to the present duties and activities of the present Director and Co-ordinator of Intelligence for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: It is not my practice, nor has it been that of successive Governments, to comment on such matters.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to apply the non-fossil fuel obligation to Northern Ireland; and what size tranche of renewable power he expects to grant.

Mr. Needham: The Electricity Act 1989, which contains the powers relating to the non-fossil fuel obligation, does not extend to Northern Ireland.

Disability

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the work force in Northern Ireland is registered disabled.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 14 January 1991]: About 1 per cent.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Sector Manpower

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much manpower in the whole of the public sector has changed between 1978-79 and 1988-89; by how much civil service manpower has changed between those dates; what would have been the changes in manpower for the whole of the public sector if it had changed at the same rate as civil service manpower; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The information is as follows:

	Thousands
	1978-79	1988-89	change	percentage
Public sector manpower: total	6,565	5,361	−1,204	−18·3
Civil Service manpower: total	734	572	−162	−22·1

Source: The Government's Expenditure Plans 1990-91 to 1992-93 (Cm 1021): chapter 21, appendix D.

Had public sector manpower changed at the same rate as civil service manpower, it would have fallen by 1,449 thousand.

Civil Service Posts, Renfrew

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to locate additional permanent civil service posts in Renfrew district.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government's relocation policy is not centrally directed. But I would refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the then Paymaster General gave on 25 October 1990, columns 303-5, to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), which listed civil service posts located or relocated out of the south-east since 1979 together with the relocation plans announced by Departments but still to be implemented.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what poll tax figures he used for the purposes of calculating the retail prices index in 1990-91; and if he intends to make any change in 1991-92.

Mr. Maples: In 1990-91 the average community charge figures used in the retail prices index were:

England	357
Wales	233
Scotland	306

The same principles will be followed for the purpose of calculating the RPI 1991-92 as were applied in 1990-91.

Redundancy Payments

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the transfer of employees of state enterprise which have been privatised, if he will list (a) those where there has not been any reduction in public service redundancy payments compared with those they would have received if they had remained in the public service and (b) those where there has been any such reduction.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981, civil servants transferred to a new employer on privatisation are entitled to redundancy compensation, which is identical to that available under the principal civil service pension scheme. The question of reduction in redundancy compensation therefore does not arise.

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of redundancy payments to (a) a civil service employee and (b) an employee of a normal commercial undertaking.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 requires employers to make redundancy payments. The Act does not apply to the civil service. However, arrangements have been made to ensure that redundancy payments to civil servants are at least comparable with the requirements of the Act and, in common with other good employers, the civil service provides payments which are in almost all cases more favourable than those requirements. The compensation terms are set out in section 10 of the principal civil service pension scheme.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Rihand Power Station, India

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the terms of reference of the World bank environmental assessment of the area around the Rihand power station in India.

Mrs. Chalker: The environmental assessment of the Singrauli area, which includes the Rihand power station, is being conducted under terms of reference agreed between the World bank and the Government of India, which are not in the public domain. We are, however, satisfied from our discussions with both parties that the study will be wide-ranging and comprehensive.

Environment and Development Conference

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what preparations he is making for the United Nations 1992 conference on environment and development; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 10 December 1990, c. 283.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. Eggar: The Department has actively encouraged local education authorities to conserve energy in educational buildings. Savings have been achieved by supporting development projects, dissemination of guidance on good practice and commissioned research. LEAs are currently spending £43 million a year less in real terms on energy than they did in 1978-79.

Current initiatives include supporting work being undertaken by the building research energy conservation support unit (BRECSU) in connection with its four-year £1 million programme to save energy in schools. DES publications offering advice on how to make energy savings are also in the course of preparation.

Regarding DES buildings, a sum of £10,000 was spent on power factor correction equipment at its Darlington headquarters offices in the 1989-90 financial year. This built on a sum of £28,000 spent on electrical lighting control sensors at the same site in the previous financial year. Expenditure on energy-saving equipment at the Department's London HQ cannot be justified as insufficient time remains in which to recover capital outlay prior to a move to new premises. A building management system has been specified as an energy-saving measure for the Department's new building which is in the course of construction.

Complete statistics are not available to enable us to say by what amount and by what percentage the Department's total energy bill has been reduced over the past year, but our target savings for the 1990-91 financial year are 3 per cent. compared with the previous financial year.

Rodent Carcases

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report all methods of disposal used by the Medical Research Council for irradiated rodent carcases since such disposals have been required following research; and what current licensing arrangements exist for disposal.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The disposal routes for such carcases used by the Medical Research Council are:

1. Maceration followed by disposal to the sewer, or,
2. Incineration and landfill.

The disposal of irradiated rodent carcases is subject to authorisation by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. Authorisations are issued only after careful assessment of the environmental impact of the proposed disposals.

Bomb Scares

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice is given to local education authorities and to governors of (a) local education authority maintained schools, (b) grant-maintained schools, (c) local education authority maintained colleges and (d) colleges of higher education and polytechnics about how the staff of these institutions should be involved with the police when searching for explosive material during a bomb scare.

Mr. Eggar: No advice is given by the Department on how to deal with local emergencies. The police, who should be the first point of contact in the event of an emergency, will give all necessary advice.

Special Educational Needs

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice the Government have given to governors of grant-maintained schools regarding support for, and integration of, children with special educational needs.

Mr. Fallon: Such advice is contained in "Guide to the Law for Grant-Maintained School Governors" issued in September 1989, in DES circular 10/88 "Education Reform Act 1988: Grant-Maintained Schools" and in DES circular 21/89 "Grant-Maintained Schools: Financial Arrangements". Governors of grant-maintained schools will also receive copies of other relevant guidance such as the recently issued DES circular 11/90—"Staffing for Pupils with Special Educational Needs".

Reading Standards

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report all national surveys of reading standards conducted in the last 10 years which his Department has available, with dates of survey and publication, and the sponsor and executor of the research in each case.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Much of the available information about reading standards in the 1980s derives from surveys conducted by individual local education authorities. However, the following national surveys are also available:

The results of the assessment of performance unit's annual surveys of reading at age 11 and 15 during the years 1979-1983, published in summary form in 1988 in "Language Performance in Schools—Review of APU monitoring 1979-1983". The APU was sponsored jointly by the DES, Welsh Office and Department of Education for Northern Ireland.

An HMI inspection report on "Reading Policy and Practice at ages 5-14" based on a survey of primary and secondary schools in 1989 and published the same year.

An HMI report on "The Teaching and Learning of Reading in Primary Schools" based on a survey of primary schools in autumn 1990 and other inspection evidence and published in 1991.

A report by the National Foundation for Educational Research entitled "An Enquiry into LEA Evidence on Standards of Reading of Seven Year Old Children" based on information about reading standards among seven-year-olds during the 1980s submitted to the NFER by local education authorities. The work was sponsored by the School Examinations and Assessment Council (SEAC) at the request of my predecessor.

History Teaching

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the principal differences between the recommendations of the National Curriculum Council relating to history and his proposals now the subject of consultation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The principal differences between the draft order for history, published on 14 January, and the recommendations of the National Curriculum Council relating to history, are set out in the table. The programme of study for key stage 4 and certain of the non-statutory examples illustrating the attainment targets have been adjusted to focus on the first half of the 20th century, with references to events from the turn of the century to the 1960s. These changes reflect my view that the law should not require teaching about particular contemporary events and people as part of the national curriculum history syllabus because of the difficulty of treating such matters with an historical perspective.

Summary of main changes

Programme of study for key stage 4	Page number of (a) NCC report (b) draft order
The preamble to key stage 4 model 1 indicates a focus on events from the turn of the twentieth century to the 1960s	(a) 56 (b) 36
Sub-sections on "British Democracy" and "International Conflict and Co-operation" now specify study should be up to circa 1960	(a) 59 (b) 39
The supplementary study units in model 2 changed to set terms to the periods of study as follows:	(a) 63 (b) 42
—Russia and USSR 1905-1964
—The United States of America 1917-1963
—The Indian sub-continent 1914-1964
—Africa south of the Sahara 1900-1963
—The Middle East 1914-1967
—Latin America 1910-1962
—Japan 1904-mid 1960s
—China 1911-1966

In addition, the draft order includes a number of complementary changes to the non-statutory examples which will accompany the order but which do not form part of the national curriculum requirements.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes to lay orders relating to the national curriculum, history.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In March 1991.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he received the latest report of the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions; and when he expects to publish it.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I received the report on 18 January and will publish it shortly.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he proposes that the recommendations of the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions should be fully funded.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Funding for teachers' salaries for 1991-92 was settled when the Government announced increased education standard spending for that year. The increase took full account of the remit given to the interim advisory committee and would fund recommendations within that remit.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, columns 25-26, what guidance he has given to local education authorities as to the maximum percentage of their budgets to be applied to the funding of city technology colleges.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has given no such guidance.

Science Budget

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the distribution of the science budget for 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have considered the recommendations of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on the distribution of the science budget, and have decided to accept the board's advice that the £920·8 million for 1991-92 should, subject to approval by Parliament of the estimates in due course, be allocated as follows:

Allocations for 1991-92	£ million
Agricultural and Food Research Council	93·47
Economic and Social Research Council	35·51
Medical Research Council	200·42
Natural Environment Research Council	122·56
Science and Engineering Research Council	451·30
The Royal Society	15·74
The Fellowship of Engineering	1·39
ABRC (Secretariat and Science Policy Studies)	0·36
Centre for Exploitation of Science and Technology	0·08
TOTAL	920·83

I have also accepted the board's recommendation that for planning purposes the following indicative allocations should be adopted for the years 1992-93 and 1993-94:

Planned figures for 1992-93 and 1993-94

£ million

	1992-93	1993-94
Agricultural and Food Research Council	90·53	91·58
Economic and Social Research Council	37·24	37·71
Medical Research Council	206·35	208·80
Natural Environment Research Council	119·99	121·28
Science and Engineering Research Council	462·96	469·16
The Royal Society	15·77	15·97
The Fellowship of Engineering	1·44	1·46
Unallocated[1]	88·94	160·40

[1] Including £50 million (1992-93) and £100 million (1993-94) consequent on new arrangements for funding of scientific work in higher education institutions.

In making these allocations I have accepted the board's advice that additional provision of £4·1 million, £6 million and £6 million in each of the three years 1991-92 to 1993-94 should be made available to the Medical Research Council for the restructuring of clinical research through its clinical research initiative.

The indicative planning figures above contain an unallocated £39 million in 1992-93 and £60 million in 1993-94 on which I expect to receive further advice from the ABRC in the spring. The allocations to funded bodies also exclude the increases in the science budget of £50 million in 1992-93 and £100 million in 1993-94 to take account of the new arrangements for funding scientific research in higher education announced on 8 November, Official Report, columns 27-28.

PRIME MINISTER

United Nations Security Council

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy towards the establishment of a seat on the United Nations Security Council for a representative from the European Community in place of the United Kingdom and French representatives.

The Prime Minister: According to the charter of the United Nations, only states may be members of the Security Council.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals have been put to him relating to the relinquishing of the United Kingdom's seat in the Security Council.

The Prime Minister: No such proposals have been put to the British Government.

European Community

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to put proposals on the subsidiarity of powers between the European Community and United Kingdom national and local government to Parliament.

The Prime Minister: We have already made clear in the political union intergovernmental conference that, provided that an acceptable definition can be agreed, we want to see the principle of subsidiarity recognised and observed by the European Community.

Wealth

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will take urgent action to avoid negative redistribution of wealth between rich and poor in Britain.

The Prime Minister: Real personal sector wealth has increased by some 60 per cent. since 1979, while there has been little change in its overall distribution. Government policies will continue to promote a dynamic, wealth-creating economy.

Kurds

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will seek European Community and United Nations support for a homeland and state for the Kurdish people.

The Prime Minister: No. The United Kingdom is a signatory to the treaty of Lausanne of 1923 which established the present-day frontiers in the region bounded by Iran, Iraq and Turkey. There can be no question of our seeking support for the establishment of a separate Kurdish state within those boundaries.

United Nations Resolutions

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister when Her Majesty's Government last pressed the European Community for initiatives to enforce United Nations resolutions 242 of 1967 and 338 of 1973.

The Prime Minister: We are in regular contact with our EC partners about the peace process and the role of the Twelve in it. Community policy on the issue was set out in the European Council's Venice declaration of 1980. This made clear, as have subsequent Council statements, most recently on 15 December 1990, that Security Council resolutions 242 and 338 should be the basis of any settlement.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister when he last discussed with Prime Minister Shamir the need to accept and abide by United Nations resolutions 242 and 338; and if he will make a statement on United Kingdom policy regarding the self-determination of the Palestinians and protection of the state of Israel.

The Prime Minister: I discussed the Arab-Israel peace process with Mr. Shamir during his visit to London last December. I reiterated the need for early progress towards a settlement based on Security Council resolutions 242 and 338. This will need to match the Palestinians' right to self-determination with Israel's right to security.

British Muslims

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met representatives of the British Muslim community.

The Prime Minister: I have had no recent meeting, but my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, saw a group of Muslims for discussion on the Gulf situation on 18 January, and has also seen a group of Muslim journalists: further meetings are in prospect. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Office met representatives of the United Kingdom action committee on Islamic affairs yesterday. Such meetings reflect continuing contacts at ministerial and official level.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidelines he has issued to British citizens in civilian employment in Saudi Arabia and their employers regarding conformity with civil air raid warnings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The British embassy in Riyadh has given written advice to British nationals in the eastern and central provinces of Saudi Arabia on precautions to be taken in the event of conflict. The embassy has also issued respirators and full instructions on their use in the event of an attack by chemical weapons. The embassy maintains close and continuing contact with the British community both directly and through the wardens.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with his opposite numbers in the United Nations coalition of nations in the Gulf hostilities regarding the co-ordination of guidelines for civilian employees and employers in Saudi Arabia in responding to air raid warnings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have had frequent exchanges with the Governments of the coalition and other Governments about the protection of civilians in Saudi Arabia. The most important of these contacts have been with the Saudi Arabian Government, who are responsible for providing air raid shelters, instructions and air raid warnings.

Squid, South Atlantic

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to safeguard Illex squid stocks in the South Atlantic.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Yes. We and the Falkland Islands Government are conscious of the need to conserve these stocks. As part of our efforts to do so we agreed recently with the Argentine Government measures to enhance fisheries conservation in the south-west Atlantic, including the establishment of a Falkland Islands outer conservation zone in which all fishing has been banned for one year beginning on 26 December 1990. An Anglo-Argentine joint commission on fisheries, at which information about and ideas on conservation will be discussed, will meet in March.

HEALTH

Mentally Ill People

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many mentally ill people are (a) in long-stay mental health institutions, (b) in care in the community, (c) in prison and (d) homeless.

Mr. Dorrell: The number of mentally ill residents in national health service hospitals and units on 31 March 1990 who had been resident for more than one year is estimated at 31,200.

The precise number of mentally ill people in receipt of care in the community is not known. The number of people in homes and hostels for mentally ill people who are supported by local authorities under the provisions of schedule 8 to the National Health Service Act 1977, as at 31 March 1989, the latest available date, was 3,549.

The total number of prisoners who suffer from some form of mental illness is not recorded centrally. A total of 245 prisoners were reported by prison medical officers on 31 March 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, to be mentally ill within the meaning of the Mental Health Act 1983, to a degree to meet the criteria for detention in hospital set out in that Act. Annually over 1,000 prisoners are transferred from prison to hospital under the provisions of that Act following reports by prison medical officers.

The number of mentally ill people who are homeless is not recorded centrally.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any information on the staffing and management arrangements of mental nursing homes registered to take detained patients with particular reference to the responsibilities of such homes under the Mental Health Act 1983; and what plans he has to increase the information available on such mental nursing homes.

Mr. Dorrell: The numbers of registered mental nurses and registered nurses for the mentally handicapped in registered mental nursing homes are reported to the Department by district health authorities in return KO36. The figures for 31 March 1989 were 1,050 full-time and 714 part-time registered mental nurses and 142 full-time and 65 part-time registered nurses for the mentally handicapped. We have no plans to collect any other information on the staffing of mental nursing homes.

Registered mental nursing homes are subject to the Registered Homes Act 1984 and must meet the requirements of that Act before they can be registered. Homes registered to take patients detained under the Mental Health Act 1983 must comply with all the relevant sections of that Act, including those concerning patients' rights while detained and access to the mental health review tribunals and the Mental Health Act Commission. The responsibilities of managers of registered mental nursing homes under the 1983 Act are broadly comparable to those of managers of NHS hospitals.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of detained patients cared for in mental nursing homes during 1990; and how many mental nursing homes are registered to take detained patients.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest available information is for 31 March 1989 when there were 89 patients detained under the Mental Health Act 1983 in private mental nursing homes in England. This does not include patients cared for under contractual arrangements with health authorities. On the same date there were 60 mental nursing homes registered under part II of the Registered Homes Act 1984 and authorised to detain patients.

Trent Regional Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of the number of hospital beds by district health authority in the Trent regional health authority (a) in 1979, (b) in 1985 and (c) for the latest date for which he has figures.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the tables.

Number of beds available in Trent regional health authority and district health authorities 1979, 1985, 1989-90

Sheffield	78,093	96,923	118,566

[1] Figures for 1989-90 refer to finished consultant episodes and should not be directly compared with earlier figures (discharges and deaths).

In 1988-89 when data were collected on both bases, finished consultant episodes in Trent regional health authority exceeded discharges and deaths by 8 per cent.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. Dorrell: The national health service has met the target of reducing energy consumption by 1·5 per cent. a year suggested by the Public Accounts Committee in 1980-81 and there is a commitment to save a further 15 per cent. in consumption over the next five years.

Guidance is provided by the Department's "Encode" and the performance of regional health authorities is monitored by the national health service management executive.

It is estimated that £379 million has been saved in the national health service in the last 10 years due to reductions in energy consumption, changes in fuel prices and rationalisation of the estate. The latest annual figures which have been validated are for 1986-87 and they show a saving of £4·7 million representing 2 per cent. of the total energy bill for that year.

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the name, address and telephone number of each national health service trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been given with regard to the charging by national health service trusts of local authority social services departments for services currently provided freely by local health authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No guidance is being given to trusts on systems for charging local authorities for services. The powers for national health service trusts to charge for services are no different from the powers which continue to be available to health authorities. Health services to individual patients remain free at the point of delivery. Local authorities remain responsible for determining charges to clients for social care which they arrange or provide.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy towards national health service trusts who may wish to make direct community care provision.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: National health service trusts can enter into contracts with district health authorities for the provision of any health service including community health services. National health service trusts may make direct community care provision for local authorities if they wish, bearing in mind that the funding of such provision is subject to section 7 of the Health and Medicines Act 1988.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements have been made for national health service trusts to purchase the services of hospital-based local authority social workers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authorities will provide hospital social work services to national health service trusts on the same basis as to the rest of the hospital and community health services.

Dental Charges

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average dental charge in 1988-89 and in 1990-91.

Mr. Dorrell: The average dental charge in England for the financial year 1988-89 was £19·84. The figure for 1990-91 is not yet available.

British Sign Language

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which national health service district general hospitals in England and Wales provide British sign language interpreters for deaf people; and which charge for this service.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Food Safety

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made to ensure that United Kingdom food hygiene standards are maintained throughout the European Community.

Mr. Dorrell: Major changes are being introduced in England and Wales from 1 April to improve food hygiene by the appropriate use of temperature controls during production, distribution and sale. The controls apply to food whether produced in this country for consumption here or for export and to foods which have been imported. Different food hygiene requirements apply in individual member states of the European Community. Where the European Commission puts forward proposals for European standards the views of the United Kingdom Government are fully represented.

Young Offenders

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of local authorities have their own secure accommodation available for young people for whom it is judged necessary.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 31 December 1990, 26 local authorities, 24 per cent., in England provided secure accommodation. All local authorities have access to this national network of secure facilities.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authority secure places were made available to other local authorities willing to pay for them, in the last year for which figures were available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Of the 1,417 admissions to secure accommodation in England during the year ending 31 March 1989, 775 were placed by local authorities which did not provide such facilities; 11 were placed by local authorities outside England, and 60 were placed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authority secure homes for young people have been closed in the last five years; and what proportion this is of the total at the beginning of the period for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In January 1986 there were 46 community homes providing secure units. Ten (22 per cent.) of these units have since closed permanently, primarily because the associated open part of the home has become surplus to the requirements of the local authority. A further four such secure units are currently temporarily closed while the local authority reviews their long-term future.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from chief constables with regard to the availability of secure accommodation for young persons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There have been no representations from chief constables specifically about the availability of secure accommodation. The Department has received comments from the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) on the draft regulations and guidance on secure accommodation that were issued for consultation under the Children Act 1989. ACPO's comments will be taken into account when the final version of these regulations and guidance are prepared.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list his estimate of the number of local authority care home trusts; and in which local authorities they are located.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to encourage the development of short-term respite care in both the local authority and the private sectors to avoid permanent admissions to care homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's White Paper "Caring for People" makes it clear that respite care has an important part to play in supporting carers and enabling dependent people to continue living in the community. The White Paper also asks local authorities to promote the involvement of and make maximum use of the non-statutory sector in improving community care.

The Department has awarded a grant to the National Association of Family Based Respite Care and has funded research at Bristol university about respite care for families with children with a mental handicap.

The report "Care for a Change", produced by the Department's social services inspectorate and published in 1987, a copy of which is available in the Library, gives guidance to local authorities on the provision of respite care.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is issued to registration authorities regarding arrangements that may be made by private care and nursing homes for insurance cover for contents, liability, and loss of revenue.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. These are matters for the organisations concerned.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation he has made of the implications of the growth in private care homes for the type of resident now accommodated in local authority part III accommodation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is the Government's policy, set out in the White Paper "Caring for People", to encourage the contribution the independent sector can make in providing residential care for vulnerable people, in order to increase the choice for individuals and promote competition among providers. It is for individual local authorities in drawing up their community care plans to identify the range of services required to meet their population's community care needs, assemble information about current and prospective demand and supply of services in their locality, and secure a supply of appropriate services.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his current estimate of the capital investment needed by local authorities to bring the structural standards of local authority residential care homes up to the level required by his Department.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for local authorities to determine their capital needs for personal social services. The assessment of the need for structural work to be carried out in local authoritty residential care homes depends upon a number of factors, including the condition and suitability of the premises in the light of the standards they apply, as registration authorities, to independent homes, the extent to which they need to retain their own homes, and the availability of resources. Only local authorities themselves can carry out such an assessment.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued to local authorities with regard to the criteria which may be applied to the size of private care homes when contracts for the provision for care are being placed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for local social services authorities and health authorities, which are the registration authorities for independent homes, to judge whether a home is of an acceptable size, in the light of such factors as the premises, staffing levels, the level of care required for residents and the quality of life offered.

Guidance has been issued to local authorities about the size of new local authority residential care homes. The code of practice for residential care, "Home Life," a copy of which is available in the Library, advises that the size of the building and the proposed number of residents should be considered in the context of the stated aims of the home. We would expect local authorities to have regard to this guidance when arranging contracts with private care homes.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if a local authority's statutory responsibilities for residents in local authority care home trusts differ in any way from their responsibilities for residents in local authority part III accommodation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authorities have a statutory duty to provide residential accommodation for persons who, by reason of age, infirmity or any other circumstances, are in need of care and attention which is not otherwise available to them. This duty can be exercised by social services authorities either by providing the individual with accommodation in a local authority residential care home or by sponsoring them in an independent sector residential care home.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken by his Department to develop alternatives to the institutional model of care for elderly or disabled people.

Mr. Dorrell: We are firmly committed to a policy of community care which enables elderly and disabled people, with appropriate support, to live in their own homes or in small homely settings in the community for as long as this is feasible and sensible.

The White Paper "Caring for People" made clear that health and local authorities are expected to work closely together in preparing community care plans that are compatible and comprehensive. Following the passage of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, the Department issued guidance to assist authorities in this task and to develop good practice. We have continued to stress the key role of the voluntary sector in this process and the importance of ensuring that the wishes of the elderly or disabled person are taken carefully into account.

Social Service Placements

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total number of special agency placements by local authority social services departments for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information about the number of such placements is not available centrally.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what feasibility studies his Department have undertaken into the comparative costs and benefits of differing forms of community care provision; and what were the results.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has undertaken a number of such studies in particular those carried out by the personal social services research unit at the University of Kent. They have shown that the costs and benefits of community care are dependent on a range of factors with a complex interrelationship. Copies of relevant studies will be placed in the Library.

Child Welfare

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to bring forward legislation on transferring responsibilities for child welfare within local authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no such proposals.

Social Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to transfer the responsibility for the provision of personal social services from local authorities to district health authorities or national health service trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to do so.

Home Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authorities currently operate a 24-hour, seven days a week home care service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Special Agency Placements

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the financial implications for local authorities of the increased use of special agency placements by social services departments.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In deciding on appropriate finance for local authorities the Government take account of local authorities' assessments of the cost to social services departments of changes in policy, demand and demography.

North Devon Health Care Trust

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of his letter, dated 4 December 1990, and that of his Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Hooper, dated 14 January 1991, both addressed to the hon. Member for Devon, North, indicating the deferral of the application for establishing a North Devon health care trust; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to the reply, 22 January 1991, c. 161]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has now decided to approve the application from Northern Devon Healthcare, formerly known as North Devon Healthcare, to be an NHS trust. The criteria adopted in considering trust applications were previously listed on 4 December 1989 at columns 77-82. They included:

> that the establishment of a trust will give clear benefits and improved quality of service to patients; that management has the skills and capacity—including strong, effective leadership, sufficient financial and personnel management expertise and adequate information systems—to run the unit effectively; that senior professional staff, especially consultants, are involved in the management of the unit.

In the case of the Northern Devon Healthcare Trust my right hon. Friend agreed, in response to a request from the sponsors, to defer the establishment of the trust at the time he made his decision to approve 56 NHS trusts.

My right hon. Friend has now decided, after careful thought and after having taken into account comments made during the consultation, to approve this application for trust status. The management team has now established itself and obtained the involvement of senior professional staff. The unit can now take advantage of NHS trust status.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by his civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Mr. Leigh: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures. These measures are kept under review.

The Gulf Crisis

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to enable British businesses directly affected by the economic impact of the Gulf crisis to weather the financial problems facing them at the present time.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 January 1991]: None. It is for businesses themselves, in consultation with their banks and financial advisers to consider what measures are appropriate to their specific circumstances. DTI regional offices are, however, giving priority to the needs of affected companies to help them find new markets. My Department is also taking appropriate action to assist British industry in playing a significant part in the reconstruction of Kuwait after its liberation.

Local Government

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide a table of expenditure of his Department's programmes of grant aid and support to industry in 1989-90, broken down by programme and cross-tabulated by standard region, with Greater London shown as a separate region, and including programmes of grant and other financial aid and also programmes of advice and training.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 January 1991]: A regional breakdown of expenditure on the Department of Trade and Industry's regional programmes and for other industrial support under the Industrial Development Act 1982, including the consultancy initiatives, is provided in the appendices to the Industrial Development Act 1982 annual report for the year ended 31 March 1990. A regional breakdown of expenditure on other programmes is not available, nor is separate information available for Greater London, except at disproportionate cost, but the total level of expenditure on each of the Department's programmes is shown in the appropriation accounts for 1989-90.

Iraq (Loans)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the total number of Export Credits Guarantee Department loans outstanding to Iraq, and the cost, per year for 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990 of facilities to promote British trade with Iraq.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 23 January 1991]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 17 October 1990, Official Report, column 837. There are currently 19 ECGD supported loans outstanding to Iraq.

The total cost by year of the various trade promotion facilities available for Iraq could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department's initiatives have focused on the prison estate. Energy efficiency has been promoted on the estate in the following ways:

the use of low-energy light units;
the use of high-frequency light units;
improved insulation of distribution pipework;
the installation of decentralised boiler systems using gas;
the use of automatic controls for lighting;
the introduction of building management systems;
water surveys;
energy surveys;
improved heat distribution;
building insulation;
the use of low-energy equipment;
the use of fuel additives;
waste-derived fuel trials;
zone control of heating;
the use of condensing boilers; and the use of workshop heating controls.

Reductions in energy bills have resulted from tariff analysis, maximum demand analysis and power factor reduction.

Future measures will include the following:

the evaluation of combined heat and power systems and of waste gas fuel; considering the use of contract energy management; staff training; and equipment evaluation and testing.

The energy bill for the prison estate was reduced from £19·43 million in 1988-89 to £19·2 million in 1989-90, a reduction of 1·2 per cent. despite an increase of 2·5 per cent. in the size of the estate.

We intend to introduce a programme of similar measures in non-prison estate buildings in 1991-92. It is not possible to provide the information requested on costs in respect of those buildings, because the Department has been billed directly for its use of energy in them since April 1990.

Emergency Communications Network

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the report of Scicon Ltd's study of the emergency communications network; how much the study cost; what are the report's recommendations; and whether he will place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. John Patten: The study, which is expected to cost about £150,000, is not yet complete. A final report is due shortly. Because of the classified nature of some of the material, it is not proposed to place copies in the Library.

Cardphones (Prisons)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on allowing cardphones to be available at a prisoner's own expense for use in prisons in England and Wales; and if he will list the prisons where such a scheme now exists.

Mrs. Rumbold: We believe that the use of cardphones by prisoners is an important way of sustaining relationships with family and friends and relieving stress during the time in custody, and can help prisoners to prepare for release.

Cardphones are now available for the use of prisoners at all the establishments listed in the table. This includes all open establishments and almost all category C and equivalent female and young offender establishments; the installation of phones is in progress at the remainder. In addition a trial is under way at Winchester under which unconvicted prisoners have access to cardphones. The trial will shortly be extended to Manchester prison.

Trevi Group

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the United Kingdom personnel in the Trevi group working on European policy; what are their terms of reference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I attend Trevi Ministers' meetings, and other meetings are attended by United Kingdom officials and police service representatives. Trevi exists to promote practical co-operation among European Community member states against terrorism, drug trafficking and other serious crime.

I attended a special meeting of Trevi Ministers on 22 January in Luxembourg, at which we discussed measures to counter the threat of terrorism associated with hostilities in the Gulf and reaffirmed our determination to co-operate fully to the end.

Police Posts

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many extra police posts were authorised throughout the United Kingdom (a) between 1974 and 1979 and (b) 1979 to date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend is responsible only for the police service in England and Wales. Between February 1974 and April 1979 the authorised establishment of the police service in England and Wales rose by 5,809. Since the Government took office in May 1979 the establishment of the police service has increased by 8,687 and my right hon. Friend has recently announced a further increase of 700 police posts to be implemented during 1991-92.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what active steps he has taken to resolve the case of Mr. A. A. (Reference A413117/2 (S)); why there have been delays in resolving this case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As I explained to the hon. Member in my letter of 3 January further inquiries are necessary before we can reach a decision in this case. I shall write to the hon. Member when the inquiries are complete.

Young Offenders

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders were sent to adult prisons whilst awaiting trial in the last year for which figures are available; and how many of them were involved in incidents where there were allegations of them being threatened or they came to physical harm.

Mrs. Rumbold: During 1989, the last year for which figures were available, 4,300 unsentenced young offenders were initially received in adult prisons. Information is available centrally on alleged assaults only where these gave rise to action by the police. In 1989, there were 13. Of these, 10 were carried out by other young offenders and three by adult males. There is no centrally available information on threats.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence his Department has obtained on the likelihood of young people awaiting trial to be sent to an adult prison if they live in a local authority which does not have its own secure centre as against those in an authority which does have such a centre.

Mr. John Patten: Local authority secure accommodation is a resource to which all local authorities in England and Wales have access. But the availability of secure accommodation locally and the local authority's willingness to use it for remanded juveniles may affect at present a court's decision whether it is necessary to remand a juvenile in Prison Department custody.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the daily cost of keeping a young person in (a) local authority secure accommodation and (b) an adult prison.

Mrs. Rumbold: The daily cost of keeping a young person in an adult prison during 1989-90 was £44.

I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health that the disparity in types of local authority secure accommodation makes in impossible to provide a realistic representative figure for the cost of accommodating a young person in such accommodation.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to stop young people awaiting trial being sent to adult prisons.

Mr. John Patten: We intend to issue very soon a consultation paper setting out our detailed proposals for reforming the arrangements for the remand of alleged offenders under 17. This will include proposals affecting the use of Prison Department establishments for remanded juveniles.

Young Offenders

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many unruly certificates were issued in the last year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not recorded centrally. The only information available relates to juveniles initially received on remand into prison service establishments. These statistics are published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (table 2.7 of the volume for 1989, Cm. 1221), a copy of which is in the Library. An unruliness certificate is required for juveniles received as untried—1,387 in 1989—and for some of those received as convicted unsentenced—89 in 1989; it is not required for those committed in custody to the Crown court for sentence under section 37 of the Magistrates Courts Act.

Detention

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on what statutory authority residents of Arabic or Palestinian origin are being arrested or detained, arising from the war in Iraq; what source of information led to arrest; whether these detainees have been questioned on these allegations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) on what basis residents of Arabic and Palestinian origin are being arrested or detained arising from the war in Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what rights of representation have been accorded to persons detained without charge or trial in response to the war in the Gulf;

(2) what criteria applied to the recent arrest and detention of individuals currently resident in the United Kingdom without charge; and what is the authority under which they are held.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: By virtue of section 3(5)(b) of the Immigration Act 1971 orders of intention to deport have been served on a number of Iraqi and other nationals on my right hon. Friend's personal direction that their deportation would be conducive to the public good for reasons of national security. These decisions have been taken individually after careful consideration of information about the activities and associations of those concerned and in the light of the present threat of terrorist activities against the United Kingdom.

Under section 15(3) of the Act there is no statutory right of appeal against these decisions. Paragraph 157 of the statement of changes in the immigration rules, however, provides that those concerned may appear before a panel of independent advisers and make representations to them before the advisers tender their advice to my right hon. Friend. If it is decided to make a deportation order, they also have a right of appeal to the immigration appellate authorities against the destination specified. Under paragraph 2(2) of schedule 3 to the Act persons may be detained on my right hon. Friend's authority pending deportation.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the numbers of people detained under powers given to him under the Immigration Act 1971 who are holders of (a) Iraqi passports, (b)

Jordanian passports, (c) Israeli passports, (d) UN travel documents and (e) other passports since 1 January; how many are in (i) prisons and (ii) police stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by nationality, what are the numbers of persons arrested and detained without charge or trial in response to the war in the Gulf.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many non-Iraqi Arabic or Palestinian residents in Britain have been arrested or detained over the last two weeks; from what parts of the United Kingdom they have been taken; how long they have been held; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many residents of Iraqi origin have been arrested or detained in the last fortnight; from what areas of the United Kingdom they originated, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since August 1990, 160 Iraqi and 12 other nationals living in England, Scotland and Wales have been served with notice of intention to deport them from the United Kingdom on the grounds that their deportation would be conducive to the public good for reasons of national security. Fifteen Iraqis left for Jordan on 23 January and about half these individuals have now left the country before deportation orders were made. At 1030 hours on 23 January 47 Iraqis, four Lebanese, three Jordanians, one Yemeni and one naturalised United State's citizen were in detention in prisons, having been detained between 15 and 18 January; 31 Iraqis were detained in police cells having been detained on 22 January and 23 January. Additionally, two Iraqis detained had been identified as serving military personnel and transferred to military custody as prisoners of war.

Those detained have been advised of their right to make representations to the advisory panel and the majority have already done so. The decision to deport and to detain will be kept under review in the light of any representations which they may wish to make.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why Mr. Ali El Salem, of 69 Hamble road, Bedford, has been detained and considered for deportation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has decided that Mr. El Salem should be served with notice of intention to deport him from the United Kingdom on the grounds that his deportation would be conducive to the public good for reason of national security. He has been detained pending any representations which he may wish to make as to why he should not be deported. He may, if he wishes, appear before an independent advisory panel and make representations to it before it tenders its advice to my right hon. Friend. If it is decided to make a deportation order he will have a right of appeal against destination to the independent immigration authorities.

Mr. Mullins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list Iraqi nationals resident in Sunderland who have been detained within the last 10 days; and what decisions have been taken about their future in each case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Three Iraqi nationals resident in Sunderland have been detained in the past 10 days pending deportation on grounds of national security. I am not prepared to comment on individual cases.

SCOTLAND

AIDS

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been infected by the AIDS virus through the infusion of whole blood or platelets.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Up to 31 December 1990 the total number of reports in Scotland of people who have contracted AIDS as a result of their having received whole blood transfusions/platelets within the United Kingdom and abroad is five.

Farm Assurance Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has had any discussions concerning the Scottish farmers farm assurance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend is aware of this initiative by the National Farmers Union of Scotland.

Details of the scheme have still to be developed. In his view, however, the aims of this proposal, which are to secure consumer confidence in and demand for Scottish farm produce by developing and applying on a voluntary basis codes of best farming practice, are to be commended.

Salmon

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he has any plans to introduce further controls in respect of the salmon farming industry; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to introduce a long-term strategy to control salmon farming.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government recognise the importance of the marine salmon farming industry in bringing economic and social benefits to communities in Scotland. Equally they acknowledge that the longer-term existence of the industry can be assured only if the natural resource base on which the industry is dependent can be used in a sustainable manner. In conjunction with the Crown Estate Commissioners the Government have therefore strengthened the procedures for open and independent consideration of the more contentious seabed lease applications for marine fish farming through the establishment of an advisory committee. The Scottish Office is currently engaged in drawing up revised guidelines covering the location and siting of marine fish farms and will consult widely before these guidelines are introduced.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet representatives of Scottish Wildlife and Countryside Link to discuss salmon farming; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I met representatives of Scottish Wildlife and Countryside Link for this purpose on 21 January. We welcome the involvement of voluntary conservation bodies in the debate on the future of the salmon farming industry and plan to consult Scottish Wildlife and Countryside Link members as part of a wide-ranging consultation exercise on the establishment of revised guidelines covering the siting and location of marine fish farms.

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the average time that patients wait for the results of cervical smear tests in (a) Britain, (b) Scotland and (c) each of the health board areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Figures are not available on a Great Britain basis. The average time taken to report results to patients across Scotland for the latest figures available (January to June 1990) was 30 days.

Information for each health board is as follows:

Health Board	Average time in days
Argyll and Clyde	31
Ayr and Arran	21
Borders	21
Dumfries and Galloway	3
Fife	33
Forth Valley	29
Grampian	77
Greater Glasgow	[1]4-7
	[2]28
Highland	32
Lanarkshire	35
Lothian	15
Orkney	[3]—
Shetland	48
Tayside	14
Western Isles	[4]—

[1]high risk
[2]low risk
[3]Tests processed by Grampian HB
Separate figures not readily available
[4]Tests processed by Highland HB
Separate figures not readily available

I regard those averages of more than 14 days as unacceptable and I instructed health boards on 13 December 1990 to achieve this average turnround time for all results by no later than 31 May 1991. Boards have already indicated that they are making progress towards this and the position will be monitored.

Missing People

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for the Strathclyde police force area how many (a) children and (b) adults are known to have gone missing for each of the last five years for which he has records; and how many were subsequently traced.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand from the chief constable of Strathclyde police that the available information is as follows:

Year	Missing person reports received by the police	Persons traced (as at 31 December 1990)
(a) Children (aged under 16)
1986	5,582	5,582
1987	5,701	5,701
1988	4,733	4,732
1989	4,411	4,411
1990	4,604	4,592
(b) Adults (aged 16 or more)
1986	3,139	3,135
1987	3,442	3,440
1988	3,767	3,762
1989	3,862	3,854
1990	3,559	3,525

Notes:

1. The information given relates to reports rather than individuals. Thus if the same person was reported missing on more than one occasion he will have been the subject of more than one report.
2. The information given does not include reports of persons missing from local authority residential establishments, prison establishments or the State Hospital, Carstairs.
3. Of the children untraced at 31 December 1990, two had been missing for more than 28 days.

Child Care Law

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals to integrate the work of the Scottish Child Care Law Review Group with the work of law reform of the Adoption Law Review and the Scottish Law Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The report of the Scottish child care law review recognised the interaction between child care and adoption law. The observations made in that report about adoption have been conveyed to the interdepartmental group which is currently reviewing adoption law in the United Kingdom. The Scottish Law Commission subsequently published its discussion paper, "Parental responsibilities and Rights, Guardianship and the Administration of Children's Property". In considering the commission's final recommendations the Secretary of State will take into account the outcome of the two reviews.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to take forward the work of the Scottish Child Care Law Review Group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: When the report of the Scottish child care law review was published on 19 October a wide range of organisations was invited to submit their comments on the recommendations by 14 December. A total of 79 responses have been received and are now being assessed. We shall carefully consider that assessment before deciding whether to accept the various recommendations and whether to promote legislation.

Recycling

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the plans announced on 9 November for a programme of investment in local authority recycling facilities will be implemented in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Scotland capital expenditure allocations are not identified separately for local authorities' waste disposal and recycling activities. It is for local authorities to make my right hon. Friend aware of their intention to incur expenditure on recycling facilities through their financial plans. Where authorities have identified such projects in their plans, priority has been given to these projects when consent allocations have been determined.

Conveyancing Research

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made on conveyancing research by his Department.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am pleased to announce that a research report on factors influencing the market for conveyancing in Scotland has been published today. I have placed copies of the report, "The Market for Conveyancing in Scotland", in the Library. The research was carried out at Strathclyde university with Scottish Office funding.

The report concludes that there has been greater competition in conveyancing and house selling since 1985 when, with Government persuasion, the Law Society of Scotland introduced changes relating to advertising and fee quotations and abolished scale fees. The report also found that 40 per cent. of solicitors who responded were in favour of multi-disciplinary partnerships with non-lawyers. The statutory barriers to the formation of such partnerships were removed by the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1990.

A second study which looks particularly at fees charged for conveyancing before and after the abolition of scale fees is in progress.

Haemophilia

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many haemophiliacs in Scotland who require Factor VIII injections are given the new highly purified material from Armour Pharmaceuticals; how many are given the older material from Bio Products; and if he will break down the figures for each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 January 1991]: Five patients, four in the Lothian health board area and one in Greater Glasgow, are being treated with Factor VIII produced by the Armour Pharmaceutical Company. A further 245 are being treated with intermediate potency Factor VIII concentrate produced by the Scottish national blood transfusion service (SNBTS).

The prescribing of Factor VIII is a matter for clinical judgment, but there is no reason to consider that the current SNBTS product is less efficacious than commercial products for those patients for whom it is prescribed.

The SNBTS keeps all its products under review, developing them in line with technological and scientific advances. I have today given my approval to the SNBTS to enter into agreement with the French blood transfusion service at Lille to exchange technological knowledge. This agreement will enable the SNBTS to produce a higher potency Factor VIII which will be available for clinicians to prescribe to haemophiliacs in Scotland in the course of 1991.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing how many people in (i) England, (ii) Wales and (iii) Scotland are in receipt of (a) full community charge benefit and (b) partial community charge benefit, also giving these figures as a percentage of the total number of poll tax payers; and if he will make a statement on his estimates of the number of people who are eligible but are not claiming community charge benefit for all poll tax payers and for all those aged under 25 years.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available estimates, based on benefit caseload processed by 31 August 1990, are as follows:

	Community Charge Benefit			Percentage of community charge paying population
	With Income Support (000)	Without Income Support (000)	Total (000)	per cent.
England	3,190	4,070	7,260	20
Wales	270	240	510	23
Scotland	480	470	950	25
Great Britain	3,950	4,780	8,730	21

These figures are likely to underestimate the current position, because some authorities still had a number of unprocessed claims at the time. Not all community charge payers are eligible for community charge benefit, and it is not possible to give estimates of the eligible population for community charge benefit until the appropriate survey data becomes available.

Note: Total does not equal sum of components because of rounding.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were (a) the total numbers of recipients and (b) the total values of the payments made in (i) cash and (ii) constant terms under the exceptionally severe weather payments under the single payments regulations in each year from 1980 to 1988 and subsequently under the social fund exceptionally cold weather payments in each subsequent year, in Scotland.

Mr. Scott: Figures for Scotland are not available for 1980-81, and in 1981-82, 1982-83, and 1983-84 no payments were made.

Figures for subsequent years are as follows:

	Awards	Expenditure (Cash terms) £	Expenditure (At 1990-91 prices)[1] £
1984-85	1	60	85
1985-86	84,235	1,927,991	2,591,741
1986-87	291,177	1,455,885	1,892,421
1987-88	84,631	426,583	525,846
1988-89	502	2,510	2,884
1989-90	43,782	403,157	435,410

[1] The Gross Domestic Product Deflator has been used to show expenditure at 1990-91 prices.

Note—Awards up to and including 1986-87 relate to the number of payments made, after then awards relate to the number of recipients during the year.

Dangerous Loads

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines are issued to his Department's local offices regarding co-operation with other agencies in planning emergency liaison procedures in case of accident during the transportation of (a) radioactive waste, (b) nuclear warloads and (c) toxic waste.

Miss Widdecombe: Local offices have standing instructions on what to do in the event of local disasters. Action required includes liaison with local authorities and other appropriate agencies.

Household Incomes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how a household of (a) below-average income and (b) above-average income is calculated.

Mr. Jack: In the technical annex to the publication "Households below Average Income A Statistical Analysis 1981-87", published in July 1990, pages 75 to 78 are details of the definition of income, of how income is equivalised across households, and of the calculation of average income.

Each household's income is calculated as the total net income of all household members, either before or after housing costs. This amount is then divided by the equivalence value of the household concerned, using the DSS'sequivalence scales. This produces "equivalised household incomes", and takes account of the different income levels required by households of different compositions to achieve the same overall living standard.

The average equivalised household income is then calculated across the whole population. Thus this average is the sum of the equivalised household incomes of all people in the survey, divided by the total number of people. Each household's equivalised income is then either above or below this average.

Disability

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the purpose of the functional test of disability that claimants of the disability working allowance will be expected to undergo; and whether any duplication, in the evidence of disability required to be provided, will result from the new test.

Mr. Scott: In almost all first claims for disability working allowance (DWA) and about 60 per cent. of repeat claims the claimant's declaration that he has a disability which puts him at a disadvantage in getting a job will be accepted. The test of functional disability will be applied in other cases to provide evidence that the claimant still has a disability.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide details of the functional test of disability that claimants of the disability working allowance will be expected to undergo in order to ascertain whether they are at a disadvantage in getting a job on account of a physical or mental disability where their own declaration is not accepted as sufficient proof; in what percentage of cases his Department envisages the need for an additional test to provide proof of disadvantage; and what are his Department's estimates of the additional cost this test will entail.

Mr. Scott: In almost all first claims for disability working allowance (DWA) the claimant's own declaration will be accepted. In addition, we estimate that about 60 per cent. of second and subsequent claims will be by people whose declaration will generally be accepted without further confirmation; that is, those getting one of the higher rates of disability living allowance (the rates which are equivalent to the present attendance allowance and mobility allowance) or an analogous benefit or who were getting severe disablement allowance before claiming.

In other cases where the claimant is applying for a repeat award of disability working allowance, the claimant will be asked to complete a questionnaire about their functional disabilities. We estimate that the cost of administering the test for these claimants will be about £0·5 million per annum.

Social Fund

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to revise social fund loan arrangements in order to reduce the amount of staff time committed to calculating repayment schedules.

Mr. Scott: There are no plans to revise social fund loan arrangements at present. The microcomputer system was recently enhanced to provide more assistance to staff in the calculation of repayment terms.

Attendance Allowance

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases the six-month waiting period for attendance allowance has been waived since the relaxation of the rule for terminally ill people.

Mr. Scott: From 1 October to 31 December 1990 there were 14,200 awards of attendance allowance under the special rules for people with a terminal illness. This figure includes awards made on review.

Local Office, Glasgow

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what options are currently under consideration by his Department in relation to the site of the planned Glasgow, Pollok local office; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member on 20 December 1990 at column 318.

Respite Care

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department will consider expanding the categories of claimant service providers to whom payments of benefit may be made directly rather than to the user to include those respite care projects administered by the archdiocese of Glasgow; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: No. Individual cases are considered on their merits.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department will consider directing offices to inform administrators of respite care projects of payments made to user claimants and carers in those cases where the authority of the recipient has been obtained; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: All personal information held in social security records is regarded as confidential and is not normally disclosed to third parties without the consent of the person concerned. Where the benefit recipient has given his consent, information on benefit payments can be given to the administrators of respite care projects. This is reflected in the procedural instructions issued to staff in DSS local offices.

Carers

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department will consider undertaking a review of the presentation of explanatory information accompanying payments of benefit to carers; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Invalid care allowance is paid by order book. The information pages in the Department's order books are kept under review.

The Department is currently engaged in producing a new version of the invalid care allowance explanatory leaflet and claim form which we expect will be available from April. A new leaflet, containing general advice about benefits and services of interest to carers, is being developed at present and will be available in the summer.

Direct Payments

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department will consider undertaking a review of the categories and criteria under which claimant service providers may receive payments of benefits direct; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so at present.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what ways the arrangements for the provision of income support for residents entering local authority trust care homes differ from the arrangements for a resident entering a private care home.

Miss Widdecombe: Eligibility for income support is defined by regulations. They provide that income support is available in respect of fees, up to certain limits, to residents of registered residential care homes and in certain other types of homes. Independent adjudication officers decide on benefit payable and are provided with guidance on the interpretation of the regulations by the chief adjudication officer in the published adjudication officer's guide, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to ensure that prior to the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Act income support payments towards the cost of residential care are only made available to those individuals who actually require such care.

Miss Widdecombe: The level of income support payable depends on the type of care the residential care home is providing for the claimant. The adjudication officer must be satisfied that the home is recognised by the registration authority as able to provide a level of care and that the resident is receiving such care. We have no evidence to suggest that residents of registered care homes do not need to be there.

Care Allowance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines he has issued regarding the payment of care allowance for those already entitled to the married woman's share of her husband's invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: Regulations govern both the award of invalid care allowance and invalidity benefit as well as the treatment of overlapping benefits. Decisions under those regulations are made by independent adjudication officers.

Guidance to adjudication officers is the responsibility of the chief adjudication officer and is published in the adjudication officers' guide.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Car Parking

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will arrange for a report on the feasibility of using the courtyard at the rear of the Norman Shaw North parliamentary building for parking by members and their staff.

Mr. MacGregor: The arrangements for car parking in the Norman Shaw car park were considered by the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee in May 1988. However, I will arrange for the hon. Member's suggestion to be looked into.

Parliamentary Pension Scheme

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Lord President of the Council what are the terms of his reference to the Top Salaries Review Body of hon. Members' and Exchequer contributions under the parliamentary pensions scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: Following discussions with the trustees of the parliamentary pension fund, and subject to the views of the House, I propose to write to the chairman of the Top Salaries Review Body as follows:

"At the conclusion of the debate on Parliamentary Pensions held on 17 January 1990 my predecessor said that he would examine what hon. Members had said with a view to framing a future reference to the TSRB on Parliamentary pensions. He subsequently held discussions with the Trustees of the Parliamentary Pension Scheme and others on both the current shape of the scheme and the implementation of the recommendations made in the review body's last report (the 26th). You will have seen that I introduced a Bill to enact those recommendations and other matters this session and the Second Reading took place on [ ]. Because of acute Parliamentary concern about the state of the Fund, we have taken the unusual step of making some changes to the Parliamentary Contributory Pension Fund (PCPF), particularly on widows' benefit, without consulting you. Nonetheless, a number of issues remain on which we would welcome your guidance.

As debates in the House have made clear, the principal issue on which we need your advice is the question of the so-called 'balance of contributions', that is the balance between the Exchequer and Member contributions.

The PCPF is a final salary scheme with the Member contribution determined on the basis necessary to fund benefits over the long term, leaving aside surpluses and deficits. Under section 3 of the Parliamentary and other Pensions Act 1987, the Government Actuary's Department (GAD), on the basis of the cost of known benefits, estimates the total contributions necessary to fund it in the long term (the total standard contribution). Since the Member contribution is fixed this yields the Exchequer contribution as a residual. Taking account of the performance of the Fund, the GAD then adjusts the Exchequer contribution to produce the rate actually paid. The effect is that the Exchequer funds deficits but, where there is a surplus, enjoys a contributions holiday. The financing system is in other words symmetrical.

The Trustees of the PCPF, amongst others, take the view that the character of the scheme in which the Exchequer makes contributions in this way—taking the benefit of surpluses and making good any deficits—should be changed. Their preference would be for a system which held a fixed relationship between the Exchequer and Member contribution—say in the ratio of 5:3 or 60:40. To match the current system, such a system would need to be symmetrical with regard to both surpluses and deficits, implying that the Member and Exchequer contributions would move up or down together according to the state of the Fund.

We would therefore welcome your views on the short and long term financing arrangements of the scheme and in particular what role the GAD should play. I intend that your report be debated and that the eventual government decisions on it should establish a definitive position on this issue for some considerable time to come.

On scheme benefits, as I have mentioned, we have decided to improve widows' and widowers' pensions from half rate to $\frac{3}{8}$rate in response to the Trustees' request for an increase to $\frac{1}{3}$, in the light of the debate in the House on 17 January 1990. In consultation with the Trustees the Government concluded that this was the appropriate response to Members' immediate concerns over the surplus in the Fund and the level of Exchequer contributions. I have made it clear that when there is no longer any surplus in the Fund Members' contributions will have to rise to meet the cost of this new level of benefit. This should not influence you in determining the Government's policy towards the financing of the Fund nor to what we consider the proper use of surpluses, generally. It was a specific action to meet a specific need.

During the 17 January 1990 debate, however, Members also raised the question of the accrual rate. You last looked at this in 1983 when you recommended an improvement in the accrual rate from $\frac{1}{60}$ to $\frac{1}{50}$. I would be grateful for your views on whether a further improvement is justified and if so on the implications for contributions.

I ought also to record some feeling among the Trustees and other Members that you should take account of experience in other Parliamentary schemes, both Commonwealth and European. Given the timescale, this might well need to be covered in a separate, subsequent Report.

I would like to consider and debate your report as soon as is practically possible so that any necessary changes can be implemented speedily. (As you will see, the Bill includes a power to make such changes by secondary legislation). So it would be of great assistance if you could report by this April.

I would like to conclude by thanking the Review Body for its last report under the chairmanship of Lord Plowden and thank you in advance for agreeing to examine these complex matters. The Trustees of the Parliamentary Pensions Scheme will join me, I am sure, when I say that we are fortunate to being able to call on the Review Body's objectivity in assisting our consideration of these difficult issues."

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Livestock Farmers

2. Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to assist small livestock farmers in the south-west who are in difficulties.

Mr. Gummer: All livestock farms, including those family farms, in the south-west to which my hon. Friend refers, benefit from a wide range of Government support measures which are forecast to cost some £815 million in 1990-91.

Set-aside Scheme

15. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the amount of money spent in 1990 on the set-aside scheme.

Mr. Curry: Payments under the set-aside scheme are made one year in arrears. In the 1990-91 financial year £17·5 million has been allocated to cover payments to farmers who joined the scheme in 1988 and 1989.

Oil Prices

16. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effects in the British farming industry of the rise in oil prices, since August 1990.

Mr. Gummer: Information on the cost of farm inputs, including fuel and oils, is published in table 6.1 of "Agriculture in the United Kingdom: 1990", which is now available in the Vote Office.

Brogdale Horticultural Research Station

17. Mr. Moate: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about progress towards finalising the sale of the Brogdale horticultural research station and the future arrangement for the national fruit collections.

Mr. Curry: The Department is in negotiation on the terms of sale of the Brogdale site.

The Government will continue to fund the national fruit collection at Brogdale and it is intended that arrangements for its management will be secured by a contract between the Ministry, the Brogdale Horticultural Trust and Wye college.

Ramblers Association

18. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Ramblers Association to discuss the future of access in the countryside: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My noble Friend the Minister of State met officials of the Ramblers Association on 3 May last year when a number of matters of mutual interest were discussed.

Common Agricultural Policy

19. Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for the reform of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire).

Sheep Dip

20. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has made an estimate of the number of farmers using alternatives to organophosphorous sheep dips.

Mr. Maclean: One alternative to an organophosphorous sheep dip product is currently licensed under the Medicines Act. No estimate is available of how many farmers use it.

Food Safety

21. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Consumers Association to discuss food safety.

Mr. Maclean: Representatives of the Consumers Association were present on 31 October 1990 at the third periodic meeting between my right hon. Friend and the office holders of consumer organisations.

The next meeting is planned for 20 February.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Food Advisory Committee last met to discuss food safety.

Mr. Maclean: At their meeting on 6 December 1990 the FAC continued its review of food labelling and considered also the safety of and need for two specific food additives.

Fishermen's Incomes

22. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to safeguard the future incomes of British fishermen.

Mr. Curry: At the Council of Fisheries Ministers in December we secured the best possible quota allowances for our fishermen for 1991 consistent with maintenance of the stocks. We are considering further technical measures to safeguard those stocks.

Fisheries Council

23. Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the latest Fisheries Council.

Mr. Gummer: At the December Council of Fisheries Ministers, overall the United Kingdom secured a good package consistent with conservation of the stocks and which should benefit catchers, processors and consumers.

National Farmers Union

24. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the National Farmers Union to discuss farming matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I frequently meet representatives of the farming unions to discuss matters of interest to the industry.

Fishing Industry

25. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends to meet representatives of the fishing industry to discuss prospects for 1991.

Mr. Curry: I meet the industry frequently during the course of the year.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to increase the level of payments to farmers in the south downs under the environmentally sensitive area scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: ESA payments were reviewed last month and I concluded that they were still broadly at the right levels. Farmers will, however, benefit from a single annual payment rather than in two instalments. I will be reviewing the whole scheme this year on the basis of an evaluation of its environmental and economic impact and this will determine the way forward.

Animal Exports

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the export of farm animals on the hoof through the proposed Euro tunnel to mainland Europe.

Mr. Maclean: This Department remains ready to provide advice and to consider the practicability of detailed proposals to transport farm livestock through the tunnel. Were such traffic to be contemplated there would, of course, need to be stringent safeguards to protect the welfare of the animals in relation, for example, to ventilation and temperature.

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact on the farming industry which would result from a ban on live exports.

Mr. Maclean: There is no point in carrying out such an assessment, as a ban on the export of animals would contravene the treaty of Rome and would not therefore be proposed or permitted.

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made towards his goal of retaining the minimum values order in respect of exports of horses and ponies.

Mr. Maclean: There have been no negotiations on the proposed Community regulation on the protection of animals during transport since February 1990. When negotiations resume we will continue to press for the retention of measures to prevent the export of horses and ponies for slaughter.

Meat Production

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentages of (a) cattle, (b) sheep and (c) pigs are (i) exported live for slaughter,

(ii) exported as carcases and (iii) consumed within the United Kingdom; and if he will give the most recent figures available for each category.

Mr. Curry: The information is in the table.

The following table gives information both in tonnage and percentage terms for the first three quarters of 1990 (latest available).

January to September 1990

	Beef and Veal		Mutton and Lamb		Pork, Bacon and Ham
	Thousand tonnes (dressed carcase weight)	Percentage of United Kingdom home-fed production	Thousand tonnes (dressed carcase weight)	Percentage of United Kingdom home-fed production	Thousand tonnes (dressed carcase weight)	Percentage of United Kingdom home-fed production
1. Live exports[1]	10·8	1·5	15·3	5·5	6·0	0·9
2. Carcase exports	81·6	11·5	54·2	19·4	41·2	5·9
3. Remaining amounts available for consumption in the United Kingdom[2]	709·7	87·0	279·9	75·1	699·4	93·2

[1] Total live exports (other than pure-bred). A split is not available between animals exported for immediate slaughter and animals exported for further fattening.

[2] Home-fed production minus exports. Includes quantities sold into intervention.

DEFENCE

United States Special Forces

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the United Kingdom location of the United States armed forces special forces operational base.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF Woodbridge.

RAF Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement as to what role RAF Finningley will undertake if the Gulf dispute develops into armed conflict.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF Finningley's role as a flying training station is unaffected by current operations in the Gulf.

Mustard Gas

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been undertaken to assess the lethal potency of mustard gas used in hot dry climates compared with cooler wetter climates.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since the use of mustard gas in the first world war, many nations have conducted studies. Work was done in the second world war to assess the hazard presented by mustard in a variety of climatic conditions. The material has been continuously studied at the chemical defence establishment at Porton Down to ensure that the armed forces are provided with effective protective measures. The United Kingdom abandoned its chemical weapons capability in the late 1950s and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has made it clear that we would take the gravest view of any Iraqi attack using chemical weapons.

Army Exercises

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the United Kingdom has ever given permission for non-United Kingdom nationals to participate in Army exercises or operations in Northern Ireland since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All members of the regular Army, regardless of nationality, are liable to serve in Northern Ireland. Members of foreign armed forces serving in exchange posts do not serve in Northern Ireland, nor do foreign units take part in operations or training there.

Air Defence Radar

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the contract for the data processing network for air defence radar contains penalty clauses.

Mr. Alan Clark: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the contract for the integrated command and control system for the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment.

In line with normal Ministry of Defence practice, this contract does not include penalty clauses, which are not enforceable in English law.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has set targets for the reduction in consumption of energy, with a system of energy managers and wardens to help achieve these. In addition, investment has been made in "spend to save" measures, on items such as automatic lighting controls. In the future MOD will continue to set standards and to invest in energy-efficient measures such as combined heat and power (CHP) schemes. Although in the last financial year MOD continued to make savings in energy consumption, price alterations led to an increase in expenditure of £14·7 million or 8·3 per cent.

Gulf Forces

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the contribution from each EEC country to the coalition forces in the Gulf to date (a) in manpower, (b) in aircraft, tanks and artillery and other equipment, (c) in financial support, (d) in spares and (e) others; and what steps are being taken to increase the Community countries' support in line with that of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At the outbreak of hostilities on 16 January, the United Kingdom had some 35,000 service personnel in the Gulf. Of the other EC member states, France has committed naval, land and air forces; Italy, naval and air forces; Belgium, Denmark, Greece, the Netherlands and Spain have sent naval vessels. In addition the United Kingdom has received assistance from a number of EC countries, including: NBC reconnaissance vehicles from Germany; ammunition from the Netherlands and Germany, and transport from Germany, Belgium, Spain and Portugal. Belgium and Denmark have also offered medical support. We will be discussing with our allies ways in which they might help meet any future needs.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is intended that all members of Her Majesty's armed forces based in the Gulf should have been inoculated against hepatitis A; and how many have been.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Personnel are given immunoglobin where it is judged necessary.

Public Relations

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the terms of the contract for public relations given to Mr. Peter Gummer of Shandwick.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have passed this question to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, who will reply shortly.

HMS Ark Royal

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requests have been made to him by the United States Government for the transfer of HMS Ark Royal from NATO exercises to an active role in the Gulf; and what was his response.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have regular discussions with our United States allies on our contribution to the coalition forces in the Gulf, but no decision has been taken to deploy a Royal Navy carrier group to the region.

"Options for Change"

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the changes to be made in the Army's logistic support under "Options for Change."

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Work is still continuing in a number of areas to determine the size and shape of the Army's logistic support under "Options for Change". However, as the first stage in this process, it has been decided to close the following establishments with effect from the dates shown in the table.

	Date
Moenchengladbach
37 Rhine workshops	31 March 1992
Recklinghausen
Forward vehicle depot	30 September 1991
Krefeld
232 mobile civilian engineer group	30 September 1991
Viersen
Ordnance services and associated supply depot	31 March 1992
Willich
40 Army engineer support group	31 March 1992
64 (RCZ) workshop	31 March 1992
Antwerp
Ordnance depot and other units at Antwerp station	31 March 1992

These plans take full account of the need to maintain effective support for our operations in the Gulf. Consultations on the closures have taken place with the appropriate German and Belgium authorities and NATO has been informed.

Royal Navy (Women)

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has plans to widen further the opportunities for the employment of women in the Royal Navy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We intend to widen the employment of women as aircrew to enable them to undertake aviation roles in the Royal Navy. Women will be employed initially as pilots, observers and aircrewmen in Sea King anti-submarine warfare and airborne early warning and Lynx anti-submarine and anti-surface warfare helicopters. Employment in the Sea Harriers and Commando helicopters will follow at a later stage. We intend to begin considering women for recruitment as aircrew immediately and also to seek volunteers from within the WRNS.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools, Cumbria

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much extra money would be available in the current year to each secondary school in Kendal, Sedbergh, Kirkby Stephen, Windermere, Milnthorpe, Kirkby Lonsdale, Cartmel and Coniston, in Cumbria, if the local education authority delegated 85 per cent. of its potential schools budget to the nine schools.

Mr. Fallon: As stated in my reply to my right hon. Friend on 20 December 1990 at col. 274, Cumbria is delegating 82·53 per cent. of its potential schools budget in this financial year. If the LEA were to delegate more services to meet the proposed new requirement of 85 per cent., the actual distribution to schools of the additional resources would depend on which services were delegated and how the expenditure on each service was allocated between the primary and secondary sectors. If Cumbria were to allocate these resources pro rata to the existing budget distribution between primary and secondary schools, a secondary school would receive on average an extra £34,000.

Awards Regulations

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the reason for the length of the period of notice given to county councils in August 1990 in respect of changes to the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations; if he will make it his policy in future to give longer notice; what assessment he has made of the impact of these changes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is my right hon. and learned Friend's policy to give as much notice as practicable to local education authorities of the content of the annual Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations for which he intends to seek Parliament's approval.

Local education authorities were informed of the main rates of student grant and the parental contribution scales proposed for academic year 1990-91 by an official circular letter in January 1990. Further letters and announcements between then and August notified them of the supplementary grant rates, revised arrangements for EC students and for the termly payment of tuition fees, and other mainly technical changes. The current regulations were made by SI 1990 No. 1628 on 7 August 1990 and came into force on 1 September 1990.

As usual, there had been extensive consultation with the local authority associations and others, from October 1989 onwards, about various planned changes. Most authorities should therefore have had early warning of these. The Department continues to keep awards arrangements under regular review, in consultation with the local authority associations and others.

Physical Education

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the sporting activities and aspects of physical education which will make up his Department's proposed flexible definition of physical education at key stage 4 in the national curriculum.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to publish his statutory proposals for physical education in the national curriculum later this year. Meanwhile he intends to offer guidance on the question raised by the hon. Member in his reply to the letter from the chairman of the national curriculum physical education working group. This correspondence will be published with the working group's interim report. I shall send the hon. Member a copy.

Nursery Classes

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance he has given in relationship to primary schools who opt for grant-maintained status who then wish to establish a nursery class; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: If a primary school which had acquired grant-maintained status wanted subsequently to propose a significant change in its character by the establishment of a nursery class, the governing body would be required to publish proposals for that purpose under section 89 of the Education Reform Act 1988. The Department's circular No. 10/88 stated that the Secretary of State would not normally approve proposals for a change of character at a school within five years of its acquiring grant-maintained status.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether money allocated for a nursery class in a grant-maintained primary school will not be available for alternative use should the nursery class close.

Mr. Eggar: Funding is related to pupil numbers. If a nursery class were to close, and a result the school reduced its overall pupil numbers, its grant would fall.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what stage has been reached in the review of school premises regulations covering playing field provision at state schools; when this review will be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: We are shortly to begin the public consultation stage of the review which is covering all aspects of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 including playing field provision. The results of the review are likely to be available towards the end of next year.

A-levels

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the number of students taking A-level examinations in (a) schools and (b) further education colleges in 1979-80, 1983-84 and the latest available figures.

Mr. Eggar: For the academic years in question and for 1988-89, the total numbers of school leavers and home full-time students in further education colleges taking A-level examinations were as follows:

Thousands

	1979-80	1983-84	1988-89[1]
School leavers	131·55	145·93	138·63
FE students	31·70	36·00	34·76
As percentage of the relevant population
School leavers	17·3	18·7	19·1
FE students	4·2	4·6	4·8

[1] Including AS examinations paired to equate to an A-level.

School Premises

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 514, by what date his Department intends to introduce amendments to section 42 of the Education Act 1986 to remove disincentives for third parties seeking to invest in dual-use projects.

Mr. Fallon: The amendment of section 42 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 is being considered for inclusion in the legislative programme at the earliest possible opportunity. In the meantime it remains our policy to encourage dual-use arrangements for the benefit of the whole community.

Pupil Assessment

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what local arrangements he envisages for administering the assessments of 14-year-olds.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following advice from the School Examinations and Assessment Council (SEAC), the Secretary of State for Wales and I have decided that, subject to the negotiation of appropriate contracts, the local oversight of consistent and rigorous assessment arrangements for pupils aged 14 across all schools under the national curriculum should rest with the examining bodies which certify assessments at age 16. Assigning responsibility for auditing quality to the examining bodies will help to ensure consistency of standards between the testing of 14-year-olds and the GCSE examination, and across LEA-maintained, grant-maintained and non-maintained schools alike.

In line with LEAs' duty under section 10 of the Education Reform Act to secure the implementation of the national curriculum in the schools they maintain, the Government will look to authorities to secure that their schools implement the assessment arrangements for 14-year-olds. The same duty will lie with the governors in grant-maintained schools. This will involve assuming responsibility for the professional development of the teachers making the assessments; supporting schools, where necessary, with help and guidance; and taking steps to put matters right in any schools where assessment standards slip.

The Secretary of State for Wales and I have asked SEAC to enter into discussions with the examining bodies, LEAs and representatives of other schools concerned to consider the practicalities of local assessment arrangements for 14-year-olds based on this division of responsibilities, and to let us have further advice in March.

We have also signalled to SEAC that, in the interests of rigorous and manageable assessment, the end of key stage tests which contribute to the overall assessments of 14-year-olds, pupils should take the form of written terminal examinations except where the nature of the subject matter can clearly be shown to justify some element of practical or project work.

I am placing copies of SEAC's advice and of my reply in the Libraries of both Houses.

ENERGY

Kuwaiti Oil Wells

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of Kuwait's oil production comes from wells that (a) lie within 50 miles of the coast, (b) lie within 20 miles of the coast, (c) lie within 10 miles of the coast and (d) are found offshore.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the 1990 International Petroleum Encyclopaedia.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what quantity of (a) low and (b) intermediate-level nuclear waste has been (i) transferred from and (ii) transferred to Sellafield from sites within the United Kingdom for each year since 1979; and if he will list, for (a) and (b) above, the sites concerned.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Details of the quantities of radioactive waste at nuclear sites in the United Kingdom are contained in the United Kingdom radioactive waste inventory published jointly by the Department of the Environment and United Kingdom Nirex Ltd., copies of which are in the Library of the House. Movements of waste between sites are management matters for the site operators, who must comply with the requirements of the regulatory authorities.

Refuse-derived Fuel

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action his Department is taking to encourage the use of refined refuse-derived fuel by the small-scale off-site user.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave him on 14 January at columns 447-48, and to the answer that I gave him today in connection with current refuse-derived fuel research and development projects. My Department is considering all of the possible uses for refuse-derived fuels, outside the domestic sector.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the answer of 14 January, Official Report, columns 447-48, what are his criteria for defining economically viable and environmentally acceptable.

Mr. Moynihan: Within my Department's renewables programme an economically viable technology is one where the rate of return offered to an investor is adequate to promote the investment, taking into account the particular circumstances of the market sector concerned.

The environmental acceptability of renewable energy resources is being considered within the research and development programme undertaken by my Department. Renewable energy will be developed only if it can meet the various environmental standards appropriate for the activity concerned. Those technologies which can meet such standards are environmentally acceptable.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the 12 refuse-derived fuels research and development projects currently operating; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The 12 current refuse-derived fuel research and development projects are as follows:

1. Refuse-derived fuel combustion trials.
2. Assessment of the suitability of a modified chain grate stoker shell boiler for the combustion of RDF pellets.
3. Fundamental studies into RDF combustion.
4. Development of the chain grate stoker shell boiler.
5. Development of existing systems for RDF combustion.
6. RDF combustion programme consultancy service.
7. Field trial on a boiler fitted with a gas scrubber.
8. Chain grate stoker and wet scrubber—monitoring.
9. Co-firing of RDF with coal in a large PF boiler.
10. RDF combustion—a technoeconomic feasibility study.
11. An assessment of RDF processing costs.
12. Storage and handling of RDF.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) of 19 December 1990, Official Report, columns 162-63, if he will make it his policy to introduce a separate category of bio-fuels, apart from the generic heading of waste incineration, to cover such items as refined refuse-derived fuels.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend will determine the technology bands to be included in the 1991 Renewables Order at a later stage, in the light of the statutory consultations.

Killingholme Power Station

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he intends to give planning permission to PowerGen and National Power to construct a lagoon to provide cooling water for the proposed combined cycle gas turbine developments at Killingholme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: If either company wishes to construct such a lagoon they will need to apply for the Secretary of State's consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989. When granting such a consent he may also give a direction that planning permission be deemed to be granted under section 90(2) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990.

No application for consent under section 36 to construct such a lagoon has been received.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Dr. Malde Mepa Moduadia

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to reach a decision on whether he will take over the case of Dr. Malde Mepa Moduadia; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has a duty to represent the prosecution in the appeal of Dr. Malde Mepa Moduadia. Counsel has been instructed to represent the Director.

TRANSPORT

Inflammable Cargoes

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of road accidents in 1988, 1989 and 1990 involving vehicles carrying inflammable cargoes; and if he will list the number of fatalities and injuries as a result of these accidents.

Mr. Chope: The Department collects information only on road accidents involving personal injury. The standard report form, STATS19, completed by the police for these accidents does not include information on cargoes carried by the vehicles involved.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Industrial Injuries Benefit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, for both of his local department offices in Greenock and Port Glasgow how many claims for industrial injuries disablement benefit were lodged during each of the past six years; how many had their claims accepted; and what has been the total amount paid out in such benefits.

Mr. Scott: Figures relating to the number of claims accepted and the amount paid in benefit are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, as could figures for the number of claims made at Greenock before April 1988. Such information as is available is in the table.

Claims received

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the acquisition and ownership of consumer goods by pensioners in 1974, 1979 and 1990.

Miss Widdecombe [pursuant to her reply, 11 December 1990, column 379]: The following information was incorrect:

Percentage of pensioner households with goods

Goods	1974
Telephone	32·0

The correct information is as follows:

Percentage of pensioner households with goods

ENVIRONMENT

Barkley Thorpe

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received his Department's inspectors' report into the Barkley Thorpe site in Leicester.

Mr. Yeo: The inquiry has been arranged for 23 July and is expected to last for seven days. The inspector's report will be submitted as soon as possible after the inquiry has closed.

Urban Regeneration Grant

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the number of jobs created under the urban regeneration grant for each year since 1987;

(2) what was the amount of public money made available from his Department for each year since 1987, under the urban regeneration grant.

Mr. Portillo: The amounts of urban regeneration grant approved in each financial year from the introduction of urban regeneration grant in 1986 to its replacement by city grant in May 1988 were as shown in the table. These approvals in total, including projects not yet completed, are expected to provide 4,200 jobs in inner city areas.

Year	£ million
1987-88	12·163
1988-89	17·000
TOTAL	29·163

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the number of jobs created under the urban development grant, for each year since 1982;

(2) what was the amount of public money made available for the urban development grant for each year since 1982.

Mr. Portillo: The amounts of urban development grant approved in each financial year from the introduction of UDG in October 1982 to its replacement by city grant in May 1988 were as shown in the table. These approvals in total, including projects not yet completed, are expected to provide over 27,000 jobs in inner city areas.

Year	£ million
1982-83	0·686
1983-84	35·173

Council House Sales

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all councils' sales of council houses since 1981, in the order of the number of houses sold as a percentage of the opening stock in 1981.

Mr. Yeo: Twelve local authorities have so far transferred their entire housing stock to a housing association or private company: Chiltern, Sevenoaks, Newbury, Swale, Broadland, North Bedfordshire, Medina, Rochester upon Medway, South Wight, Mid Sussex, East Dorset, and Tonbridge and Malling. A number of other local authorities are in the process of similar transfers. The available information on sales, giving total sales for each local authority for each financial year since 1979-80 and percentages, is placed in the Library each quarter. The tables showing available information to June 1990 were placed in the Library on 29 November 1990. An updated version of the table giving available information to September 1990 will be placed in the Library shortly.

Planning Procedures

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce legislation making it a criminal offence to commence building without planning permission.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Greening Street Playing Field

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a request from the London residuary body to dispose of the Greening street SE2 playing field to the London borough of Greenwich; and when he expects to give his approval.

Mr. Key: Yes. Before the application can be considered further information is being sought from the London residuary body.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what restrictions he is considering for the use of schedule A category products in incineration.

Mr. Baldry: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the regulations that the Department is preparing to prescribe processes and substances for control under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. It is not intended in the regulations to restrict the substances for incineration. Any restriction on the way products are incinerated will be described in guidance which is still being drafted.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will consider using European Community guidelines as a basis for a new categorisation of refuse-derived compost other than industrial waste;

(2) what steps his Department is taking to encourage the private sector and others to develop composting facilities for the processing of the vegetable content from the domestic wastes stream; and how such residues will be defined or classed;

(3) whether recycled products produced from a combination of separate primary products will have their own primary status or be assigned the status of their main components for the purposes of statutory environmental controls.

Mr. Tony Baldry My Department is spending about £140,000 in this financial year on research into the composting of domestic waste and uses for the end product. Householders have been encouraged to start compost heaps in their gardens. Any classification of compost will depend on its content and proposed use.

Refuse-derived Fuel

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reconsider the classification of refined refuse-derived fuel with a view to removing it from a schedule A category base where levels of sulphur chloride and ash fall below emissions currently acceptable from fuels.

Mr. Baldry: The Department is considering the responses to the consultation on the draft regulations which prescribe processes and substances for control under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The classification of the manufacture and burning of refuse-derived fuel is currently being reviewed.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what research has been conducted into links between refuse-derived fuel combustion and river pollution; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is taking to accommodate the development of markets for refuse-derived fuel.

Mr. Baldry: Development of markets for refuse-derived fuel is a matter for the manufacturers. No specific research has been conducted of the type described.

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average length of time between the notice of decision to call in the planning application and the date of the commencement of the public inquiry in 19 cases of London call-ins since 1987 listed in his reply to the hon. Member for Twickenham on 22 October 1990, Official Report, columns 37-38.

Sir George Young: The time between call-in and inquiry in those cases varied between four and 39 weeks, the average being just under 25 weeks.

River Severn

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in the last year on problems of flooding and pollution along the River Severn.

Mr. Baldry: In the last year the Department received four representations, and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food two representations, about the problems of pollution and flooding respectively, along the River Severn.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidelines to ensure that the true through-life costs of landfill sites are calculated when tenders for such sites are assessed by local authorities and others who have a duty of care under the Environmental Protection Act.

Mr. Baldry: Yes. Under the Environmental Protection Act, local waste regulation authorities will be empowered to impose conditions in waste site licences governing the period after the deposit of waste has ceased. My Department will issue advice to authorities, which they will be statutorily obliged to heed, that they should set such conditions requiring the operator to exercise and pay for continuing pollution control until the authority certifies that the site is safe. It is for site operators to price their disposal services so as to recover the long term costs of such pollution control. This licensing system will apply equally to landfill sites whether operated by local authority companies or the private sector. It will be for waste disposal authorities letting contracts for the disposal of their waste to ensure that all tenders include the costs of compliance with licence conditions and other statutory responsibilities.

Marks and Spencer Store, Twickenham

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in respect of the public inquiry due to commence on 5 February into the planning application for a Marks and Spencer foodstore at the River Thames embankment, Twickenham, if he will state on what date any informal or formal indication, whether by telephone, orally or in writing, was first provided by his Department to Marks and Spencer plc or Richmond-upon-Thames borough council as to the probable date of the inquiry; and on what dates a similar indication was first given to any known objector to the application.

Sir George Young: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for amending building regulations to take account of energy efficiency factors.

Mr. Yeo: The building regulations in England and Wales have contained specific requirements for the conservation of fuel and power since 1979. Revised requirements came into force on 1 April last year. These new provisions should achieve a saving of about 20 per cent. in energy requirements for space and water heating compared with buildings constructed to the former standards. The way in which the new requirements operate in practice will be monitored by the building research establishment as a basis for examining how the provisions might be further strengthened.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what quantity of (a) low and (b) intermediate-level nuclear waste is at Sellafield awaiting disposal or transfer to Scotland at present.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

Details of the quantities of radioactive waste at nuclear sites in the United Kingdom are contained in the United Kingdom radioactive waste inventory published jointly by the Department of the Environment and UK Nirex Ltd. copies of which are in the Library of the House.

The only radioactive wastes stored at Sellafield (and Windscale Laboratories) which at present may be subject to transfer to Scotland are wastes which are the reponsibility of AEA Technology and which have arisen from work in support of AEA Technology's fast reactor programme. It is a management matter for AEA Technology to determine the appropriate storage and disposal arrangements for these wastes, with the approval of the regulatory authorities.

Wessex Water

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what date Wessex Water will cease the dumping of sewage sludge into the Bristol channel; and what quantity was disposed of by this method in the latest two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

The sea disposal of sewage sludge is to be terminated as soon as possible, and by 31 December 1998 at the latest. Wessex Water is preparing plans to cease sea disposal by the end of 1993. The amount of sewage sludge deposited by Wessex Water in the last two years for which figures are available is as follows:

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the reasons for the delay in the payment of hill livestock compensatory allowances; if he will arrange for early part-payments of hill livestock compensatory allowances; and when he expects to release the full value of hill livestock compensatory allowances.

Mr. Hanley: The Government are not yet in a position to announce the arrangements for payment of hill livestock compensatory allowances in 1991. This is because problems have arisen over the detailed implementation of a new EC ceiling on payments of 1·4 livestock units per hectare. Claim forms and explanatory leaflets will be issued to producers as quickly as possible once these problems have been resolved. It is not possible to be precise when payments will be made but the Government appreciates the importance of making HLCA payments in the early part of the year and every effort will be made to ensure that payments commence quickly.

Farming

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many dairy farms there are in Northern Ireland; and how many of these farms produce less than 200,000 litres of milk per year.

Mr. Hanley: In June 1989 there were 6,879 dairy farms in Northern Ireland; 4,984 produce less than 200,000 litres.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many farms produce cereals in Northern Ireland; and how many of these farms cultivate fewer than 75 acres of cereals.

Mr. Hanley: The June 1990 agriculture census indicates 5,698 farms in Northern Ireland where cereals were grown, of which 5,439 grew less than 30 hectares (74·1).

Fallen Animals

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the health and environmental implications of the decision by animal by-product plants not to accept diseased and fallen animals for disposal; and what measures he proposes to provide alternative means for disposal of such animals in Fermanagh and South Tyrone.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 20 December 1990]: On 21 January I met the hon. Gentleman and a committee representative of the district councils in Northern Ireland to discuss the disposal of fallen animals. The meeting was constructive and encouraging with a full and frank exchange of views.

I will be continuing discussions with one of the plants involved in rendering animal by-products on proposals that they have put forward for a long-term solution to the problem.

I will continue to seek a short-term solution, but until rendering recommences in the interests of all in Northern Ireland, I hope and expect farmers to dispose of their fallen stock appropriately as is their responsibility.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. Leigh: In its contracts with business the Department includes energy efficiency as one of the subjects that it encourages firms to address in developing a comprehensive approach to environmental management.

On energy usage directly under the Department's control, the Department has appointed energy managers in all its main establishments. They are undertaking energy audits and preparing action plans in pursuit of the target to reduce energy usage by 15 per cent. in the next five years. The Department has identified areas where draught proofing and insulation could reduce heat loss and has implemented a considerable amount of remedial action. Conventional lighting has been replaced by energy conservation fittings. The efficiency and the time of operation of heating and air conditioning plant have been reviewed with a view to reducing energy usage and operating times while maintaining an acceptable environment. These programmes will continue in the future. In addition, some inefficient boilers are being replaced and building energy management systems are being updated in main buildings.

On savings achieved, responsibility for energy efficiency has until recently been shared between Department of Environment Property Holdings and the Department of Trade and Industry and the information has not been collected in the form requested. It will be available in future years.

Levitt Group

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date he became aware of problems in the Levitt group.

Mr. Redwood: It is not the Department's practice to give details of individual companies.

Liquidations

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the number of glazing companies that have gone into liquidation in each of the last three years.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not available.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what restrictions exist on directors of recently liquidated companies setting up business and trading while previous company debts remain unpaid.

Mr. Redwood: There are provisions under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 (CDDA 1986) which enable the Secretary of State to make applications in the civil courts as regards directors whose conduct in liquidations has been reported upon.

There are also provisions under section 216 of the Insolvency Act 1986 whereby, with some exceptions, a director of a company which has gone into insolvent liquidation may not be involved with another with the same or a similar name within five years of the failure of the first company.

Biotechnology

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 20 December 1990, on the progress of the EC discussions on the generally accepted biological meaning of the expression "variety" in relation to the EC proposal in relation to biotechnological inventions.

Mr. Leigh: The draft EC directive on the legal protection of biotechnological inventions excludes both plant and animal varieties from patentability. For plants, this exclusion will probably be interpreted in accordance with a definition expected to be introduced into the international convention for the protection of new varieties of plants (UPOV convention) when it is revised at a diplomatic conference to be held in March. For animals, there is no generally accepted biological meaning of the expression "variety" and progress in determining the scope of the exclusion is slow. The next meeting to discuss the draft directive will probably be in April; however, it may be that the exclusion of animal varieties will not be comprehensively discussed until a final decision has been reached by the European patent office on an application which is presently before it for a method of producing transgenic animals.

British Technology Group

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the fee agreed with Price Waterhouse for advising on the sale of British Technology Group.

Mr. Lilley: The total costs of the proposed privatisation of the British technology group including the fees payable to Price Waterhouse, will be made available to Parliament after the privatisation.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library the corporate plan for British Technology Group.

Mr. Lilley: The corporate plan is a confidential management document containing commercially sensitive information. However, copies of the annual reports and accounts of the National Enterprise Board and the National Research Development Corporation are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the budget for publishing or advertising of the British Technology Group sale.

Mr. Lilley: The costs for publicity or advertising of the proposed British Technology Group sale will arise in the 1991-92 financial year, estimates for which will shortly be presented to Parliament.

It is proposed that the Department's costs will be met from within the Department's vote.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the cost of the Coopers and Lybrand report on British Technology Group.

Mr. Lilley: It is not the normal practice of my Department to disclose the costs of individual consultancies.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library the Coopers and Lybrand report on British Technology Group.

Mr. Lilley: This report was prepared in 1988 to advise my Department on the feasibility and mechanics of privatising the British Technology Group. It contains information which is confidential and commercially sensitive and it is therefore not for wider circulation.

Advisers' Fees

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the cost of advisers' fees in (a) the sale of Rover, (b) the sale of Girobank and (c) the sale of British Telecom.

Mr. Lilley: The fees paid to Government advisers for the sale of Rover Group were £270,229; and for British Telecommunications the figure was £12 million. The fees paid for advice to Government on the sale of Girobank are subject to commercial confidentiality.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for each year since 1979 the number of bankruptcies of private care homes.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 24 January 1991]: This information is not available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for each year since 1979 the number of bankruptcies of private nursing homes.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 24 January 1991]: This information is not available.

Aerogrammes

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements are being made to ensure the availability of aerogrammes at post offices for the use of families of service men abroad.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 January 1991]: This is a joint operational matter for the Post Office and for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. However, following the question raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) in the House on Wednesday 23 January at column 312, my Department has been in touch with both the Post Office and the Ministry of Defence. I understand that because of a sudden upsurge in demand for them, stocks of free forces aerogrammes have been exhausted in some isolated areas. However, the Ministry of Defence has now arranged for substantial further supplies to be made available to the Post Office, which is distributing them to areas of shortage as a matter of urgency.

WALES

Community Charge

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list all the communities in Wales which will benefit from the new community charge reduction scheme which he is introducing in 1991-92; and if he will indicate those communities which did not previously qualify for transitional relief;

(2) if he will estimate the amount of community charge reduction in 1991-92 for each of the local councils in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on the communities benefiting from the reduced community charges under the transitional relief scheme and/or the community charge reduction scheme are given in the following table. Compared with 1990-91 the amount made available by the Government for reductions in community charges in Wales has been increased by £42 million to £62 million; the number of qualifying communities has increased from 323 to 612 and the number of chargepayers who are expected to benefit has increased from around 750,000 to around 1·4 million out of a total of 2·1 million.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. David Hunt: My predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Walker) published a strategic plan for the encouragement of energy efficiency in May 1989. Copies were placed in the Library of the House. Since then the Energy Efficiency Office in the Welsh Office has carried out a vigorous programme of visiting to industrial and commercial organisations and organised 40 seminars to promote tried and tested methods of efficiently reducing energy use.

Following the publications of the White Paper, "This Common Inheritance", these efforts are being intensified in Wales and throughout the United Kingdom and will be overseen by a ministerial committee chaired by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State is a member of the committee.

Figures for the Welsh Office's own energy expenditure in 1989-90 and 1990-91 are not available on a directly comparable basis because of the transfer of responsibility for bill paying from Property Services Agency to Welsh Office with effect from 1 April 1990.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce a similar programme to the energy efficiency demonstration programme scheduled to begin in England in April.

Mr. David Hunt: There are no plans to earmark the substantial resources available for local authority renovation in 1991-92 for this specific purpose. Local authorities in Wales have already made very considerable progress in improving the energy efficiency of their stock and it will be for them to decide what priority to accord further energy efficiency measures.

Farmers (Oil Prices)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effects in the farming industry in Wales of the rise in oil prices since August 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The specific effects of oil price changes since August on farm incomes cannot be separately calculated for Wales. However, changes in oil prices and other energy based inputs are automatically taken into account in the assessment of farming incomes which in turn provide the background for decisions on livestock support.

NATIONAL FINANCE

National Insurance

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of changing the national insurance threshold into a tax allowance in 1991-92.

Mr. Maude: The estimated full year cost of abolishing the charge on the first £52 per week of earnings for those employees earning above the lower earnings limit would be about £1·1 billion for 1991-92.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what specific measures Her Majesty's Treasury has taken to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill Her Majesty's Treasury's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: On the measures taken and to be taken to promote energy efficiency within Her Majesty's Treasury, I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 28 June 1990 at column 291. As to associated financial savings, for financial year 1990-91 it is estimated that the department will reduce its total energy bill by approximately £5,000 or 2 per cent. of its 1989-90 spend.

Income Tax

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive the Inland Revenue's review of the tax problems experienced by temporary office staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Although I have not asked the Inland Revenue to review the taxation of temporary office staff, the Department is considering whether improvements may be possible to alleviate problems in the operation of PAYE which can be experienced by agency workers, agencies and the Inland Revenue. These problems stem from the difficulty of maintaining cumulation for employees who undertake a number of short-term engagements in quick succession. There are no easy solutions but the Revenue will be taking a number of steps to try to improve matters. These will include publicity emphasising the need for timely provision of national insurance numbers; and seeking better liaison between tax offices and agencies.

Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the change in Treasury income during the 1991-92 financial year resulting from the introduction of an alternative minimum tax of 20 per cent. of the gross incomes of individuals whose incomes exceed £40,000 a year and whose tax liability would otherwise be less than that amount.

Mr. Francis Maude [holding answer 21 January 1991]: The additional income tax liability in 1991-92 would be about £50 million. This estimate does not take account of any behavioural changes which might result from the introduction of the new arrangements.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much in real terms the average annual tax payments of a man with no allowances and reliefs other than the married couple's tax allowance earning (a) £5,000, (b) £10,000, (c) £15,000 and (d) £20,000 has increased or decreased since 1976-77.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 21 January 1991]: Income tax for a married man as a percentage of gross income is as follows:

Income in 1990-91 £	Income tax[1] 1990-91 per cent.	1976-77[2] per cent.
5,000	1·4	3·4
10,000	13·2	19·2
15,000	17·1	24·5
20,000	19·1	27·1

[1] Assuming that the only allowances and reliefs available are the married man's allowance in 1976-77 and the personal allowance plus the married couple's allowance in 1990-91. In each case the wife is assumed to have no income.

[2] Calculations for 1976-77 are based on the income tax regime for that year applied to levels of income adjusted from the 1990-91 figures in line with the change in average male earnings.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Stations (Closures)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of local police stations that have closed since 1979 for each year and the location for each one.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not recorded centrally.

Judiciary (Training)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the commencement date and duration of training for magistrates, justices' clerks, probation officers and judges following the changes outlined in the Criminal Justice Bill.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Consideration is still being given to what training programmes are necessary to support the Criminal Justice Bill. In the case of judges and magistrates it will be for the Judicial Studies Board in the first instance, to prepare plans or proposals.

Probation Service

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the projected increase in the probation service budget for 1991-92 and 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Probation service budgets are set by probation committees, though the paying local authorities may object to certain items of expenditure and either a local authority or a probation committee may seek a determination of a budget from the Secretary of State. Central Government support for the probation service (current and capital grants and credit approvals to local authorities) is estimated to be £231 million in 1990-91. Planned provision, subject to the approval of Parliament, is £248 million for 1991-92 and £270 million for 1992-93. Grant is not necessarily paid in the same year as that in which the expenditure it supports is incurred.

Nigerian Offenders

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people who emanated from Nigeria and who were jailed following a conviction for drug-related offences have been deported since October 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Thirty Nigerian nationals convicted of drugs-related offences were deported from the United Kingdom in the period 1 October 1990 to 23 January 1991. Separate figures are not readily available for those who served a custodial sentence, nor are details available centrally of the country of embarkation of those arrested on arrival.

Parole

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he anticipates that the parole changes proposed in the Criminal Justice Bill will be implemented; and whether they will be retrospective.

Mrs. Rumbold: The new parole arrangements will be introduced as early as practicable in 1992. The main elements of the new scheme will apply only to those inmates who are sentenced after implementation date. Those sentenced previously will retain their old entitlements and will not be subject to any additional liabilities.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received any representations from the chairman of the Parole Board about the effects of the proposed changes to the parole system which are contained in the Criminal Justice Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold: The chairman of the Parole Board submitted representations which were subsequently published in the Parole Board's annual report for 1989. A joint Home Office-Parole Board conference was held last July when the board offered further comments on a number of issues concerning the new arrangements.

Hillsborough Disaster

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 491, if he will make it his policy to introduce in the current Session the legislation to implement the recommendations contained in Lord Justice Taylor's final report into the Hillsborough disaster announced by him on 12 November 1990, Official Report, column 355.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We propose to create offences along the lines recommended by Lord Justice Taylor as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Young Offenders

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average weekly cost of holding a juvenile on remand in penal custody in England and Wales during the latest financial year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on remand prisoners is not held separately.

The average weekly cost of holding a juvenile in a closed youth establishment in 1989-90 was £346.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juvenile males were charged with (a) violence against the person, (b) sexual offences, (c) burglary, (d) robbery, (e) theft and handling stolen goods, (f) criminal damage, (g) drug offences and (h) motoring offences in England and Wales during 1989; and what percentage were remanded into custody.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The number of juvenile males proceeded against at magistrates courts for indictable offences in England and Wales in 1989 is given in the table:

Indictable offences	Number of juvenile males proceeded against
Violence against the person	4,739
Sexual offences	518
Burglary	9,470
Robbery	1,497
Theft and handling stolen goods	12,872
Fraud and forgery	370
Criminal damage	1,581
Drug offences	310
Other (excluding motoring)	1,734
Motoring offences	240
Total	33,331

These figures are published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales Supplementary tables 1989, volume 1, tables S1.1(B) and S1.1(C). Reliable information on the breakdown of remands into bail and custody according to age, sex and offence group is not available centrally.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the latest year available, how many juveniles appeared before magistrates courts in England and Wales; and what percentage was accompanied by one or both of their parents.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: A total of 55,000 juveniles were proceeded against in magistrates courts in 1989. We have no information available centrally on the percentage who were accompanied by one or both of their parents.

HIV Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the latest date available how many prisoners in England and Wales were diagnosed as HIV positive; and how many prisoners in (a) Wormwood Scrubs, (b) Wandsworth, (c) Exeter, (d) Gloucester, (e) Bristol, (f) Birmingham, (g) Holloway and (h) Leeds were so diagnosed.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 23 January the number of reported cases was 56. For reasons of medical confidentiality it is not our policy to disclose the number of cases at individual establishments.

Prison Medical Service

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many medical practitioners are directly employed full or part-time by the prison medical service; and how many are contracted in from the national health service.

Mrs. Rumbold: A total of 116 are directly employed full-time and 118 part-time. Fourteen consultant forensic psychiatrists provide a part-time service under contracts with health authorities. A further 212 medical practitioners in a range of specialties undertake regular sessions for the prison medical service. These are in the main NHS consultants but the contracts are with the individual practitioners, not their employing health authority.

Prisoners (Drug Offences)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many male and female prisoners in England and Wales are currently serving a sentence or are on remand for offences involving the importation of drugs.

Mrs. Rumbold: The only readily available information on the types of drug offences committed by sentenced prisoners does not separately identify males and females; it is published annually in Prison statistics England and Wales (Table 1(a) of the latest volume, for 1989, Cm.1221), copies of which are in the Library. On 30 June 1989 an estimated 1,300 prisoners had been sentenced for unlawful import/export of drugs.

Information about the remand population by type of offence is not available centrally. The readily available information gives the offences of persons received on remand into Prison Service establishments (table 2.11 of Prison Statistics England and Wales 1989).

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many male and female prisoners who are serving a sentence for drug related matters and who emanated from Nigeria have been (a) granted parole, (b) refused parole on first application and (c) refused parole on second application during the last three years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The present central computer system on parole does not hold information on the nationality of prisoners and it is not, therefore, possible to produce the figures requested. However, a new system is scheduled for this year which will make such analyses possible.

Electronic Monitoring

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether a site has been found for the fourth electronic monitoring remand pilot which was announced last spring; and when the project will commence.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: In the light of the successful outcome of the trials of the feasibility of electronic monitoring carried out in three areas as reported in Home Office research study No. 120 we concluded that a further trial would not be necessary.

Night Restriction Orders

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each of the last five years how many night restriction orders were made by the courts in England and Wales.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information on the number of persons given a supervision order with night restrictions is given in the table.

Persons given a supervision order with night restrictions at all courts 1985-89
England and Wales

Year	Total
1985	3
1986	9
1987	10
1988	8
1989	11

This information is published annually in volume 4 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables", copies of which are in the Library.

Immigration Rules

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to make changes in the immigration rules.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his answer, 21 January 1991, column 8]: Under the immigration rules, Lebanese nationals are required to obtain visas to enter the United Kingdom. However, like most nationalities subject to a visa requirement, Lebanese nationals at present benefit from a concession whereby passengers who are booked on an onward flight leaving the United Kingdom within 24 hours of their arrival do not need visas. Because of the misuse of the concession by Lebanese nationals who are not genuine transit passengers, we have decided to withdraw it with effect from 26 January. From that date, all Lebanese nationals intending to pass through immigration control, including transit passengers, will need to obtain a visa before setting out.

HEALTH

Hospital Beds

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the reasons for the decision to cease compiling central figures on the average number of NHS occupied hospital beds;

(2) if he will resume the compilation of central statistics on the occupancy of NHS hospital beds.

Mr. Dorrell: The health services information steering group (chaired by Mrs.. Korner) recommended that the central collection of aggregated bed occupancy figures should cease as it is not a meaningful indicator of efficient bed use. The measure derived from this information took no account of beds occupied by day case patients nor the fact that some wards are designed for short stay acute cases and others for very long stay geriatric and psychiatric cases. More relevant indicators such as throughput and length of stay are calculated from individual patient episode information and included in Health Service Indicators published by the Department. The latter also includes information about unoccupied beds in the mental illness and mental handicap specialties.

Quality of Care Exhibition

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost to public funds of the quality of care exhibition held at the national exhibition centre in November.

Mr. Dorrell: Direct expenditure by the Department was £123,123 and by the 14 English regions and Wales, £522,788, a total of £645,911. More than 20,000 staff visited the exhibition over three days. The enormous amount of interest and enthusiasm generated will have long term benefits for staff and patients alike.

Form E111

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to remind the French authorities of the unlimited validity of forms E111 issued in the United Kingdom provided the holders continue to be ordinarily resident here.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has written to the French authorities about this matter and a reply is awaited.

Young Offenders

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for the latest date available how many juveniles are in the care of local authorities in England and Wales following a conviction for a criminal offence; and what were the offences.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At 31 March 1989, 2,100 juveniles were in the care of local authorities in England under section 1(2)f or section 7(7) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 following a conviction for a criminal offence. Figures for 1989 are provisional. No information is available centrally about the nature of these offences. The Children Act 1989 will end the power of a court to make a care order as a result of a criminal offence; this power has, in any case, been exercised less and less by courts in recent years.

The information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many secure units and places therein for juveniles are currently available in England and Wales; and what is the geographical location and the occupancy rate.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 31 December 1990 there were 34 local authority secure units available in England, providing a total of 288 places. Their geographical location is given in the table.

The latest information about occupancy rates is given in the publication "Children Accommodated in Secure Units During the Year Ending 31 March 1989—England", a copy of which is available in the Library.

The information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to the newly established hospital trusts on whether they need a salaried chairman and or; how much remuneration should be paid for a particular input of time or expertise; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, each NHS trust is a corporate body with a board of directors including a chairman who is appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and receives remuneration for his work. Chairmen are expected to commit up to three and a half days per week to their duties for the trust. The amount of remuneration (which is shown in the table) is determined by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, based on the reported revenue expenditure of the trust. Guidance on the membership and proceedings of NHS trusts was issued to potential NHS trusts in November 1990 together with the NHS Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990. Copies are in the Library.

Northwick Park Hospital

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has yet received a report from the steering group set up to consider the implications for the local health service of the closure of the clinical research centre at Northwick Park hospital.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following the creation of this steering group, announced in my predecessor's reply on 9 March 1990 at column 898, it has made two reports to Ministers. The group concluded that the phased closure of the clinical research centre by 1994 would allow enough time to secure an orderly withdrawal with minimum disruption to the local health service. Further work is proceeding on a range of options for using the premises vacated when the centre closes. Copies of the steering group's final report are available in the Library.

While I understand that the closure of the clinical research centre will disappoint many of those who have contributed to its work with Northwick Park hospital, I welcome the Medical Research Council's announcement of proposals to strengthen clinical research by the Royal Post-Graduate Medical School (RPMS) at the Hammersmith hospital and seven other centres in Great Britain.

Care Models

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department have given any consideration to the development of models of care along the lines of Swedish service apartments.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 24 January 1991]: The development in this country of this particular model of care has not been considered by the Department.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specific measures his Ministry has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Ministry intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Ministry's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. Curry: This Department is taking a number of steps to improve energy efficiency. The farm and conservation grant scheme provides grants to farmers for energy saving amounting to 25 per cent. of costs in less favoured areas and 15 per cent. in other areas. Grants are paid to help meet the cost of the supply and installation of wind or water powered pumps and generators, solar heating panels, straw burning boilers and furnaces and on other forms of durable energy saving equipment and the permanent thermal insulation of buildings and glass-houses. Advice is available on energy saving from the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service and in particular energy audits are available which analyse fuel use and make specific recommendations for action.

Within the Department we have a continuing programme of energy efficiency improvement including the carrying out of comprehensive energy surveys in buildings. Improvements have been made to lighting, glazing and insulation and in some instances heating systems are being updated or overhauled. Energy saving changes have been made to laboratory installations.

This Department's expenditure on energy for the 1989-90 financial year was as follows:

	£ million
Electricity	1·8
Gas	0·4
Solid and liquid fuel	0·7

As the 1990-91 financial year is not yet over, the comparative figures requested are not available.

DEFENCE

Fraud

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the proven cases of fraud at his establishments discovered by the National Audit Office, together with the value of each fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The National Audit Office did not discover any cases of fraud at defence establishments. The Comptroller and Auditor General's report on fraud and irregularities at defence establishments listed frauds which had been discovered and reported by the Ministry of Defence. The report will be examined by the Public Accounts Committee in the usual way.

Tornado F3 (Fuel Tank Loss)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received as to the incident involving the loss of fuel tanks from a Royal Air Force Tornado F3 aircraft, after taking off from RAF Leeming on 15 January.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: On 15 January, two external fuel tanks on a Tornado F3 aircraft were inadvertently released shortly after take off from RAF Leeming. The tanks landed in a field. The pilot returned immediately to RAF Leeming. The incident is currently the subject of a unit inquiry.

RAF Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, by year for the last five years and to date (a) the number of service personnel and (b) the number of aircraft, stationed at RAF Finningley; and how many of these were attached from other nations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 54 aircraft and 1,096 service personnel stationed at RAF Finningley. Three of these personnel are on exchange from other nations. We do not hold records of the exact numbers of aircraft and personnel in previous years, but recent figures will be broadly similar to the current ones.

Oral Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what savings his Department would make were no notice given of oral questions to Ministers and they were answered without civil service time being used on briefings.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No savings would be made and costs would almost certainly increase significantly. If the oral question is known in advance briefing can be tightly focused, thus avoiding the cost of producing a detailed brief, covering all subjects that could possibly arise.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average length of time taken and the average cost involved of officials' time in his Department preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The time taken in preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions is not routinely recorded in the Ministry of Defence. Estimates are however made where there is a likelihood of exceeding the disproportionate cost threshold (currently £250). However, following an inter-departmental exercise in 1972 an assessment was made of the average cost throughout all Departments of answering an oral question. This assessment was based on staff time, using average rates of pay and associated costs for the grades concerned, together with a share of the cost of parliamentary sections and any substantial non-staff costs such as computer usage. This assessed figure is regularly updated and currently stands at £99.

Iraq (Arms Sales)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the policy of the Government towards the selling of arms by the United Kingdom to Iraq since 1980.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government have refused to allow the export of lethal defence equipment to Iraq since the beginning of the Iran-Iraq war in 1980. This restriction was maintained after the ceasefire in 1988 and has now been overtaken by the total trade embargo agreed by the United Nations.

Iraqi Service Men (Training)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the policy which applied to the training of Iraqi soldiers and airmen undertaken in the United Kingdom prior to the invasion of Kuwait, the numbers involved each year and the kind of training given to the members of the Iraqi armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Her Majesty's Government take all relevant factors into account, including the treatment of human rights in the countries concerned, when considering the provision of military training. So far as the details of MOD training for Iraqis is concerned, I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member on 16 January at column 501.

Foreign Service Men (Training)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what weight is given to a country's human rights record in deciding on whether military training is given in the United Kingdom to foreign service men; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In deciding whether or not to provide military training to overseas countries, Her Majesty's Government take all relevant factors into account, including the treatment of human rights in the country concerned.

Postal Services

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to improve the supply of forces air mail envelopes to post offices.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A further 3 million forces free airletter forms ("blueys") are being made available by the Ministry of Defence, and the Post Office is distributing them to areas of shortage as a matter of urgency. Since the start of the British deployment to the Gulf some 6 million blueys have been made available to the Post Office, of which about 1 million have been posted.

Gulf (Costs)

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 22 January, Official Report, column 149-50, if he has yet placed in the Library a copy of his letter to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neil) on the costs of the operation in the Gulf.

Mr. Tom King: A copy of my letter to the hon. Member was placed in the Library on 24 January 1991.

SCOTLAND

Schools Expenditure

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the capital expenditure on local authority schools in each year since 1979-80 in cash and constant terms.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on Tuesday 22 January 1991 at column 144.

Homelessness

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what money is being allocated to Renfrew district council, Inverclyde district council and Strathclyde regional council to deal with homelessness.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The provisional housing capital allocations for 1991-92 issued to Renfrew and Inverclyde district councils are as follows:

£ million

	HRA block[1]	Non-HRA block[2]	Total
Renfrew District	17·604	3·957	21·561
Inverclyde District	7·756	2·850	10·606

[1] For capital investment in council housing.
[2] For capital investment in private housing.

These resources are not specifically earmarked to deal with homelessness, but the authorities may use relevant allocations for homelessness where this is seen as a local priority.

In addition support to revenue expenditure will be made available in 1991-92 through housing support grant to Renfrew and Inverclyde district councils to fund the estimated deficit on their hostels in 1991-92 (£28,500 and £153,000, respectively); and through aggregate external finance to Renfrew and Inverclyde district councils and Strathclyde regional council.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses Scottish Homes has allocated to provide homes to those people on the homeless list of Scottish local authorities; and if he will list them by constituency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Homes does not hold this information centrally. However, I understand that Scottish Homes is currently, in partnership with local authorities, actively seeking to establish the most effective way of reducing the number of homeless and roofless people, including the provision of more furnished and supported accommodation for young single homeless people.

Storm Damage

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to deal with the aftermath of the recent storms in Scotland; and what money will be made available to local councils to prevent similar damage occurring again.

Mr. Allan Stewart: On 8 January, in response to the severe storms of the weekend of 5-6 January in the west of Scotland, my right hon. Friend triggered a scheme of special financial assistance, known as the Bellwin scheme, in support of all local authorities in the area.

The scheme is designed to assist authorities financially in their response to the storms and the task of returning matters to normality. My Department has sent a circular to all the relevant local authorities setting out the details. Any eligible costs which authorities incur up to 8 March will be considered for assistance and I shall, of course, be as sympathetic as I can within the rules of the scheme.

Longer term prevention plans are a matter for individual local authorities and should be included in their forward financial plans for capital expenditure. Capital expenditure on flood prevention and coast expenditure comes within the provision for water and sewerage, which has been substantially increased. Local authorities have scope to undertake flood prevention and coast protection measures if they so wish.

Sports Facilities

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sports facilities required by Her Majesty's Government to be available to all pupils in Scotland in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools as part of or as a necessary complement, to their curricula.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This is a matter for the relevant education authority.

Scottish Legal Aid Board

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names and terms of office of the present members of the Scottish Legal Aid Board.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Police Authorities

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state by rank the establishment of each of the police authorities in Scotland and the number of vacancies in each rank in each authority.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table details the authorised establishment levels and vacancies as at 31 December 1990 by police force and rank. Vacancies are calculated as authorised establishment less actual strength and take no account of the fact that authorities are allowed to recruit over authorised establishment to replace officers on central service (though practice in this regard varies). This explains why some vacancies have negative values.

Chief Constables

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the salaries of the chief constables in each of the police authorities in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The current salaries of chief constables are as follows:

Police force	Salary with effect from 1 September 1990 £
Central Scotland police	48,015
Dumfries and Galloway constabulary	48,015
Fife Constabulary	[1]48,828

Fire Authorities

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state by rank the establishment for each of the fire authorities in Scotland and the numbers of vacancies in each rank in each authority.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is collected on an annual basis. The figures as at 31 December 1989 were published in table 1 of the annual report for 1989 of Her Majesty's Inspector of Fire Services for Scotland (Cm 1144), a copy of which is held in the Library. The figures as at 31 December 1990 are currently being collected and I will send the information to the hon. and learned Member as soon as it has been received and collated.

Higher Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of students in each of the colleges in the centrally-funded sector of higher education in Scotland, including the colleges of education in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91, and the projected intakes for 1991-92.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The available information is given in the table. Figures for 1990-91 are not yet available. It is not the practice to publish projections of student numbers for individual colleges.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the unit of resource attached to each full-time equivalent students through the grant-in-aid allocations to the centrally-funded sector colleges in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 and the intended unit of resource for 1991-92.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Grant-in-aid per full-time equivalent funded student in the centrally funded college sector in Scotland is given in the table. Because of the technical adjustments made to grant-in-aid to accommodate the shift of resources towards student tuition fees, the figures for the years shown are not on a comparable basis.

Unemployment Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were unemployed in Scotland in December of every year since 1979 (a) using the current system of calculating unemployment and (b) using the system of calculating unemployment current in 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Department of Employment publishes seasonally adjusted estimates of the number unemployed in Scotland monthly on a basis consistent with the current system of calculating unemployment. Estimates for December of each year since 1979 are available from the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. Library staff are ready to assist in accessing the information if necessary.

Estimates are not available using the system of calculating unemployment current in 1979. There is no reliable basis on which to make such estimates as it is impossible to know how many people would now register as unemployed under procedures which no longer exist. Attempting to do so would involve speculation about the effect of demographic, economic and other factors.

The Gulf (Blood Donors)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps have been taken to ensure that blood donations made for the purpose of helping people wounded in the Gulf war are not used for other purposes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I wish to record the Government's appreciation and gratitude to the public for their magnificent response to the appeal for blood donors at this time of possible additional demand. All blood donations are freely given and on the understanding that these will be used by the Scottish national blood transfusion service to the maximum effect to save lives or in the treatment of patients in Scotland. Donations will be used to meet the demands of the national health service and Her Majesty's forces when required.

National Health Service Expenditure

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total national health service gross expenditure in Scotland in each year from 1986-87 to 1990-91; what is the estimated expenditure for 1991-92; if he will break down this expenditure for (a) hospital and community health services, (b) capital building and maintenance, (c) family practitioner services and (d) centrally financed services, giving the percentage increase/decrease on the previous year; and if he will provide these figures for each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information in the format requested is not fully available. Details of gross expenditure for Scotland, in cash terms, from 1986-87 to 1991-92, along with a breakdown by service and showing the year on year percentage increases are given in the following table. As regards the individual health board figures I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave her on Tuesday 22 January, at column 139, and will write to her with details for previous years where they are available.

Campbletown and Oban Hospitals

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the funding for the new Campbletown and Oban hospitals is still allocated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 January 1991]: Details of capital allocations for all health boards for 1991-92 were announced on 22 January. Argyll and Clyde health board's allocation of £11·385 million includes provision for Oban and Campbletown hospitals.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visas

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what was the number of people awaiting interview for a visa to enter the United Kingdom at British High Commission offices in Pakistan on 14 January;

(2) what was the number of women waiting for interview for a visa to join their husband in the United Kingdom at British High Commission offices in Pakistan on 14 January;

(3) what was the number of men waiting for interview for a visa to join their wife in the United Kingdom at British High Commission offices in Pakistan on 14 January;

(4) what is the average waiting time for interview for a person seeking an entry visa to enter the United Kingdom at British High Commission offices in Pakistan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On 14 January 1991, the number of people awaiting an interview for a visa at the British High Commission offices in Pakistan was 3,787. The number of wives awaiting interview to join their husbands in the United Kingdom was 1,343 and the number of husbands awaiting interview to join their wives was 1,245. The average waiting time on 14 January for an interview for a visa at the British High Commission offices in Pakistan was as follows:

Queue	Islamabad	Karachi
1	3 months	1 month
2	5 months	4 months
3	8 months	4 months
4	15 months	8 months
5	4 days	same day

The queues are organised as follows:

Queue 1 Persons with a claim to the right of abode, dependent relatives over 70 years, special compassionate cases.
Queue 2 All spouses and all children under 18 years.
Queue 3 Fiancé(e)s and others applying for first time settlement.
Queue 4 Reapplicants.
Queue 5 Visitors and other non-settlement applicants.

Baltic States

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he has made to the Government of the Soviet Union concerning the Baltic states, following the killings of four civilians in Riga; what action he will recommend to the Council of Ministers of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs summoned the Soviet chargé on 21 January to underline our concern over the latest events. We have agreed with our partners in the EC that EC aid to the Soviet Union (except purely humanitarian) will not go ahead as long as the present situation continues. On behalf of the Twelve, the Luxembourg Fresidency has invoked the CDH mechanism, which enables CSCE countries to raise cases of human rights abuses.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the military action and threat by the Yugoslav Government against the people and elected authorities of Slovenia and other states within Yugoslavia; what representations he has made to the Yugoslav Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 25 January I summoned the Yugoslav chargé d'affaires and made it clear to him that we would deplore any use or threat of force against the democratically elected governments of Slovenia and Croatia, and that any disputes should be resolved by peaceful negotiation.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Privy Council

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the functions and role of the Privy Council.

Mr. MacGregor: The functions of the Privy Council are legislative, judicial and executive. In its legislative role the Privy Council provides the machinery for the exercise of certain powers of the royal prerogative now confined almost entirely to the fields of the dependent territories, Crown servants, and the grant of legal personality by the approval of royal charters of incorporation. Much the larger part of the Council's legislative role is in the exercise of the wide range of powers conferred by statute on the sovereign in Council or directly on the Council itself.

The judicial functions of the Privy Council are exercised by the Council's judicial committee which acts as the supreme court of appeal from courts of some Commonwealth countries which have retained this right of appeal, from courts of dependent territories and from those of the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man. The judicial committee also exercises an appellate jurisdiction in respect of disciplinary proceedings in certain professions and certain decisions made by authorities of the Church of England.

The executive functions of the Privy Council also derive from both the royal prerogative of which the most important are the sovereign's powers to prorogue and dissolve Parliament, and statute. The rest largely comprise responsibility for a wide variety of appointments including the formalities of appointment of various Cabinet and other Ministers, high sheriffs, members of various statutory bodies, Her Majesty's inspector of schools, and members of university courts and councils.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will increase the present threshold for answering (a) written and (b) oral parliamentary questions from right hon. and hon. Members, in line with the current inflation figure; when the threshold was last increased; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The disproportionate cost threshold has stood at £250 since 1988 when it was increased from £200. The figure, which applies to both written and oral questions, is reviewed annually in the light of cost increases and a further increase will be implemented when this is seen to be necessary.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give an estimate of the cost of setting up and running the agency for administering the magistrates courts centrally, as suggested by his Department's scrutiny committee; and what are the comparisons with existing costs.

Mr. John Patten: Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte was appointed last year to prepare such an assessment. Its report was completed in September and I refer the hon. Member to the copy that was placed in the Library at the time.

Police Searches

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Leicestershire on the circumstances surrounding the search of the home of the hon. Member for Leicester, East's constituent Mr. Peach, of 15 Rushey close, Leicester.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable of the Leicestershire constabulary that there is no record of a search being made of the home of Mr. Peach at the address given.

Women's Issues

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total annual cost of convening the ministerial group on women's issues.

Mrs. Rumbold: I regret that this information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are on the secretariat of the ministerial group on women's issues.

Mrs. Rumbold: At present servicing the ministerial group is part of the duty of five members of staff, the equivalent of three and a half full-time posts.

Prison Boilers

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total oil-fired boiler capacity within Her Majesty's prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, in the year 1989-90, 41·6 per cent. of the total energy used in Her Majesty's prisons was derived from oil, representing 609,440 megawatt hours. Virtually all this would have been produced by oil-fired boilers.

Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 with particular reference to the length of time people may be detained without trial; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government have reviewed the 1964 Act in the light of recommendations made by the Butler committee on mentally abnormal offenders which reported in 1975. The Government recognise that it is desirable to amend the Act by providing for an examination by a court of the case against an accused person found unfit to plead. Under the provisions of the Mental Health Act 1983, a person admitted to hospital following a finding of unfit to plead under the provisions of the 1964 Act may apply to a mental health review tribunal for his discharge in the first six months of his detention and at specified intervals thereafter.

Age of Consent

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the age of consent in each European Community country for heterosexuals, male homosexuals and female homosexuals; and if he will say what consideration he is giving to the possibility of harmonising such laws within the European Community.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not readily available and I will write to my hon. Friend. But the treaty of Rome authorises no harmonisation role for the European Community in this sort of area.

Television Licence Fee (Evasion)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women were committed to remand centres by individual name in 1989 and 1990 for the non-payment of fines for evasion of the television licence fee, detailing in each case the amount of the fine, the length of imprisonment and whether other offences of a similar or different nature were considered at the same time; and whether he will estimate the cost to public funds of imprisonment in each year.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Broadcasting Ownership

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received following his announcement on 4 December 1990 about his proposed supplementary broadcasting ownership rules; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members and others about the proposals in my announcement on 4 December relating to dual ownership of Channel 3 licences. Some of those who wrote to me supported these proposals, but a number urged me to consider restricting co-ownership of licences for adjacent areas. I have now decided that, in addition to the proposals that I set out in that announcement, it will initially not be possible for a single person to control two licence areas that are contiguous. Two licence areas will be deemed to be contiguous if they are adjacent with a significant land border between them. This restriction will last only until the beginning of 1992. Between then and the end of 1993 all takeovers of Channel 3 licences will, by virtue of section 21 of the Broadcasting Act 1990, be prohibited unless they have the prior approval of the Independent Television Commission. Thereafter, it will be possible for a licensee to acquire a contiguous neighbour through takeover, provided that the two licences in question were not both in respect of areas designated as large.

Broadcasting (Sporting Events)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what list he has drawn up for the purposes of section 182 of the Broadcasting Act 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Following consultation with broadcasters, the rights holders of the events concerned, the Sports Council and the Central Council of Physical Recreation, I have drawn up a list including 10 events. These are the same as the events included in the list drawn up for the purposes of section 14 of the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984 which were set out in a written answer on 12 July 1985. They are:

(1) The Commonwealth Games when held in the United Kingdom.
(2) Cricket Test Matches involving England.
(3) The Derby horse race.
(4) The FIFA World Cup Finals.
(5) The FA Cup Final.
(6) The Grand National horse race.
(7) The Olympic Games.
(8) The Oxford and Cambridge Boat Race.
(9) The Wimbledon Tennis Championships.
(10) Additionally in Scotland, the Scottish FA Cup Final.

I am continuing to consult the interests concerned over possible changes to the list and will announce my conclusions in due course.

Bomb Scares

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice is given to police forces about how they should involve the owners and/or managers of (a) private property and (b) public property when searching for explosive material during a bomb scare.

Mr. Lloyd [holding answer 24 January 1991]: Advice is given to police forces by the crime prevention centre at Stafford. However, the nature of the advice given by police forces will depend on local circumstances and needs. Crime prevention officers are attached to all forces and they will be glad to give advice to anyone who seeks it on the searching of buildings for explosive material during bomb scares.

Police Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable for the number of personnel employed by South Yorkshire police authority (a) in total and (b) for each division or equivalent, for each year since 1979, distinguishing civilian personnel separately.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The tables show the available information. No records were kept of the strength at divisional level before 1982 or of civilian staff strength at divisional level before 1985.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Private Summons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General what guidelines he has issued to the Treasury Solicitor on his appearance at magistrates courts for hearings relating to applications for private summons taken out against Government Ministers.

The Attorney-General: None. The Treasury Solicitor handles such matters in accordance with the ordinary arrangements for the representation of Government Ministers in relation to legal proceedings by or against them in an official capacity.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General what was the cost to public funds of the appearance of the Treasury Solicitor at a hearing in Bath and Wansdyke magistrates court in 1990 relating to an application for a private summons taken out by Diana Francis and Joan Staines against the right hon. Member for Finchley (Mrs. Thatcher).

The Attorney-General: The cost to public funds was £796·80.

Marital Rape

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Attorney-General what powers are available to the prosecuting authorities where the anonymity of a victim of marital rape is prejudiced as a result of publication or broadcast of the name of the accused.

The Attorney-General: Under section 4 of the Sexual Offences (Amendment) Act 1976, as amended by section 158 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, after a person is accused of a rape offence it is an offence to publish or broadcast matter likely to lead members of the public to identify a woman as the complainant in relation to that accusation. The publication or broadcast of the name of a husband accused of raping his wife is likely in particular cases to lead to the identification of the complainant. The prohibition applies during the whole of the woman's lifetime, unless the courts make a specific direction to the contrary. It is a defence that the woman has given written consent for the matter to appear, but the defence is not available if any person has unreasonably interfered with her peace or comfort with intent to obtain the consent. The maximum penalty is a £2,000 fine.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Attorney-General what was the average waiting time from the appeal being made against an attendance allowance decision and the appeal decision for the years 1988, 1989 and 1990.

The Attorney-General: The office of the social security commissioners does not record information on the average waiting times for decisions on appeals in relation to individual categories of benefit.

PRIME MINISTER

Lithuania and Latvia

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make direct representations to the President of the Soviet Union concerning recent actions by the Soviet Government in Lithuania and Latvia; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We have made our concerns known very clearly to the Soviet authorities, both bilaterally and in conjunction with partners and allies. There should be no doubt of our condemnation of the actions of Soviet troops in Vilnius and Riga and their tragic consequences. We call urgently on the Soviet authorities to withdraw their troops and to negotiate seriously with the elected authorities in the Baltic states.

Lobby Reporters

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if he will change the terms under which parliamentary lobby reporters are briefed by his press secretary so that information may be attributed to the Prime Minister's office in place of Government sources.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Saudi Arabia (Mail)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will take steps to ensure that mail can be got through to United Kingdom civilians working in Saudi Arabia from their families, using military postal facilities if necessary and where possible.

The Prime Minister: In spite of delays caused by difficulties with air services, the Post Office is making every effort to operate the best possible service to Saudi Arabia and mail is getting through. The Ministry of Defence would be willing to consider what help it could provide, if this becomes necessary.

Royal Prerogative

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will bring forward proposals to institute a system for notifying (a) Parliament and (b) the electorate when the royal prerogative has been exercised;

(2) if he will make it his policy to introduce legislation to ensure that the authority of Parliament is required for (a) the declaration or continuation of war and (b) other exercises of the royal prerogative;

(3) if he will bring forward legislative proposals to introduce ministerial responsibility to Parliament for the powers currently exercised by the royal prerogative.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 January 1991]: No.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements exist for the Prime Minister to be notified when the royal prerogative is used.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 January 1991]: With very few exceptions, the royal prerogative comprises powers that are now exercised by Ministers subject to the constitutional conventions.

Declaration of War

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what would be the effects of an official declaration of war on the maintenance of an Iraqi diplomatic capability in the United Kingdom;

(2) whether the United Kingdom is at war with Iraq;

(3) what representations he has received concerning parliamentary consideration of the declaration of war.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 January 1991]: The United Kingdom is not in a state of war with Iraq. British forces are engaged, together with the armed forces of Kuwait and other coalition partners, in hostilities against Iraq under the authority of the United Nations Security Council. The rules of international law applying in cases of armed conflict apply to these hostilities, notably the Geneva protocol of 1925 and the four Geneva conventions of 1949. We will observe our obligations under those treaties scrupulously and expect the Government of Iraq to do the same.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Advisory Companies

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley of 17 January, Official Report, column 571, if he will list the wide range of groups from which he seeks advice on presentational aspects of policy; which of them are paid and which unpaid; what are their terms of reference in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: A complete list of all groups from which the FCO seeks advice could be compiled only at disproprtionate cost. The following are illustrative examples:

Mr. E. R. I. Allan OBE, is employed as a consultant to advise on British official participation in international exhibitions.

The British Atlantic Committee and Peace Through NATO advise on the presentation of defence and disarmament issues. This advice is informal and unpaid although BAC and PTN do receive grant aid from the government.

Hariri Page were commissioned in 1990 to advise on methods of evaluating information work overseas, including market research techniques, targeting, training and reporting procedures.

Moon Communications has recently completed a consultancy on the management of FCO publications. This included the production of a design manual to ensure consistency of presentation, advice on specific publications and technical assistance on visual presentation.

Shandwick PLC have provided advice on an informal and unpaid basis on public and media response to the Gulf Crisis. Young and Rubicam have provided advice on public perceptions of the crisis on the same basis.

Latvia

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with the Soviet ambassador about the situation in Latvia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs summoned the Soviet chargé on 21 January to underline our concern over the actions of Soviet troops in Riga on 20 January which resulted in a number of deaths. He again urged the Soviet authorities to withdraw their troops from the streets in the Baltic republics and to engage in serious negotiation with the democratically elected authorities in the republics.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Reading Standards

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what studies have been undertaken into the connection between standards of reading in primary schools and borrowing levels of books from public libraries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I am aware of no such studies.

GCSE

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the proportions of pupils gaining grades A to C in General Certificate of Secondary Education in (i) English, (ii) mathematics and (iii) a modern language in 1990, by rank order of education authority.

Mr. Fallon: Information for 1990 is not yet available. The table gives information for leavers from maintained schools, for each local education authority, aggregated over the three years 1987-89.

Local Authority Borrowing

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the increase or decrease in local authority borrowing power for education for each local education authority for the next financial year in order of (a) cash magnitude and (b) as a percentage of last year's borrowing power.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested is shown in the table. No conclusions should, however, be drawn from a comparison of annual capital guidelines received by an LEA in any two years. Our distribution of annual capital guidelines is made on the basis of the consistent application of objective criteria and each LEA's annual capital guidelines reflects the extent to which its plans for spending on schools and colleges match these criteria in the year in question.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he has taken in schools to discourage children from the abuse of solvents and lighter fuels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The orders for national curriculum science and technology require that pupils should understand the risks associated with abuse of solvents, their effects on the human body and the need for their safe storage and use. More broadly, the National Curriculum Council has recommended that solvent and other substance misuse should be a key component in schools' health education programmes. The Department of Education and Science is supporting up to £7 million LEA expenditure in 1990-91 on preventive health education, including education about solvent abuse; and has contributed funding towards the production of a schools' video and other resources on this subject. The Department has also issued guidance to LEAs and schools on the safe handling of volatile substances.

BA Fine Art Courses

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many undergraduate places were available on full-time BA fine art courses in each of the years 1979 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Information is not held centrally on the number of places which, within the total resources at their disposal, institutions decide to make available.

Discretionary Awards

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the value for each local education authority, in 1990 prices, of discretionary awards for the years 1979-80, 1984-85 and the latest available year.

Mr. Eggar: The data requested are shown in the table.

Notes to table:

1. The data are based on R01 spending returns submitted by local authorities in England to the Department of the Environment.
2. [1] denotes cases in which authorities did not enter a sum on their spending returns. [2] denotes that data are not available because no spending return was received.
3. The data relate to spending on discretionary awards as currently categorised for the purpose of the spending returns, that is, spending on awards made under Section 1(6) or Section 2 of the Education Act 1962 (as amended) other than awards to 16-19 year olds.
4. The data have been repriced to 1990-91 prices using the current GDP deflators.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessments have been made by his Department of the likely impact on (a) teacher recruitment, (b) teacher retention and (c) wage rates of a decision by an individual local education authority to leave the national machinery for the determination of teachers' pay and conditions.

Mr. Eggar: The Government believe that individual local education authorities should be free to determine the pay and conditions of their teachers locally, subject to approval by the Secretary of State of a proposal from the authority to that effect. I should expect such an authority to take account of local prospects for recruitment and retention in setting salary levels.

Charging Regulations

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish his Department's survey of the implications of the charging regulations under the Education Reform Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 21 November 1990, Official Report, column 117. The results of the survey will not now be available until February.

Marine Science and Technology

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to respond to the report of the co-ordinating committee for marine science and technology, published in 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have today sent a copy of the Government's response to the committee's chairman. I have arranged for copies of the response to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Bangladesh

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's response to the report of the European Court of Auditors on European Community aid to Bangladesh; and what action will be taken by the United Kingdom as a result.

Mrs. Chalker: I have read with interest the European Court of Auditors' report on European Community aid to Bangladesh and the Commission's response to that report. A number of the criticisms contained in the ECA report reflect our own concerns about the need for improvements in the Commission's overall systems and practices. We shall pursue these concerns vigorously through the existing committee structure and in our bilateral contacts with the Commission.

Namibia

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support he is currently giving to new and expanding businesses and other job-creation schemes in Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: At the request of the Namibian Government, we have focused our assistance initially on education and police training. We are now exploring with the Government of Namibia the scope for assistance to other sectors and, in doing so, will take careful account of the possibilities for employment creation. I shall discuss our aid to Namibia with members of her Government during my two-day visit this week, and on my return report to the House if progress has been made.

Afghanistan

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid Her Majesty's Government gave in 1989 and 1990 for (a) Afghan refugees in Pakistan and (b) humanitarian and development needs within Afghanistan; what plans he has for future aid; and what estimates he has of the total aid provided by international donors in 1989, 1990, and commitments for 1991, for the support of Afghan refugees in Pakistan.

Mrs. Chalker: British aid for Afghan refugees in Pakistan, and for humanitarian and development needs within Afghanistan, is provided through the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Committee of the Red Cross and non-governmental organisations. Amounts provided in 1989 and 1990 are set out in the table. No decisions have yet been made on allocations for 1991.

	1989 £ million	[1]1990 £ million
Afghan refugees in Pakistan	4·8	3·2
Humanitarian and developmental needs within Afghanistan	2·5	1·1

[1] estimate

Decisions on future aid will be made in the light of developments in Afghanistan and the needs of the refugees.

Details of total aid provided by international donors for Afghan refugees in Pakistan are not available. The following figures for 1989, the latest year for which figures are available, have been provided by the major international agencies:—

	1989 (US$ Million)
UNHCR
In Pakistan	37·4
In Afghanistan	3·8

	1989 (US$ Million)
Voluntary Repatriation Scheme	13·1
ICRC
For activities within Afghanistan and in Pakistan
Swiss Francs (million)	38

NATIONAL FINANCE

Bloodstock

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessments he has made of the implications for the bloodstock breeding industry of the changes to the administration of value added tax due to be introduced in January 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government are keenly aware of the problems which the bloodstock industry faces after 1992 due to the very low rates of VAT for bloodstock in France and Ireland. My right hon. Friend the then Paymaster General had discussions with representatives of the industry in November and I shall continue those discussions following a meeting which is to take place between the Horseracing Advisory Council and officials to consider possible solutions to the industry's perceived future difficulties.

Income Tax

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rise in income tax would be required to raise £3·6 million per day.

Mr. Maude: A yield of £3·6 million per day would be equivalent to an annual yield of about £1,300 million. Raising the basic rate of income tax by 1p would yield about £2 billion in a full year.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much income tax would have to be raised to cover expenditure of £1,008 million per calendar month.

Mr. Maude: A yield of £1,008 million per calendar month would be equivalent to an annual yield of about £12,100 million. Raising the basic rate of income tax by 6p would yield about £12,500 million in a full year.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate for (a) the increase in revenue from income tax and (b) the increase in revenue from VAT, in the event of a 1p reduction in basic rate of income tax; and what is his estimate for the same tax revenues in the event of a 1p reduction in higher rate of income tax.

Mr. Maude: The direct effects of a 1p change in the basic rate of income tax and a 1p change in the higher rate of income tax are given in chapter 4 of the 1990 autumn statement (Cm 1311). Estimates of the wider effects of tax changes depend on the economic model used and on assumptions about other economic policies.

Personal Incomes

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage of personal income taken by (a) income tax, (b) national insurance contributions, (c) domestic rates/community charge and (d) value added tax, in 1979 and 1990.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Figures are not yet available in respect of 1990 for these items. The percentages in 1979 and 1989 are given in the table:

As a percentage of total personal income

	1979	1989
Income tax	12·7	12·2
National insurance contributions	6·8	7·5
Domestic rates/community charge	2·1	2·7
Value added tax	4·1	5·4

Tax and Benefit Systems

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to the integration of the tax and benefit systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: This was discussed in chapter 6 of the 1986 Green Paper "The Reform of Personal Taxation" (Cmnd 9756). I cannot, however, anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate, on the same basis as the ready reckoner published in the autumn statement, the effect on a one-earner, two-child family of spending in 1991-92 the same sum on (a) a cut in the basic rate of income tax, (b) raising income tax thresholds above their indexed levels, (c) raising child benefit assuming (i) no change in income support and family credit rates and (ii) corresponding changes in income support and family credit rates.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 21 January 1991]: The effects of the various changes to income tax and child benefit on a married man on average earnings with two children are given in the table. In a full year each of the changes would cost £1·95 billion, the cost of a 1p cut in the basic rate of income tax. Estimates are based on projections of the 1988-89 survey of personal incomes in line with forecasts in the autumn statement.

Increase in income after tax[1] compared with indexation in 1991-92 for a married man[2] on average earnings[3] with two children

		£ per week
(a)	1p cut in basic rate	2·34
(b)	Increase in main income tax allowance	1·68
(c)	Increase in child benefit
	(i) £6·30 per week per child[4]	12·60
	(ii) £3·07 per week per child[5]	6·14

[1] Disregarding any change to entitlement to social security income-related benefits except in item (c) (ii).
[2] Assumed to have no reliefs and allowances other than the personal allowance and the married couple's allowance.
[3] Average earnings assumed to be £334·1 per week.
[4] Assuming no change in income support and family credit children's rates.
[5] Assuming corresponding changes in income support and family credit children's rates.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the Treasury's current assumptions on the level of local government current spending in England, Scotland and Wales in 1991-92, showing how much of this is financed by central Government grant, non-domestic rates and community charge, both gross and net of rebates, indicating the assumed default rate for community charge.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 24 January 1991]: No assumptions have been made about the level of local authority current spending in 1991-92. But the Government have given an indication of the amount of revenue expenditure they believe would be appropriate for that year (total standard spending in England and Wales, and Government-supported expenditure in Scotland). The table shows this spending, together with the planned level of aggregate external finance, split into grant and non-domestic rate payments.

£ million

	England	Scotland	Wales
Total Standard Spending[1]	39,000	5,447	2,433
Financed by:
—Aggregate External Finance	26,050	4,353	1,936
of which
Non-domestic rates	12,408	1,347	525
Grant	13,642	3,006	1,411
—Community charge (gross)	12,950	1,094	497

[1] Government Supported Expenditure in Scotland.

These calculations do not require any assumption about non-collection of the community charge. The latest estimate of the cost of community charge benefit in 1991-92 in Great Britain is just over £2 billion.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 17 January to the hon. Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell), Official Report, column 562, what are his estimates of the savings on community charge benefit in 1991-92 as a result of the introduction of the community charge reduction scheme.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 24 January 1991]: Some £300 million.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate, giving the date and amount in each case, any funds which the Treasury has made available to lessen the impact of the community charge since its inception and the total cost to date.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 21 January 1991]: Table 21.4.2 of the Government's expenditure plans 1990-91 to 1992-93 (Cm. 1021) details transitional grants in Great Britain which have been made available as part of the introduction of the new local government finance regime. Table 21.4.4 shows funding under the community charge benefit scheme. Updated tables are due to be published in early February in the supplement to the autumn statement. Announcements to date have been:

April 1989
Adjustment to income related benefits to assist community charge payments £500 (GB).

19 July 1989
Inner London education Grant 1990-91 £100 million.
Low rateable value areas grant 1990-91 £100 million.

11 October 1989
Low rateable value areas grant to be aggregated with Area protection grant from 1991-92 onwards. 1991-92 £400 million, 1992-93 £200 milion, 1993-94 £85 million (England).
Transitional relief scheme for chargepayers, 1990-91 £300 million (England).
Community charge benefit for 1990-91 £2 billion.
Other income related benefits £0·5 billion.

6 November 1989
Transitional relief scheme (Wales) for 1990-91 £17·5 million.

13 November 1989
Additional grant of £30 million for Scotland 1990-91 to protect against withdrawal of the safety net.

19 July 1990
Transitional relief scheme for 1991-92 raised from £260 million to £570 million (England).

23 July 1990
Transitional relief (Wales) for 1991-92 and 1992-93 to be £20 million.

25 July 1990
Additional area protection grant (Scotland) for 1991-92 £15 million.

17 January 1991
Community charge reduction scheme. Additional funding 1991-92 of £1,200 million (England), £65 million (Scotland) and £42 million (Wales).

Media Advisory Service

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether the media advisory service is now operational;

(2) what role the media advisory service has in liaising with the Ministry of Defence;

(3) if he will list the members of the media advisory service;

(4) how many personnel, and at what grade, are employed by the media advisory service;

(5) what is the remit of the media advisory service; and under what guidelines does it operate;

(6) if he will describe the role of the media advisory service in relation to reports from the Gulf.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 25 January 1991]: The media advisory service has not been activated during the present Gulf conflict. Its remit is to provide advice to media editors in time of tension and war. Personnel are not allocated to the media advisory service until it is activated. However, two members of staff of the Central Office of Information are engaged in the development of the service; one grade 5 and one senior executive officer.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farm Bankruptcies

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers were declared bankrupt in each of the years 1979 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Figures for bankruptcies in England and Wales for the agricultural and horticultural sectors from 1979 to date are as follows:

	No. of bankruptcies	per centage of total bankruptcies
1979	55	1·7
1980	50	1·3
1981	70	1·5
1982	78	1·5
1983	98	1·5
1984	155	2·0
1985	136	2·1
1986	130	1·9
1987	172	2·4
1988	162	2·1
1989	142	1·7
[1]1990	136	2·2

[1] first half.

Note: Figures from 1983 onwards were set out in 'Business Briefing' published by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce dated 9 November 1990. Previous figures were published in 'British Business' dated 29 April 1983 and 22 January 1982.

The balance sheet from British agriculture remains strong with liabilities representing less than a fifth of total assets.

Fisheries Regulations

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the disparity of fines for offences committed against fisheries regulations; and what plans he has for an overall sentencing framework for such offences.

Mr. Curry: The Department is currently reviewing the maximum level of fines for a number of fisheries offences to see whether they need increasing. The penalties imposed for fisheries offences within the maximum are a matter for the courts whose sentencing will take into account the circumstances of individual cases, including any factors pleaded in mitigation.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he plans to have with his EC counterparts on a coherent overall sentencing policy for offences committed against fishing regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Member states are responsible for the enforcement of EC fisheries regulations in their territories and fisheries limits and impose penalties for offences under national legislation.

Environmentally Friendly Farming

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will be taking to ensure that any system of direct payments per hectare will achieve environmental goals as well as social ones.

Mr. Curry: As my right hon. Friend the Minister made clear in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) on 23 January, at column 247, we intend, in negotiations on any proposals for changes to the common agricultural policy, to argue for the closer integration of agricultural and environmental policies.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make representations to the EC Commission to ensure that the regulation EC COM(90)366 makes provision for member states compulsorily to introduce measures to ensure the continuation of environmentally friendly farming practices and the option of allowing the introduction of a scheme to reduce plant protection and fertilise inputs.

Mr. Curry: In line with our policies for designating environmentally and nitrate-sensitive areas, we favour an approach that permits the member states to target the provisions in EC(COM)366 at those areas where they would be likely to achieve the greatest environmental benefits.

ENVIRONMENT

City Grant Scheme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total Government money awarded under the city grant scheme, breaking down the sum for each year and indicating how much was awarded by urban development corporations for each year; and how many jobs have been created under the city grant scheme.

Mr. Portillo: The amounts of city grant approved in each financial year since the scheme's introduction in May 1988 are shown in the table. The approvals from my Department in total, including projects not yet completed are expected to provide over 21,600 jobs and those from the urban development corporations over 9,400.

Year	£ million[1]	£ million[2]
1988-89	29·055	18·327
1989-90	72·636	11·0

Local Authority Debt

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the non-metropolitan district councils in England, in ranking order of their indebtedness, in the last year for which figures are available, with the figures for their debt and their population.

Mr. Key: I have today arranged for the available information to be placed in the Library.

Community Charge

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received from Mid-Bedfordshire district council as to the number of those liable for community charge who have not yet received any demand for payment.

Mr. Key: No information is collected centrally on the number of community charge demands sent out by local authorities.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue his Department's community charge practice notes to all current members of valuation and community charge tribunals.

Mr. Portillo: Each valuation and community charge tribunal has copies of the Department's practice notes on the community charge, which can be consulted by tribunal members if necessary.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much it costs to administer the collection of 20 per cent. poll tax payments due from those on income support.

Mr. Key: The total cost of collecting the community charge in the English local authorities is budgeted to be £413 million in 1990-91. Information is not available on the costs of administering the collection of community charges from those on income support.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many individuals have qualified for community charge transitional relief in Chelmsford in the current financial year to the latest available date.

Mr. Key: Relief grant claim forms from the local authority indicate that 16,500 charge payers in Chelmsford have benefited from transitional relief this financial year.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many individuals are liable to pay the community charge in Chelmsford in the current financial year;

(2) how many individuals have not paid any community charge in Chelmsford in the current financial year to the latest available date.

Mr. Key: Information reported by the local authority shows 117,000 people to be liable to make a payment in respect of a personal community charge by 31 December 1990; of these 4,000 had not made a payment.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing (i) the assumed poll tax he has assigned to each local authority for 1991-92 for the purposes of the community charge reduction scheme and (ii) the actual poll tax levied by each authority in 1990-91.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 24 January 1991]: I am placing in the Library copies of a table showing the average personal community charge for each English authority in 1990-91 and the community charges which it is proposed should be used for calculating community charge reductions in 1991-92. In most cases the latter charges are derived from an authority's average personal community charge for 1990-91 adjusted to take account of the change in support per adult resulting from the replacement of the safety net and low rateable value areas grant by area protection grant. However, for a number of authorities such a calculation, if applied, would produce a charge less than the figure used as the basis of the calculation of transitional relief this year—the lower of an authority's 1990-91 actual and assumed personal community charges. In these cases, the 1990-91 figure for calculating transitional relief is to be used.

In all cases if the figure derived in the way described above is greater than the personal community charge set by the relevant authority for the financial year beginning on 1 April 1991, we propose that the latter should be used for calculating entitlement to a community charge reduction.

Glass and Glazing Federation

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the Glass and Glazing Federation to discuss (a) quality of workmanship and possible warranty or guarantee schemes and (b) glazing companies which cannot repair unsatisfactory work because they have gone into liquidation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend has not met the Glass and Glazing Federation. However, my officials did so on 14 June 1989 to discuss these matters.

Environment and Development Conference

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will be consulting non-governmental organisations and national bodies to assist in his preparations for the United Nations 1992 conference on environment and development.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 10 December to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce), at column 266.

ASRA Housing Association

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that the London borough of Greenwich observes the conditions on nomination rights contained in his Department's consent of 27 November 1990 for the disposal of land at the rear of 52 to 86 Ceres road, SE18, to the ASRA (Greater London) Housing Association.

Mr. Yeo: It is the responsibility of the district auditor to keep under review the legality of an authority's transactions.

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the nature conservation objectives of the countryside stewardship scheme; and what assessment he has made of the scheme's likely contribution to the fulfilment of international obligations under the EC Council directive on the conservation of wild birds—79/409/EEC—and the Berne convention on the conservation of European wildlife and natural habitats.

Mr. Trippier: Details of the countryside stewardship scheme are being worked up by the Countryside Commission in conjunction with my Department, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Nature Conservancy Council. The scheme is intended to enhance and recreate valued English landscapes and wildlife habitats and to improve opportunities for people to appreciate and enjoy them. The commission is very aware of the need properly to integrate nature conservation considerations with those of landscape and access and involved the Nature Conservancy Council in the design of the scheme from its inception.

The commission hopes to be in a position to start inviting applications to the scheme by late spring this year. Initially, countryside stewardship is likely to target chalk and limestone grasslands, heathland, waterside landscapes, coastal land and possibly some upland areas.

It is hoped that the scheme will, among other things, assist in conserving and recreating habitats of importance to species covered by the EC Council directive on the conservation of wild birds and the Berne convention on the conservation of European wildlife and natural habitats.

Recycling

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his Department's criteria for recycling and recovery; and what is being done to encourage each, in light of forthcoming obligations outlined in the EC directive on waste management.

Mr. Baldry: The Government's criteria for recycling and recovery are that they should take place where it makes environmental and economic sense to do so. Our policy and actions on these matters are set out in chapter 14 of the White Paper "This Common Inheritance"—CM 1200.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions are required in contracts entered into by waste collection authorities and recyclers in respect of retention by a county council or waste disposal authority offering recycling facilities for the same materials.

Mr. Baldry: None. Section 14(2) of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 allows waste collection and disposal authorities to agree the extent to which the former may retain waste for re-use or reclamation. Section 48(2) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 will replace that provision with a permission for any waste collection authority to retain waste for the purpose of recycling unless the waste disposal authority has made arrangements with a contractor for recycling that waste and has served notice on the collection authority accordingly. Waste disposal authorities do not acquire more than a small proportion of household or commercial waste direct from the producers of the waste; most is handled first by the waste collection authority or a private waste collection company.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he received in response to his consultation paper about business rating and bed-and-breakfast accommodation; what was the balance of the various proposals outlined and submitted; and the details of the options he considered prior to his final decision.

Mr. Portillo: We received 246 responses to the consultation paper. Taking into account the weight of responses from groups and bodies as opposed to individuals, the majority were in favour of an exemption for bed-and-breakfast operators who intended to offer accommodation in their own homes for up to six people. There was also majority support for the qualification that the exemption should apply only where use of the dwelling for bed and breakfast was subsidiary to its use as a residence. Besides the proposals set out in the consultation paper, we considered all options that were put to us in the responses.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table showing the cost to the Exchequer of enterprise zones in 1989-90 and the tax income forgone in 1989-90 for each enterprise zone.

Mr. Key [holding answer 22 January 1991]: Compensation for rate revenue forgone by local authorities is listed in the table. The latest available estimate for capital allowances is £70 million for 1987-88; this figure is only a broad indication based on several assumptions and cannot be split between individual enterprise zones.

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will institute procedures to ensure that in future in the event of any planning inquiry resulting from a call-in of a planning application where it is known or believed that both the applicant and the local planning authority are in support of the application, leading objectors to the application are given informal or formal notice of the date of the inquiry no later than the applicant and the local authority.

Sir George Young [holding answer 25 January 1991]: It is normal practice to give official written notification of the date for an inquiry into a called-in planning application to all interested parties at the same time. It is necessary, though, to contact the applicant and the local planning authority beforehand in order to agree a date and venue for the inquiry. My right hon. Friend has no plans to alter these arrangements.

Reservists (Community Charge)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the liability of reservists with regard to the poll tax during the period in which they are in the Gulf.

Mr. Key [holding answer 25 January 1991]: The advice issued to local authorities by my Department on 5 November 1990 about the community charge treatment of armed forces personnel serving in the Gulf indicated that it should also be applied to reservists. This would in general mean that their liability to the personal community charge should cease on the day that they are posted abroad and that no attempt to enforce payment of any sums outstanding in respect of their liability up to the date of posting should be made until their return. A copy of this advice has been placed in the Library of the House.

EC Funding

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of European regional development fund grant received by area in Britain has gone to (a) finance debt redemption and (b) establish projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

I take it that the question relates to grants for local authority capital projects, which form the majority of ERDF grants in the United Kingdom,

Section 63(4) of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 requires local authorities in England and Wales in effect to apply capital receipts from the ERDF to debt redemption. The immediate effect of receipt is therefore a cash benefit.

However, local authority capital programmes are, by virtue of ERDF grants, larger than they otherwise would be. Indirectly, therefore, ERDF grant finances additional capital expenditure.

The issue raised by the hon. Member's question, seeking to distinguish between debt redemption and investment, does not therefore arise.

TRANSPORT

Civil Defence

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the delays to work on underground accommodation which resulted in an underspend on his Department's civil defence budget for 1989-90; when he expects the work to be completed; what is his current estimate of expected total overall expenditure on this work; and what is the purpose of the accommodation and the nature of the work to be carried out on it.

Mr. McLoughlin: The funds granted were for building works and other services in existing underground accommodation which would be used, in crisis and war, by personnel concerned with supply and transport. The work was delayed pending a review of the use of the accommodation. A revised scheme is expected to be completed by 31 March 1991 at a total cost of £625,000.

Petrol Tankers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many people are killed or injured each year as a result of accidents involving petrol tankers;

(2) how many accidents occur each year involving petrol tankers.

Mr. Chope: I regret that the information requested is not available because the standard report form, STATS19, completed by the police for accidents involving personal injury does not identify petrol tankers as a specific category of vehicle.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals there are to require the strengthening and protection of petrol tankers to prevent rupture in the event of a road traffic accident.

Mr. Chope: None of which I am aware; all designs for petrol tankers must be approved by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the safety of petrol tankers.

Mr. Chope: None in the last two years.

Hazardous Loads

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of accidents involving the rail transportation of hazardous and inflammable materials that have taken place within a 50-mile radius of Doncaster, for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Her Majesty's railway inspectorate does not have information readily available in the form requested. The following figures, for the period 1984-89, are for train accidents occurring in eastern region within 50 miles of Doncaster in which it is possible to identify that dangerous or inflammable goods were carried on the train. Figures for incidents before 1984 are not available.

[1] Details not yet available.

Light Rapid Transport Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the local authorities which have consulted his Department about undertaking feasibility studies and planning light rapid transport or metro systems.

Mr. McLoughlin: Apart from the passenger transport executives in Greater Manchester and South Yorkshire, whose light rail projects are already under way, passenger transport executives and local authorities have been in touch with the Department about light rapid transit projects in a number of areas including the West Midlands, Leeds, Avon, Cleveland, Chester, Croydon, Guildford, Leicester, Nottingham, South Hampshire, Southampton and Stoke-on-Trent.

Mail Movements

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has carried out any environmental studies into the impact of the Post Office's recent decision to move short-distance mail by road instead of rail.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. This was a commercial matter for the Post Office and British Rail.

Black Country Spine Road

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when an announcement is to be made on the results of the review of the black country spine road.

Mr. Chope: The report has not yet been received. When it is, it will be considered as quickly as possible.

Rail Investment

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make it his policy to evaluate the public service obligation grant to make it more specific in application, rail line by rail line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The current system of paying a single national public service obligation grant reflects the requirement on BR to maintain a service which is comparable generally with that existing on 1 April 1988. The day-to-day management of services and the precise level of service to be provided on individual lines is a matter for BR. The Department regularly considers whether this system is appropriate. However, there are no current plans to change it.

Rail Deaths

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether any inquiry will be conducted into the deaths of rail passengers who fell from InterCity trains when doors opened; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) on 5 December last, Hansard, Vol. 182, column 118. British Rail thoroughly investigates all incidents of this nature and makes its reports available to Her Majesty's railway inspectorate.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans have been put to him for improvement of the west coast main line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is continuing to develop plans for the west coast main line and has not yet put specific investment proposals to the Department.

Trains (Overbooking)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received in the last year concerning the safety implications of overcrowding and double booking on British Rail trains; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Transport received around 4,000 letters about British Rail in the last year, some of which raised questions about various aspects of overcrowding. Precise figures could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how old the information is about local unemployment provided by the employment service to local TECs.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the relationship and co-ordination between the employment service and local TECs.

Mr. Jackson: The employment service and training and enterprise councils share a common purpose in helping local labour markets to run efficiently. It is vital that local employment service managers and individual TECs establish a relationship based on the closest possible co-operation to ensure that we maximise the contribution that each can make.

Most TECs have been operating for only a short time. However, there are already many excellent examples of collaboration to build on which will support a fully co-ordinated approach to the delivery of Government employment, training and enterprise programmes and services at the local level. I know that the employment service is committed to helping TECs succeed and I am encouraged by the response by individual TECs and the very constructive dialogue which has emerged.

The Government will continue to take a very keen interest in this important area.

Disability

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list recent measures to encourage blind people and the registered disabled to obtain skills or to find employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: People with disabilities, including visual handicaps, can register as disabled if they want to work and have a reasonable prospect of being able to obtain and keep work. Registration is open to unemployed people and to those in employment. My Department provides a wide range of services and schemes specifically designed to help people with disabilities to obtain training and to find and keep employment and develop within it. In addition, the general employment and training schemes and services provided by the Department often make special provision for people with disabilities. Some provision is specifically aimed at people with visual handicaps.

My Department has recently undertaken a wide-ranging consultation exercise to obtain views on how to make the Department's services more effective for people with disabilities and we are presently considering responses. We are also consulting widely about the range of special schemes that we provide for people with disabilities, including special help for people who are visually handicapped and for people who are registered disabled.

My right hon. and learned Friend announced in November that, from this April, unemployed people with disabilities will be given priority access to the Department's main employment and training programmes. These programmes include job clubs and the job interview guarantee scheme, both of which are to be expanded and have been shown to have considerable potential in helping people with disabilities.

In October we launched a new symbol which can be used by employers to show publicly that they are committed to good practices and to encourage people with disabilities in seeking and keeping employment.

Self-employed People

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the change, in numerical and percentage terms, in the number of self-employed people in (a) Scotland and (b) Great Britain between 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jackson: The information is as follows:

Self-employed
change between June 1979 and September 1990

	Actual (000's)	Percentage
Scotland	90	56·3
Great Britain	1,515	82·2

Earnings

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the average weekly earnings of full-time male employees in (a) Scotland and (b) Great Britain.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is published in table 12 of part A of the 1990 new earnings survey report. A copy of the report is in the Library.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the hourly rates of pay for (a) part-time female manual employees and (b) part-time female non-manual employees, in (i) Scotland and (ii) Great Britain.

Mr. Jackson: Information on average gross hourly earnings for the groups specified is published in table 180 of part F of the 1990 new earnings survey report. A copy of the report is in the Library.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what support Her Majesty's Government are giving or planning to give to both sides of industry to enable them to take full advantage of a work force estimated to comprise 45 per cent. women by the year 2001.

Mr. Jackson: The Government are firmly committed to the principle of equal opportunities for women and men and will continue to encourage both sides of industry, through education and training, to do all they can to help women reach their full potential. Employers are being urged to adopt family-friendly policies to attract and retain the women they will need.

Training

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list recent measures taken by him to encourage industry to reinvest in training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Many of our policies on training are designed to encourage effective investment by employers in training. The establishment of training and enterprise councils in England and Wales, and local enterprise companies in Scotland, has put employers in the lead in transforming attitudes towards training and enterprise locally. TECs and LECs are developing new approaches to encouraging employers to invest more effectively in training. TECs have recently been given new freedoms to use their substantial public resources more flexibly to this end. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has also launched "Investors in People", a new standard for effective investment in skills by employers.

These and other measures will reinforce the increasing commitment by employers to training, demonstrated by the substantial growth in recent years in the number of employees receiving training shown by the labour force survey.

Job Interviews

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to amend the rules for covering the cost of the unemployed travelling for job interviews to take account of seasonal jobs lasting less than 12 months.

Mr. Jackson: The travel-to-interview scheme aims to secure permanent jobs for unemployed people by improving the match, in the economy, between labour supply and demand, encouraging unemployed people to apply for jobs beyond daily travelling distance which they would not otherwise have considered. It is through focusing the scheme on permanent jobs that I believe the greatest impact can be obtained from the resources available and I do not therefore think it right to change the rules so as to bring seasonal jobs into scope.

Braille

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many braille terminals and printers for personal computers which can be operated on a stand-alone basis or linked as work stations to larger stations there are in his Department.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 22 January 1991]: My Department devolves much responsibility for purchasing equipment to individual managers. Comprehensive records are not kept centrally, so a definitive reply could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I can provide the following information.

There are three braille terminals and four braille printers for personal computers which can be operated on a stand-alone basis or linked to larger systems. In addition, there are at least 14 personal computers with attachments, such as speech synthesisers, which facilitate their use by visually handicapped staff.

My Department also provides other specialised equipment for use by visually handicapped staff but which does not involve the use of personal computers. This equipment includes devices for producing braille print.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC Funding

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in full the areas of Britain that are classified as (a) objective 1, (b) objective 2 and (c) objective 5b, as shown in the allocation of European regional development fund money; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The areas of the United Kingdom designated for objectives 1, 2 and 5(b) of the European Community structural funds are as follows:

Objective 1

Northern Ireland.

Objective 2

The Assisted Areas of Great Britain, except those designated for Objective 5(b) and the following travel-to-work areas (TTWAs)—Birmingham (part), Bridgend (part), Cardiff (part) Cinderford and Ross-on-Wye, Corby, Coventry and Hinckley (part), Dudley and Sandwell (part), Kidderminster, Sheffield (part) and Whitby.

The remainder of Greater Manchester; Nottingham City (UPA); Midlothian Local Authority District (LAD) and part of East Lothian LAD; and the following TTWAs: Alnwick and Amble, Alfreton and Ashfield (part), Burnley, Burton on Trent (part), Castleford and Pontefract, Chesterfield, Goole and Selby (part), Mansfield, Pendle, Retford, Stirling (part), Wakefield and Dewsbury, Whitehaven and Worksop.

Objective 5(b)

The Highlands and Islands Development Board area;

The intermediate areas of Galloway, comprising Stranraer, Newton Stewart and Stewartry TTWAs;

The counties of Dyfed, Powys and Gwynedd, excluding the assisted areas adjacent to West Glamorgan and Gwent —which are designated for Objective 2—and the part of the Conwy and Colwyn TTWA in Gwynedd;

The assisted areas of Devon and Cornwall.

The Commission is understood to be considering whether to review the objective 2 list, pursuant to regulation (EEC) No. 2052/88, article 9(6). The Government believe that there should be no changes to the list at present.

Office Furniture

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) why his Department has awarded its new Buckinham Palace road offices' furniture contract to a manufacturer outside the United Kingdom;

(2) what are his criteria for the awarding of office furniture contracts within his Department.

Mr. Leigh: My Department is concerned to buy goods and services which meet its specifications at the best price. In view of our treaty commitments to the EC and GATT, the country of origin could not be of primary concern in the assessment.

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the present economic situation in the office furniture manufacturing and supply industry.

Mr. Leigh: In recent years the office furniture manufacturing industry has expanded strongly. The performance of the industry in future will be influenced both by developments in the economy generally and by the extent to which it meets the needs of its customers.

Municipal Mutual Insurance Ltd.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department collects any statistics regarding the number of claims made by local authorities on behalf of their residents against Municipal Mutual Insurance Ltd., and the outcome of such claims.

Mr. Redwood: No. The return to my Department identifies the number of claims by class of business, but they are not analysed between types of policyholder.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he collects statistics about premium payments from local authorities to Municipal Mutual Insurance Ltd.

Mr. Redwood: No. The returns to my Department do not identify the source of premium payments.

Film Industry

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is Her Majesty's Government's policy for encouraging the film industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh: The Government provide annual support including £2 million for British Screen Finance Ltd., £1·75 million for the national film and television school and £75,000 for the Scottish production fund and are setting up the European co-production fund, with £5 million over the next three financial years. We also support the British Film Institute, the Scottish Film Council, the Arts Council's film activities in Northern Ireland and training. The Government participate in the European Community's EDIA programme and the audio-visual EUREKA programme.

Home Accident Surveillance System

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to publish the annual report on the home accident surveillance system.

Mr. Leigh: The annual report for 1988 has been published and I am placing copies in the Library of the House.

Engineering Steel Exports

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what figures he has available for the latest period for engineering steel exports; and what were the comparable figures one year previously.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 January 1991]: "Engineering steel" has no precise definition within United Kingdom product classifications. It has been approximated in the table by the tariff codes 72.13-72.15, 72.28.30 and 72.28.60:

Engineering Steel Exports

British Technology Group

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for each year since 1979 (a) the profits of British Technology Group and (b) the returns to the Exchequer from (i) profits, (ii) sales and (iii) levies.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 January 1991]: The profits before tax and the returns to the Exchequer from the National Enterprise Board and the National Research Development Corporation are shown in the tables.

[2] These items are dividends paid on the Board's PDC.

Notes:
1. The financial year end for the Board was changed from the 31 December to the 31 March in 1985. The figures for 1985 are therefore for a 15-month period. All other figures are for 12-month periods ending on 31 December until 1983 and on 31 March thereafter.
2. The last column Titled "Net (Payments to) receipts from HMG" are the net movements on Public Divident Capital (PDC) and Loans from the National Loans Fund (NLF). By 31 March 1987 the NEB had repaid all but £4,775·50 of its "PDC" and "NLF" funding.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all shares held by British Technology Group in private companies and (a) their original value when acquired and (b) their current value.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 January 1991]: The value of shares held and loans made by the National Development Corporation in private companies at 31 March 1990 are shown in the table. The National Enterprise Board's one live investment is 100 per cent. of the shares of Oakwood Loan Finance Ltd. which cost £1·5 million and are currently held at that value.

WALES

Corlan Housing Association

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to make a statement on the housing association consultancy and advisory service report into the causes of the collapse of the Corlan housing association.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 December.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will discuss with the chairman of Tai Cymru the housing association consultancy and advisory service report into the collapse of the Corlan housing association and Tai Cymru's approval under section 9 of the Housing Act 1980 of Corlan's acquisition of land from Helical Bar Ltd. in 1988-89;

(2) if he will discuss with the chairman of Cardiff Bay development corporation his role in the financial collapse of the Corlan housing association.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I have not discussed these matters with the chairmen and I assume that the hon. Gentleman is not seeking to ascribe responsibility for the financial collapse of Corlan to the chairman of the CBDC. The Department will naturally be consulting Housing for Wales and Cardiff Bay development corporation before we make a statement.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether he has issued any new guidelines to Tai Cymru on the method of monitoring land acquisitions and disposals by Welsh housing associations under section 9 of the Housing Act 1980;

(2) what representations he has had from housing associations regarding the system of monitoring by Tai Cymru of land acquisitions and disposals in Wales under section 9 of the Housing Act 1980;

(3) if he has discussed with the chairman of Tai Cymru the reasons for its approval under section 9 of the acquisition of land by Corlan housing association from Helical Bar Ltd., in 1988-89;

(4) what consultations he has had with the chairman of Tai Cymru regarding the court injunction it applied for against the HTV Wales "This Week" programme on the collapse of the Corlan housing association.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I have had no such discussions. Housing associations do not require the consent of Housing for Wales to acquire land where they do so without the benefit of housing association grant. Section 9 of the Housing Act 1980 refers to a secure tenant's right to mortgage under the right-to-buy provisions. The hon. Gentleman presumably intends to refer to section 9 of the Housing Associations Act 1985: the consent of Housing for Wales is required to any disposition of land by a registered housing association. Taking out a mortgage on land constitutes a disposition.

I understand that the Corlan housing association entered into a contract to buy the land referred to in November 1989. The association was under no legal obligation to seek Housing for Wales's approval of this acquisition and did not do so. At the end of January 1990 the association applied to Housing for Wales for section 9 consent to take out a mortgage on the land it had already purchased.

I have received no representations from housing associations relating to the granting of consents by Housing for Wales for the disposition of land under section 9 of the Housing Associations Act 1985. In May 1990 Housing for Wales substantially revised its internal procedures for handling those applications for section 9 consent that do not form part of an application for housing association grant. No new guidelines have been issued to Housing for Wales in this matter. As to the future, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 17 December.

Housing for Wales was not a party to the injunction to which the hon. Gentleman refers.

Lowland Farmers

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he proposes to take in order to assist lowland farmers in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I recognise the importance of lowland farmers in the structure of Welsh agriculture. I will continue to seek to ensure that these farmers, along with others, are able to compete effectively and on equal terms with their counterparts elsewhere in the Community.

Beef Sector

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many beef cows there are in Wales; what were the corresponding figures for the last five years; and if he will make a statement about future prospects for the beef sector.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

Number of beef cows in Wales at June:

Year	Number
1990	203,912
1989	194,266
1988	182,267
1987	178,769
1986	172,931
1985	174,586

Note: Figures are for both main and minor holdings.

The beef market continues to be underpinned by the special intervention arrangements at a cost of some £8 million a week currently; the suckler cow premium has been extended to include small milk producers, and producers in the less-favoured areas will benefit from the increase in the rate for 1991 which is at the maximum level permitted by the EC; and beef producers will also continue to benefit from the higher rate of beef special premium following the green pound devaluation agreed at last year's price-fixing.

Steel Industry (Job Losses)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many jobs were lost in the steel industry in Wales between 1979 and 1984.

Mr. David Hunt: Comprehensive information detailing separately the number of jobs lost or created in the industry are not available. Combined data from the British Steel Corporation and the Iron and Steel Statistics Bureau show that there were 55,000 jobs in the steel industry in Wales at the end of December 1979. In 1984 the figure was 22,000.

THE ARTS

Greater London Arts Association

30. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he intends to meet the interim board of the Greater London Arts Association to discuss the future of the arts in London.

Mr. Renton: I have no plans at present to meet the governing committee of Greater London Arts to discuss the administration of arts funding in London.

Regional Exhibitions

31. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister for the Arts what funds have been earmarked by his office to help regional arts organisations to promote and organise touring exhibitions of paintings and sculpture drawn from permanent collections.

Mr. Renton: Government support for the promotion of organised touring exhibitions is channelled through the travelling exhibitions unit of the Museums and Galleries Commission and the visual arts department of the Arts Council. The MGC travelling exhibitions unit and the Arts Council visual arts departments are expected to spend £210,000 in the current financial year.

Enhancement Fund

32. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what guidelines he gave to the Arts Council for the use of the new enhancement fund.

Mr. Renton: The Government set out the overall objectives of the enhancement fund. These were to strengthen leading arts organisations and enhance further their current high standards, and at the same time to improve business and financial planning and to provide challenge, where appropriate, for matching funds from other sources. I subsequently approved the detailed criteria that the Arts Council proposed to use in deciding upon the allocation of awards to individual organisations.

35. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what guidelines he gave to the Arts Council for the use of the enhancement fund among clients of the Greater London Arts association.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave earlier to a question from the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes). The criteria that the Arts Council applied to clients of Greater London Arts were the same as those that I approved for general application.

Music Hall

34. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has any plans to encourage financial support out of public funds for music hall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I understand that the Arts Council, through which Government funds for the performing arts are channelled, has no specific plans to provide funds for music hall. The Arts Council knows that it has a very small but devoted following and, together with the regional funding bodies, will consider any individual applications for financial support.

National Railway Museum

36. Mr. Adley: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he intends to visit the national railway museum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I hope to visit the national railway museum in York in the near future. I met the keeper of the national railway museum during an enjoyable and informative visit I made to the science museum in South Kensington on 17 January.

CIVIL SERVICE

Executive Agencies

37. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement on progress under the Government's "next steps" agency initiatives.

Mr. Renton: The "next steps" initiative continues to make excellent progress; 34 agencies have now been established, and we expect that number to rise to 50 by this summer. By the end of the year we expect that "next steps" will apply to about half the civil service.

Trade Unions

39. Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he next intends to meet the leaders of civil service trade unions to discuss morale.

Mr. Renton: I intend to follow the practice of my predecessors and meet civil service trades union representatives as appropriate.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he last met the leaders of trade unions representing the civil service to discuss changes to civil service conditions of work and employment.

Mr. Renton: I have not yet met the civil service trade union leaders to discuss civil service issues. I shall, of course, do so as appropriate. I did, however, meet representatives of the Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists on Monday 21 January for discussions on heritage funding issues and the national museums and galleries.

SCOTLAND

Fishing

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, with port of registration, the Scottish-registered fishing vessels affected by the eight-day tie-up rule; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not appropriate to publish what would be regarded as commercially sensitive information about individual fishing vessels. However, the skippers, or agents, of all active Scottish-based licensed fishing vessels have been informed individually by letter issued by the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department on 16 January whether or not, on the basis of the Departments' records, their vessel is expected to be affected by the new regime. The table shows the estimated number of vessels affected by the scheme based in each fishery district.

Manufacturing GDP

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the provisional estimate for (a) 1988 and (b) 1989 of Scotland's contribution to the United Kingdom manufacturing gross domestic product, excluding continental shelf.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The table shows the estimated gross domestic product for manufacturing industries at factor cost in current prices for Scotland and the United Kingdom for 1988 and 1989. The continental shelf makes no contribution to the gross domestic product of manufacturing industries.

Foxes

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will provide a breakdown of moneys allocated to Scottish fox destruction clubs since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

1979-80	20,633
1980-81	17,084
1981-82	22,071
1982-83	25,079

1988-89	47,649
1989-90	58,981
1990-91	[1]47,000

[1] estimated.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will give consideration to the research of Dr. Ray Hewson of Aberdeen university on fox control when allocating funds to fox destruction clubs in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend is currently considering the report of Dr. Hewson's research and reactions to it which he has received. He will make his views known once his consideration of the report and of further material promised in it has been completed.

Salmon

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instruct the Salmon Advisory Committee to make an assessment of criteria for sufficient salmon returning to spawn in Scottish rivers and to draft guidelines for the proper management of net fisheries in rivers and estuaries and publish that information for the guidance of all concerned with the implementation of section 39 of the Salmon Act 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. The review of east coast salmon netting is being undertaken by Fisheries Ministers. Work on the review is being completed. It is hoped to present the report to Parliament, as required by section 39 of the Salmon Act 1986, shortly.

The Salmon Advisory Committee has a full programme of work on other matters.

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to reduce the waiting list of those patients awaiting heart bypass surgery in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since central funding began in 1983, the number of heart bypass operations performed in Scotland has increased from 853 to 1,500 by December 1989. Between January and September 1990 1,074 heart bypass operations were carried out—the latest available information. This financial year, the three health boards involved have received £15·7 million for cardiac surgery services—£9·5 million to Greater Glasgow, £4·9 million to Lothian and £1·3 million to Grampian. Aberdeen royal infirmary is being funded to enable it to increase its throughput from an initial level of around 50 patients a year to 300 a year by 1992. This year Greater Glasgow health board has received an additional allocation of £467,000 from the waiting list fund initiative specifically to treat an extra 80 cardiac surgery patients.

On 24 January I announced a further increase in funding for the systematic expansion of the Scottish cardiac surgery programme, as the Government will provide £374,470 more to Lothian health board for this purpose during 1990-91. Having carried out 579 open heart operations in the first nine months of 1990-91, the board is well on its way to meeting its target for the year. This additional funding will further enhance the work at the royal infirmary of Edinburgh and contribute to an even better performance to reduce waiting times for surgery.

The new centre to provide heart transplant surgery to be established in 1991-92 at the royal infirmary, Glasgow, which I announced on 14 January, will be a valuable addition to services already being provided in the field of cardiac surgery. It will have the capacity to carry out not only heart transplants but other cardiac procedures.

Sheltered Placement Scheme

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the level of expenditure on the sheltered placement scheme for each of the Scottish regional councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information about local authority expenditure on sheltered placements is not held centrally. However, the Employment Service contributes 75 per cent. of the cost to local authorities of providing sheltered employment. On the basis of claims made by regional and islands councils the Employment Service has estimated its contribution to the cost of providing sheltered placements in 1989-90, the latest year for which data are available. Details set out exclude data in respect of Borders regional council which has yet to submit details of its claim for support in respect of 1989-90.

Orkney	13,000
Shetland	25,000
Western Isles	16,000

Given the grant rate these sums can be taken as representing three quarters of total expenditure on sheltered placements by the authorities concerned. The balance of each authority's expenditure on sheltered employment will be expenditure on sheltered workshops.

Nurses

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, under Project 2000, the students' rostered service contribution is supernumerary or part of the standard services manpower.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Project 2000 students will be supernumerary throughout their three-year training, but will be required to deliver a rostered service contribution which will normally amount to 1,000 hours and take place in the third year of the programme.

Lithotripsy

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals there are for a lithotripsy service in the west of Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish lithotripsy service is operated by Lothian health board at the Deaconess hospital in Edinburgh and treats patients referred from all over Scotland and the north of England. Demand for treatment from within Scotland would not justify the establishment of a second centre at this time.

School Catchment Areas

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to education authorities on parental rights when school catchment areas are subject to rezoning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In terms of the Education (Publication and Consultation Etc.) (Scotland) Regulations 1981, education authorities are required to publicise and to consult parents and other interested parties on any proposals to amend a school's delineated area.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list his powers to determine school catchment areas; what advice he has given to education authorities in this respect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has no such powers, nor has he offered advice to education authorities on this matter.

Sandeels

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the existing monitoring programme of sandeels will continue during any proposed closure of the Shetland sandeel fishery and following any subsequent reopening of the fishery.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Continued monitoring of this stock by present methods and at the present level cannot be justified by comparison with other priorities in the maritime laboratory's research programme. If, following consultation, the fishery remains closed and stocks subsequently show signs of recovery, the case for monitoring will be reassessed.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration has been given by his Department to the duration of any proposed closure of the Shetland sandeel fishery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: While a final decision on the management arrangements for the Shetland sandeel fishery in 1991 is subject to consultation with interested parties, a consultation paper issued on 24 December 1990 proposes that the fishery be closed until spawning stock levels recover. It is not possible to predict how long this will take.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to make financial provision to enable those recently engaged in the Shetland sandeel fishery to convert to fishing alternative stocks during the proposed closure of the fishery.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. Those fishing vessels normally involved in the Shetland sandeel fishery already fish for other species.

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the right hon. Member for Hertfordshire, North may expect to receive an answer to his letter dated 28 September 1990 concerning sandeel fishing.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 23 January 1991]: Further to my reply of 23 January, we have now received a copy of the right hon. Member's letter and my noble Friend Lord Strathclyde replied today.

Education Spending

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the financial consequences of his discussions on capital spending limits for education authorities announced in his revenue support statement on 17 January.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Final decisions on the distribution of the available resources have still to be taken. Authorities will be informed within the next few weeks of their capital consent allocations for 1991-92 and the two subsequent years.

New Primary Schools

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he applies to authorising the construction of new primary schools in urban areas; what advice he has given to education authorities in this respect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Decisions on the provision of new schools are for the education authorities. They must consider any proposals on their individual merits and my right hon. Friend has issued no guidance to authorities on the criteria they should apply.

Medical Compensation

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the amount of money paid by each of the health boards in 1990 in relation to medical compensation cases; and what was the average award.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Given the small number of cases in certain health boards, it is not appropriate on the grounds of confidentiality to publish the information in the form requested. The total amount of compensation payments, including claimants' costs, for all boards in 1990 was £1,364,446 and the average award, including claimants' costs, was £17,953.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will list areas of Scotland which he has identified for future designation as environmentally sensitive areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A review of the environmentally sensitive area scheme is due to be completed in 1991. Meantime there are no plans to designate further areas in Scotland.

Environmental and Nature Conservation

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the terms of reference of the Scottish working group on education with regard to environmental and nature conservation matters.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have placed a copy in the Library of the House, together with a list of members of the group.

Alcohol and Drug Misuse

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the voluntary organisations which have received help to combat alcohol and drug misuse, in the last financial year, giving in each case the amounts given.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 December 1991]: Full details of the support given by health boards to local voluntary organisations concerned with alcohol and drug misuse are not held centrally. However, over £2 million was set aside in the health programme in 1989-90 specifically for the support of drug misuse services and a substantial proportion of this sum was used to support the work of voluntary organisations.

In addition, support was given to voluntary organisations concerned with alcohol and drug misuse from centrally held funds under section 16B of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978, section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 and the Local Government Grants (Social Need) Act 1969 (the urban programme). Details of assistance given under these provisions are as folllows:

Organisation	Amount (1989-90) £
Scottish Council on Alcohol	142,190
Scottish Drugs Forum	48,800
Drinkwise Orkney	13,360
Church of Scotland (Designated Place, Inverness)	6,750
Glasgow Council on Alcohol
(1) Barlinnie Addiction Project	10,522
(2) Hostels project	29,124
Ayrshire Council on Alcohol	63,444
Renfrew Council on Alcohol	38,229
Anchor House (Perth)	23,064
Aberdeen Council on Alcohol	50,995
Falkirk Drug and Solvent Abuse Project	16,015
Aberdeen Drugs Action Outreach Project	22,350
West Edinburgh Support Team	25,841
East End Drug Forum (Glasgow)	61,980
Inverclyde Drugline	43,879
St. Enoch's Drug Rehabilitation Programme	82,237
West Lothian Drug Education Project	24,898
Total	703,678

Postal Services

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will take steps to ensure that postal service names and areas and local government names and areas in Scotland are brought into alignment.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

Decisions concerning aspects of the day-to-day running of the Post Office, such as those relating to the designation of postal addresses and postcodes, are operational matters for the Post Office. It would not, therefore, be appropriate for me to comment on this matter in detail. However, I understand that postal addresses are sorting and routing instructions for the Post Office, allowing mail to reach its destination from any part of the country by the fastest and most economical route. They are not intended, therefore, to describe particular geographical locations, nor to correspond with geographical or political boundaries.

Outmigration

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total net civilian outmigration from Scotland in the 12 months ended June 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 14 January 1991 at column 427.

ENERGY

Energy Conservation

10. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has to strengthen his Department's energy conservation programme.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) earlier today.

British Coal Enterprise Ltd.

13. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the number of new job opportunities created by British Coal Enterprise Ltd. since 1984.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that British Coal Enterprise Ltd. has helped create some 68,000 new job opportunities, nationwide, since its inception in 1984.

20. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimated funding has been allocated to British Coal Enterprise Ltd. since 1984.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Since 1984 this Government have made available some £60 million to British Coal Enterprise Ltd. to assist it in its job creation activities.

Middle East Oil

14. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what contingency plans exist to safeguard and conserve oil supplies in the light of events in the middle east.

21. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to ensure the continued availability of petroleum products to retail customers in the context of the Gulf crisis.

Mr. Wakeham: There are ample supplies of oil at present. The United Kingdom maintains a range of contingency plans and is playing its full part in the measures announced by the International Energy Agency which are being reviewed by the governing board today.

UKAEA Police

15. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the work of the UKAEA police.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The latest annual report of the chief constable of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority constabulary was published in August 1990. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Miners' Strikes

16. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the level of output lost through industrial disputes in the coal industry in 1978-79; what was the level lost in 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The level of output lost through industrial disputes in the coal industry in 1978-79 was 1·5 million tonnes, and in 1989-90 was 600,000 tonnes.

Piper Alpha

17. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations have been held between his Department and interested parties following the publication of the report of the public inquiry into the Piper Alpha disaster.

Mr. Moynihan: Intensive discussions are proceeding with other relevant Government Departments about the transfer of responsibility for offshore safety to a new division of the Health and Safety Executive.

My right hon. Friend has met representatives of the AEU and I have met the UK Offshore Operators Association. In addition, the content and implications of Lord Cullen's report have been discussed in a number of more general meetings with various groups in the oil industry.

Gulf War (Ecological Consequences)

18. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his statement earlier this month on the possible environmental consequence of igniting the oilfields of Kuwait, whether any studies have been carried out by his Department on this matter.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department has consulted the Meteorological Office and has contributed appropriately to its study.

Electricity Generation

19. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy of how many independent electricity generation projects he has been made aware.

24. Mr. Ground: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy of how many independent electricity generation projects he has been made aware.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department is aware of around 20 major independent electricity generation projects which have been made public. My Department has also been advised, in confidence, of a number of other proposals, but it will be for the companies concerned to decide when to make public the details.

Coal Imports

22. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the amount of coal imported for electricity generation for the years 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We do not make such estimates.

27. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss the job implications for British Coal of the level of imports.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss coal imports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Unleaded Petrol

23. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the increase in market share of the sale of unleaded petrol in 1989; and what was the increase in other EC countries.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the increase in market share of the sale of unleaded petrol in 1989; and what were the figures in other EC countries.

Mr. Moynihan: The market share of unleaded petrol increased rapidly in the United Kingdom during 1989—from 4 per cent. in January to 28 per cent. by December, an overall market share of 19 per cent. for that year. The United Kingdom share has subsequently increased to 38 per cent. in December last year.

The United Kingdom Petroleum Industry Association estimates that in 1989 the market share of unleaded petrol in other European Community countries was as follows: West Germany 59 per cent., Denmark 57 per cent., Netherlands 37 per cent., Luxembourg 21 per cent., Belgium 19 per cent., Eire 7 per cent., France and Italy 2 per cent., and Spain and Portugal 0·5 per cent.,

Sales of unleaded petrol in Greece were negligible.

Rural Electricity Supply

26. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will meet the Director General of OFFER to discuss the supply of electricity to remote rural areas.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is a matter for the supply companies concerned, within their statutory and licence obligations. The director general is empowered to determine disputes over the terms or conditions of supply.

Gas Inspections

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will bring forward proposals to enable the Director General of OFGAS to ensure that no charges are levied on the consumer for action taken by British Gas officials inspecting domestic premises where there is a suspicion or risk of danger to the safety of the consumer.

Mr. Moynihan: No. British Gas is already obliged under its authorisation to make safe all gas escapes free of charge and to provide safety checks free of charge for older or disabled customers living alone.

British Coal

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he appointed a new chairman of British Coal; what terms of reference he gave him regarding the future of the industry; and what will be his yearly salary.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The new chairman of British Coal, Neil Clarke, was appointed from 1 January 1991. In accordance with the normal arrangements for nationalised industries his objectives are being agreed with him and these will be announced in the near future. Mr. Clarke's salary is £225,000 per annum. The appointment is not pensionable and his remuneration therefore includes an element in lieu of pension.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what licence fees have been paid in respect of the use of "Star Trek" copyright material used in the television advertising campaign for the flotation of the electricity generating companies of England and Wales; and to whom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The licensing arrangements entered into between Collett Dickenson & Pearce and Paramount Pictures are commercially confidential.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy for what part the licence fees for the use of the "Star Trek" copyright in the advertising campaign for the flotation of the generating companies of England and Wales have accounted in the total costs of that advertising campaign.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The licensing arrangements are commercially confidential. It is not Government policy to give advertising budgets in advance of flotations. All expenditure, including marketing, will be reported to Parliament in the usual way.

Sizewell Computer Software

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with, and representations from, the chairman of Nuclear Electric regarding the impact of developments in respect of the Controbloc P20 computer software system for the external financing limit in respect of the Sizewell B nuclear power station.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Difficulties with the Controbloc P20 computer software system have only recently arisen as a result of a review by Electricité de France (EDF). Whilst this is a matter for Nuclear Electric plc, I am advised that NE is currently reviewing the position with a view to ensuring that there is no impact on the overall construction schedule for Sizewell B.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's definition, by category, of renewable energies; and if he will list separately, by category, the ways in which the Government's recent legislation will assist each, financially and through statute.

Mr. Moynihan: Energy Paper 55 published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in 1988, copies of which are in the Libraries of both Houses, lists renewable energy technologies by economic classification. Those electricity generation technologies which are close to commercial application such as landfill gas, waste incineration, wind and hydroelectricity are eligible for contract at an above-market price under the non-fossil fuel obligation. Procedures are in hand to make the second non-fossil fuel obligation renewables order later this year.

HEALTH

Ambulance Services

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his written answer of 21 January concerning response times for emergency ambulance services, if he will state the standards applicable to Greater London (a) before and (b) after the relaxations there mentioned.

Mr. Dorrell: Since 1974 the response standards applicable to the area covered by the London ambulance service have been:

Percentile	Minutes
95	14

Under the new classification the 50 percentile time is 8 minutes; the 95 percentile time is unchanged.

Blood Donations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the percentage by gender of blood donated over a similar period (a) up to the Gulf war and (b) since the Gulf war.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when guidance will be issued on the powers and duties of local authorities to charge for personal social services; and which organisations he will be consulting.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Appropriate guidance on the powers and duties of local authorities in relation to charging for personal social services will be issued well before local authorities take over full responsibilities for community care in April 1993. Local authorities will be consulted before such guidance is issued.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to bring forward legislation to remove the responsibility for personal social services from local government.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to do so.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what body will become responsible for the purchase of health services within the area of each of the district health authorities in England listed in his answer of 21 January becoming a trust on an all-authority basis in April 1992.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In all districts, district health authorities will be the purchasers of hospital and community health services for their residents. Where they exist, GP fund holders will have responsibility for purchasing a prescribed range of medical services for their patients.

Fluoride

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has about reduction in dental decay as a result of the addition of fluoride to drinking water.

Mr. Dorrell: Evidence in this country of the efficacy of fluoridation of drinking water is well documented. For example, two studies in 1987 compared samples of 14-year-old children in fluoridated south Birmingham and non-fluoridated Bolton and samples of five-year-old children in fluoridated Newcastle and non-fluoridated south Northumberland.

In the study of south Birmingham 32 per cent. of children there were shown to be free of caries compared with only 19 per cent. in Bolton. In the study of Newcastle and Northumberland 50 per cent. of the children in the fluoridated area were free of caries compared with only 32 per cent. in the non-fluoridated area. It was also found that in Northumberland 37 per cent. of the children had five or more carious teeth compared with only 16 per cent. in Newcastle.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has available on whether the adding of fluoride to drinking water represents any health risk to the individual.

Mr. Dorrell: There is no evidence to show that increasing the level of fluoride in drinking water to the optimum concentration of one part per million has any adverse effect upon health. This has been confirmed repeatedly by groups of scientific experts. Major reviews of the extensive scientific literature have been undertaken by the World Health Organisation, the Canadian Public Health Association, the US National Academy of Sciences, the Australian National Health and Medical Research Council.

The safety of fluoridation of water supplies has been reviewed by the Royal College of Physicians, the DHSS working party on fluoridation of water and cancer and the Government's independent expert medical and scientific advisory committees on mutagenicity and carcinogenicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment.

Abortion

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has issued any instructions about the provision of abortion in those districts which have reduced their abortion services;

(2) what plans he has for reducing geographical inequalities in the provision of abortion services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The level of gynaecological provision including abortion, like any other provision within the national health service, is decided by individual health authorities. The Government believe that such decisions are best taken locally in the light of authorities' first-hand knowledge of local needs and priorities and competing claims on resources.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the ratio of NHS to non-NHS abortions in each regional health area by place of usual residence for each year since 1985.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were paid for by the NHS under agency arrangements in 1988, 1989 and 1990, by place of usual residence; (a) in each regional health authority and (b) in each district health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: Information on terminations performed in individual district health authorities cannot be released on grounds of confidentiality. Data for terminations in regional health authorities are shown in the table. The latest full data year available is 1989.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of abortions for resident women of England and Wales carried out (a) in NHS premises, (b) by agency arrangements and (c) in the private sector in 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: The data are shown in the table. The latest full data year available is 1989.

Number of terminations by category of premises (a) NHS (b) private sector[1] (c) agency, England and Wales 1985-89 England and Wales residents

1989	70,722	90,541	9,200

[1] All non-NHS minus those performed under Agency arrangements.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions or advice his Department has issued to health authorities in the past 10 years on the provision of NHS abortion services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department discussed the findings of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists' report on late abortions in England and Wales in 1985 with regional general managers and regional medical officers and health authorities were encouraged to improve their administrative referral systems. The chief medical officer and chief nursing officer issue circulars and letters to all doctors and nursing officers about aspects of abortion treatment and care when appropriate.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the proportion of the cost of an NHS abortion accounted for by the legal requirement for two doctors to assess and certify a patient's eligibility under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not available in the form requested, but the estimated revenue cost of an abortion in NHS hospitals is £200.

Part III Accommodation

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) by social services authority and (b) for each of the last three years, the number of people on waiting lists for part III accommodation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for each local authority to determine in individual cases if residence in part III home is appropriate. Information about the number of people who approach local authorities seeking this type of care is not available centrally.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) by social services authority and (b) for each of the last three years (i) the average age of people in part III accommodation and (ii) the average age of people on admission to part III accommodation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information could be only partially obtained and then only at disproportionate cost.

Leicestershire Health Authority

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement on funding, through the Trent region, for the Leicestershire health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government announced on 16 January an increased initial allocation to Trent regional health authority for 1991-92 of 10·5 per cent. The regional health authority expects to be able to inform Leicestershire district health authority of its initial allocation for 1991-92 in a few weeks.

NHS Doctors

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of doctors employed by the national health service in each year since 1974.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is given in the following table.

National health service doctors in England

Year	All staff*
1974	49,107
1975	55,629
1976	57,167
1977	58,502
1978	60,001
1979	61,554
1980	63,130
1981	64,612
1982	65,991
1983	66,910
1984	67,282
1985	68,194
1986	68,839
1987	69,532
1988	70,995
1989	72,446

Notes to the table:
Figures relate to hospital and community health service medical staff holding permanent paid and honorary appointments as at 30 September each year and general medical practitioners as at 1 October each year.

Prior to 1975 comparable community health service medical staff figures are not available and are therefore not included. With the national health service reorganisation on 1 April 1974 the responsibility of this service was transferred from local authorities and the DES to the national health service.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average charge for dental treatment, in cash and constant prices, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows (in column 2) the average cash charges for dental treatment provided under general dental services in England in each financial year since 1979. The constant prices (in column 3) convert the cash prices to their 1989-90 equivalent.

Average dental charge paid by NHS patients paying the full proportion of the charge

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the proportion of dental treatment costs met by charges to patients in each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The proportion of the cost of dental treatment, provided under general dental services in England in each year since 1979, met by charges to patients was as follows:

Calendar year	Total cost	Amount paid by patients	Patient charge as a percentage of total cost
1979	303,684,708	63,393,432	20·87

1990	984,607,527	382,676,509	38·87

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which section is responsible within his Department for drafting the guidance for the implementation of the community care proposals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The community services division (branch 4) is responsible to Ministers for implementation of our community care proposals. This division prepared the policy guidance which was issued in November 1990, with extensive support from the social services inspectorate, social services and health managers and professionals and other outside experts. Individual items of practice guidance are being prepared by the social services inspectorate, practitioners and academic and consultancy experts. Each is prepared within the overall implementation framework and is approved by Ministers.

Eye Tests

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of sight tests undertaken in each of the last nine quarters.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statistics on NHS sight tests paid for by the general ophthalmic services are collected on a six-monthly basis. The figures for the latest available two years are as follows:

Great Britain	Sight tests paid for (millions)
April 1988—September 1988	6·641
October 1988—March 1989	7·754
April 1989—September 1989[1]	[2]3·828
October 1989—March 1990[1]	2·210
April 1990—September 1990[1]	[3]2·358

[1] After entitlement to NHS tests restricted to priority groups.
[2] Includes 1·8 million tests conducted before April 1989.
[3] Provisional.

Since 1 April 1989 many people who are not entitled to NHS sight tests (about two thirds of the population) have had private sight tests. The Department collects no figures relating to these tests: however, an independent NOP survey commissioned by the Department indicated that the total number of sight tests (private and NHS) during the first quarter of 1990 was at the level that could have been expected if trends up to 1987 had been projected forward.

NHS Spending

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) total NHS spending and (b) hospital and community health services' spending as a proportion of real national disposable income in each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Dorrell: The concept of "real national disposable income" is not used in United Kingdom national accounts. The table gives NHS and HCHS expenditure for the years requested as a proportion of United Kingdom gross domestic product.

Total NHS (UK) spending and hospital and community health services' spending as a percentage of personal disposable income

[1] New definition of HCHS expenditure which will be used in the forthcoming departmental report. Includes Family Health Services Authority administration, Disablement Services Authority and family health service cash-limited spending.

Health Authorities (Capital Charges)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish his initial estimates of the capital charges for each district health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not held centrally. Regional health authorities in England have supplied the following estimates of the capital charges they expect to receive from their directly managed units in 1991-92.

Region	Expected capital charges receipts (£000)
Northern	122,306

SOCIAL SECURITY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. Jack: The Department is committed to supporting the Government's initiative aimed at reducing consumption on the civil estate by 15 per cent. over the next five years. Performance measures have recently been introduced, and additional resources have been allocated to setting targets monitoring them and identifying opportunities for further investment. An allocation of £562,000 has been made for the financial year 1991-92, in addition to sums which will be spent as an integral part of building refurbishment and new construction projects. Particular attention is being given to boiler replacement and improvements to lighting using high-frequency, low-energy fluorescent and ultrasonic controls.

The Department appointed a full-time energy manager in 1987 and has since developed a number of initiatives to improve energy efficiency in the 1,000 buildings which we wholly or partially occupy. The main achievements have been:

—a staff publicity campaign, including a poster competition and features in the staff magazine, —over £100,000 invested in replacing tungsten lighting with compact fluorescent lighting, —over £100,000 invested in a variety of small scale initiatives including the installation of heating and lighting controls, false ceilings and high-efficiency fluorescent fittings.

Prior to April 1990, the Property Services Agency was responsible for maintenance of the Department's buildings and undertook the bulk of investment for energy efficiency improvements, for which figures are not available.

Over the four financial years 1986-87 to 1989-90, after adjustment for area, price and weather, energy consumption in the Department increased from £9·10 million to £10·09 million (an increase of 10·88 per cent.), with an increase of £1·12 million (12·49 per cent.) in 1989-90 over 1988-89. Within these figures consumption of boiler fuels declined by 12 per cent. over the four-year period. There was, however, a substantial increase in electricity consumption as a consequence of the introduction of the Department's operational strategy computerisation programme.

Although the Department of Energy has primary responsibility for providing advice and grants on energy efficiency, our Department is supporting the promotion of the home energy efficiency scheme launched on 1 January this year. The scheme is funded by the Department of Energy but administered by the neighbourhood energy action voluntary group. Posters and leaflets are to be made available in social security offices, and the Department's officers providing information and advice services will be made aware of this scheme.

Social Fund

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice he has issued to local offices in connection with the criteria for making community care grants for clothing to former prisoners other than those with illness or handicap; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Advice on making community care grants is issued to local offices in the form of guidance contained in the "Social Fund Manual", a copy of which is in the Library. It is for the social fund officer to decide on the merits of each individual application.

Child Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing (a) what percentage of public expenditure on child benefit goes to families with equivalent income below the mean and (b) what percentage of families receiving child benefit have equivalent incomes below the mean, after housing costs in both cases.

Mr. Jack: The proportion of families receiving child benefit with household incomes below the mean of equivalised income after housing costs has changed little since 1979 and remains in the region of 70 per cent. About 74 per cent. of total Government expenditure on child benefit went to these families.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider making applications for child benefit more widely available through post offices, citizens advice bureaux and other public places.

Mr. Jack: There are three different claim forms for child benefit; one for a first child, another for newly born subsequent children and a third for other children who join the family. These forms are available from any social security office on request by post, telephone or personal call. In addition, leaflet FB8 "Babies and benefits", which is widely available to expectant and nursing mothers, contains a coupon which can be used to obtain the appropriate form. These arrangements, which are kept under review, are intended to ensure that claimants receive the correct form.

Income Support

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each of his Department's offices in the Doncaster area (a) how many people in receipt of income support are having deductions made at source for community charge arrears and (b) how many people are having deductions made from income support for social fund loan repayments; and what is the number of people common to both (a) and (b).

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available information is as follows:

Deductions from income support

	Social fund recoveries	Community charge
Doncaster East	1,264	0
Wath on Dearne	1,155	0

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the population in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom, is dependent upon income support.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is as follows:

Percentage of the population dependent upon income support

	Per cent.
In Scotland	15·7
In Great Britain[1]	12·6

[1] Information for the United Kingdom is not available.

Scotland population figures: General Register Office.(Scotland).

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements are made for the payment of income support to individuals employed by companies which close down for holiday periods who receive no pay during such periods.

Miss Widdecombe: Income support is available to people who are on unpaid holiday only if they normally work, on average, fewer than 24 hours a week. Anyone on compulsory unpaid holiday, including a person who normally works 24 or more hours a week and does not have enough money to tide him over until his next payday may be able to get a social fund crisis loan, if this is the only means of avoiding serious risk to his health and safety.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals have qualified for community charge rebates in Chelmsford in the current financial year to the latest available date.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available, but at 30 November 1990 around 14,000 individuals were in receipt of community charge benefit in Chelmsford.

Source: Housing and Community Charge Benefit Management Information System November 1990 quarterly count of claims; and the Family Expenditure Survey-based analyses.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is, on the latest available figures, the number of claimants in receipt of (a) income support and (b) unemployment benefit, who are, at the same time, following an approved course under the 21 hours rule.

Miss Widdecombe: The rule enables unemployed claimants in receipt of income support to follow part-time education courses. The information requested is not available.

Social Fund

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the main purposes/items for which crisis loans were awarded from the social fund; and what is the average value of such loans.

Mr. Scott: Information relating to 1988-89 and 1989-90 is available in the Secretary of State's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library. Information relating to 1990-91 to 31 December is shown in the table.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the main purposes items for which budgeting loans were awarded from the social fund; and what is the average value of such loans.

Mr. Scott: Information relating to 1988-89 and 1989-90 is available in the Secretary of State's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library. Information relating to 1990-91 (to 31 December) is shown in the table.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of community care grants are paid to each of high, medium and low priority groups; and for what purposes the community care grants were paid in percentage terms for each category.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available for the number of grants paid as high, medium or low priorities.

The table shows the number and percentage of grants paid for the main types of purpose for April to December 1990. Information relating to 1988-89 and 1989-90 is contained in the Secretary of State's annual reports, which are in the Library.

Note: Percentages do not sum due to rounding.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will conduct a review of criteria used to allocate cold weather payments to consider additional factors including storm conditions and wind chill.

Mr. Scott: In consultation with the Meteorological Office, we have recently reviewed the working of the cold weather payments scheme and are satisfied that the most important factor in measuring cold weather is air temperature. It would be extremely difficult to incorporate additional factors such as storm conditions and wind chill into a scheme which is intended to be simple to operate and easy to understand.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will revise the requirements that temperatures remain below freezing for seven consecutive days in order to qualify for a cold weather payment.

Mr. Scott: No. The scheme gives extra help towards higher heating costs resulting from a sustained period of cold weather. A period of seven consecutive days where the average daily temperature is 0 deg. C (freezing point) or below is a reasonable indication of this.

Gulf Crisis

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what benefits will be available to service men injured during the Gulf war; and for war widows and their dependants.

Miss Widdecombe: Service men who are injured as a result of the hostilities in the Gulf, and the widows and dependants of those who die as a result of service, will be eligible for pensions and allowances in accordance with the normal provisions of the armed forces pension schemes, administered by the Ministry of Defence and the war pensions scheme, administered by this Department. They may also be eligible for social security benefits.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is yet in a position to announce how housing benefit transitional payments will be treated in April.

Miss Widdecombe: We have made it clear from the beginning that housing benefit transitional payments will be reduced as increases in other benefits make them less necessary. We have decided on a flat rate reduction of £3 in these payments from April. The vast majority of recipients will still gain overall in cash terms from the uprating as other social security benefits are being increased by amounts significantly larger than in April 1990.

Single Parents

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total benefit entitlement of an unemployed single parent with two children aged under five years.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 14 January 1991]: On the assumption that the qualifying conditions for each benefit are met and the entitlement to each is taken up, the benefit of an unemployed lone parent with two children aged under five years would be made up of child benefit, one-parent benefit and income support. The income support would be calculated as follows:

Applicable amounts	£
Adult personal allowance	36·70
Child's personal allowance	12·35
Child's personal allowance	12·35
Family premium	7·35
Lone parent premium	4·10
	72·85
Less income
Child Benefit (2 × £7·25)	14·50
One Parent Benefit	5·60
Income Support payable	52·75

The lone parent would also be entitled to housing benefit to meet any eligible rent and community charge benefit to cover 80 per cent. of the community charge. Those who are owner-occupiers may receive help with mortgage interest payments through income support.

The children would also be eligible for free welfare foods assumed to be worth £2·10 per child per week.

Families on income support also get extra help by virtue of their automatic entitlement (passport) to free prescriptions, exemption from dental and optical charges and help with patients' fares to hospital.

Income Maintenance Benefits

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provisions exist for employees to receive income maintenance benefits during a period of compulsory unpaid holidays at their place of work; and how many people are affected by them.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 17 January 1991]: People who normally work fewer than 24 hours a week can claim income support, or an increase in income support if it is already in payment, during a period of compulsory unpaid holiday. For those people who are normally working 24 hours or more a week and have a dependent child, family credit is available. Family credit is awarded for 26 weeks and remains in payment if an unpaid holiday falls within the period of the award. Information about the number of people affected is not available.

War Widows

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what will be the percentage increase in April in the combined value of children's allowance and child benefit payable to a war widow for the first child and each subsequent child in the family;

(2) whether war widows will benefit from the £1 increase in child benefit in April;

(3) what was the combined value of children's allowance and child benefit for the child of a war widow at current and April 1990 prices and as a percentage of average earnings, in November 1979 and as a percentage of average earnings, in November 1979 and at each subsequent uprating date; and what was the reason for any fall in real value since November 1979; and

(4) what method is used to calculate the annual uprating of war widows' children's allowance, and whether it has changed since 1979.

Mr. Jack: The present method of operating war widows' children's allowance follows that established by the last Labour Government. This method entails increasing the basic war widows' children's allowance by the increase in the retail prices index, deducting any cash increase in child benefit and adding an amount of £1·86 which was added as a transitional measure in 1977 by way of compensation to war widows for the loss of their tax allowance during the phasing in of child benefit.

War widows will receive the proposed £1 increase in child benefit in April. Like other child dependency increases payable under the Social Security Act 1975, the method of uprating war widows' children's allowance entails deducting any cash increase in child benefit. Thus, from April, these allowances will be increased to £13·65 for the first qualifying child and to £14·65 for others, representing an overall cash increase of £1·25 for each child. The percentage overall increase in April for both the first and each subsequent child will be 6·05 per cent.

Children's allowances are only one element of support for war widows and their families. Since 1979 several important improvements have been made to the overall position of war widows. In 1979 war widows' pensions were made tax free; in 1984 a new tier of age allowance was introduced for those over 80; in 1988 the disregard on war pensions for income-related benefits was increased to £5 and to £10 in 1990. In 1990 pre-1973 war widows were awarded special payments of £40 a week. These, too, were tax free and are also totally disregarded for the purpose of calculating entitlement to income-related benefits. Both war widows' children's allowances and war widows' pensions have consistently been set at preferential rates compared to those applicable to national insurance widows and children.

Since 1983 pensions and social security benefits have been uprated annually in line with the retail price index.

The table shows values of children's allowance and child benefit for the child of a war widow at current and April 1990 prices and as a percentage of average earnings.

[4] The source of the earnings is the New Earnings Survey and the estimates used up to November 1982 are those for full-time working adults aged 21 and over whose earnings are unaffected by absence. From November 1983 the source remains the New Earnings Survey but is in respect of all full-time workers on adult rates whose earnings are unaffected by absence.

War Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to reduce and end the war pensions welfare service and the homecraft service.

Miss Widdecombe: There is absolutely no question of withdrawing the war pensioners' welfare service and we shall certainly not agree to anything that would damage the interests of war widows and war pensioners. The report of a routine management review of the war pensioners welfare service last year suggested no changes in the number of chief welfare officers and welfare officers, but recommended some reductions in the number of support staff and the withdrawal of the homecraft service. No decisions have been taken on these recommendations. The central advisory committee on war pensioners is being consulted about them and has agreed that a joint working party on which war pensioners' interests will be represented, should be set up to review the aims and future of the homecraft service. There will be further consultation with the central advisory committee about the welfare service later this year.

DEFENCE

Electoral Registration

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure that service men are given equal voting opportunities with the rest of the electorate.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The electoral registration arrangements for service personnel allow those in the United Kingdom to vote in person, by post or by proxy at parliamentary and local government elections. Service personnel based overseas, like other British citizens living overseas, may vote only by proxy at parliamentary elections. All new recruits are advised of the service electoral registration arrangements and service personnel are regularly reminded of their existence to encourage them to register so that they can exercise their right to vote.

Gas Masks

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which company was awarded the contract to provide gas masks for British troops in Iraq.

Mr. Alan Clark: None. Masks have been provided from stock for troops in the Gulf.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the filter on the gas masks issued to British troops contains any asbestos.

Mr. Alan Clark: The filter on the respirator used by British service men does not contain any asbestos.

Gulf War (Reporting)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines were issued to BBC Radio in England and Wales for reporting of matters concerning the conflict in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Two types of guidelines have been produced. The MOD "Media Ground Rules" have been issued to British journalists in the Gulf, and "Guidance on the Release of Information" has been issued to media editors in the United Kingdom. Copies of both these documents were placed in the Libraries of both Houses on 9 January.

Irradiated Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields on 17 January, Official Report, column 546, what estimates he has about the costs of irradiated food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is estimated that irradiation of food would increase the cost of processed food by between 5p and 15p per kilogram, dependent on the type of food to be processed. Given the competitive tendering methods the MOD applies to the procurement of food, it is unlikely that MOD would purchase irradiated food, as it would generally be more expensive than food processed by conventional means.

Gulf War

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those units on standby for the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has already announced the deployment of the first battalion, Coldstream Guards to the Gulf to undertake prisoner handling duties. They will be assisted in their duties by two additional battalions, from the Royal Highland Fusiliers and the Kings Own Scottish Borderers, who will deploy shortly. We are also deploying a half squadron of Buccaneer aircraft from RAF Lossiemouth to enhance allied precision bombing capability. Any additional deployments of forces to the Gulf will be announced as appropriate when they arise.

Military Hospitals

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the nursing establishment of each of the military hospitals in the United Kingdom; and how many vacancies there are in the establishment, at what grades;

(2) what is the total number of nurses employed in military hospitals in the United Kingdom and at what grades.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names and locations of all military hospitals in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are eight service hospitals in the United Kingdom which are located at:

Name	Location
Royal Naval Hospital, Haslar	Gosport, Hants
Royal Naval Hospital, Stonehouse	Plymouth
Cambridge Military Hospital	Aldershot, Hants.
Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital	Woolwich, London
Duchess of Kent Military Hospital	Catterick, Yorks.
The Princes of Wales (RAF) Hospital, Ely	Ely, Cambridgeshire
The Princess Mary's RAF Hospital, RAF Halton	Halton, Bucks.
Princess Alexandra Hospital, RAF Wroughton	Wroughton, Wilts.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many agency nurses have been employed in military hospitals in the last five years for which information is available; and what were the costs of doing so.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Written Answers to Questions

TRANSPORT

A1

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what timescale is envisaged for the widening of the A1 between the north end of the motorway at Birtley and the south end of the Newcastle western bypass; and what areas of land and property will be affected.

Mr. Chope: The next key stage in the Department's preparation of the A1 Gateshead western bypass improvement is a public consultation which is currently planned to take place in 1992.

The area of land and property affected is not yet known.

East London Crossing

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to make a statement on the east London river crossing bridge.

Mr. Chope: The public inquiries into the design of the proposed bridge closed on 8 January. We are now awaiting the inspector's report. A decision will be announced as soon as the report has been received and considered.

Hazardous Loads

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of accidents involving the rail transportation of hazardous and inflammable materials that have taken place within a 50 mile radius of Doncaster, for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Chope: I regret that this information is not available in the form requested.

Parking Schemes

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice his Department gives to local authorities about resident only parking schemes.

Mr. Chope: The most recent published guidance is in Department of Transport circular 6/86 and in the publication "Roads and Traffic in Urban Areas" of which the Department and the Institution of Highways and Transportation are joint sponsors. The former deals with specific changes made by the Road Traffic Regulation (Parking) Act 1986; the latter gives more general guidance on the sort of schemes which may be appropriate and the factors to be taken into account in deciding on them.

Trains

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trains operating or which it is planned to operate, in Scotland, were built (a) before 1950, (b) before 1956, (c) before 1960 and (d) before 1965.

Mr. McLoughlin: Neither the Department of Transport nor Her Majesty's railway inspectorate holds comprehensive information on construction dates for railway rolling stock.

Merchant Navy Reserve

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current strength of the Merchant Navy Reserve; and how many of its members are now on service in the Gulf.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Merchant Navy Reserve is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Transport, and I have been asked to reply.

The current strength of the Reserve is 301. None of its members have been called out for service in the Gulf, but it is understood that one of them happens to be serving on a ship in the area.

Airports

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with airport authorities generally, and Manchester in particular, in the light of events in the Gulf.

Mr. McLoughlin: Ever since the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait the Department has kept in close touch with the industry, including airport representatives, about the development of contingency plans to enhance aviation security as appropriate in the light of events. The measures provided for in those plans in the event of hostilities breaking out were brought into effect on 17 Janaury at Manchester as at other United Kingdom airports.

Consultations have also take place with representatives of various airports, including Manchester, about their handling Government charter flights connected with the emergency.

Blackwater Valley Relief Road

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to provide the necessary funding for the completion of the Blackwater Valley relief road southern and central sections.

Mr. Chope: The Blackwater Valley route is being supported with transport supplementary grant and-or credit approvals as appropriate. That support will be maintained through to completion subject to satisfactory progress and the continued availability of funds. The allocation of supplementary credit approvals to Surrey county council in respect of the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 is being reviewed.

Clapham Train Crash

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to expedite the compensation due from British Rail to the widow of one of the constituents of the right hon. Member for Worthing whose husband was killed in the Clapham train crash; and if he will raise the matter when he next has a discussion with British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: Compensation is a matter for British Rail and ultimately the courts. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no powers to intervene in individual cases, but will certainly discuss the general progress of claims when he next meets the chairman of British Rail.

Coastguard

Mr. Barry Field (Isle of Wight): To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has made any recent review of the role or functions of Her Majesty's coastguard.

Mr. McLoughlin: An internal review of the coastguard sector organisation and Auxiliary service has been carried out by the chief coastguard. The review has considered Her Majesty's coastguard's coastal commitments and has made recommendations covering:

the definition of HM Coastguard's responsibilities;
performance targets;
the sector organisation and the sector officers' role;
the availability and pay of auxiliary Coastguards;
Coastguard vehicles and equipment requirements, training and property management.

Government Departments and any interested bodies are currently being consulted and coastguard regional controllers will now be holding discussions with local interests and staff about the implications of these recommendations in each region. No decisions will be taken on the review's recommendations until the implications have been fully assessed. I am placing a copy of a summary of the review and its recommendations in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Alphachloralose

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any proposals to re-classify alphachloralose; and whether he intends to revoke the approval of phosgen for specific uses.

Mr. Maclean: From 1 March it will be illegal to use alphachloralose as a pesticide unless it is incorporated as an approved product. The Advisory Committee on Pesticides has also recommended that alphachloralose should be moved from part II to part I of the poisons list, thereby making it available only through retail pharmacies.

I am not aware of phosgen, but the approval for sale and supply of phosdrin 24, a pesticide with active ingredient mevinphos, was revoked last September on the advice of the ACP. The storage and use of this product will be prohibited from September 1992.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of individual grant recipients in each environmentally sensitive area; what is the estimated total number of those eligible to receive grant in each environmentally sensitive area; and what is the total amount of grant paid out thus far under the scheme in each environmentally sensitive area.

Mr. Curry: The table shows the number of agreements with farmers in each ESA, together with the total sums payable under each scheme at 31 December 1990. Some farmers have a number of agreements. There are no reliable estimates of the number of farmers in each ESA.

ESA	Number of agreements at 31 December 1990	Total amounts payable up to 31 December 1990 £
Breckland	139	1,160,000
Broads	712	5,650,000
North Peak	77	1,890,000
Pennine Dales	290	3,330,000
Shropshire Borders	215	1,520,000
Somerset Levels and Moors	745	2,840,000
Suffolk River Valleys	396	2,300,000
South Downs	183	1,560,000
Test Valley	20	70,000
West Penwith	159	1,260,000
Total	2,936	21,580,000

Crayfish

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when first his Department received advice from the Nature Conservancy Council about the danger to native crayfish stocks from the spread of crayfish plague by the introduction of American signal crayfish; and what action he has since taken in response to this.

Mr. Curry: Officials first received advice from the Nature Conservancy Council in 1977. Crayfish plague was officially confirmed in the United Kingdom in 1983, but it is probable the infection had already been present in our waters since the mid-1970s and that this was linked to the import of American signal crayfish. Such introductions preceded legislation to control, inter alia the import, keeping and release of non-native species of freshwater shellfish. Crayfish plague has now been detected in many of our river systems with crayfish populations. Our scientific advice is that eradication would be very difficult to accomplish. Nonetheless, we are continuing to discuss with the Nature Conservancy Council and the National Rivers Authority the feasibility of means of safeguarding native crayfish stocks in those areas at present free of crayfish plague. The Department is also funding scientific work on diagnostic methods.

Beef Sector

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to help beef calf producers; and if he will make a statement regarding their future prospects.

Mr. Curry: In recognition of problems faced by beef calf producers, the Ministry has, as announced on 28 September 1990, increased suckler cow premium payments in the current year by £8 million, the rate of premium in less favoured areas is now at the maximum rate payable under EC rules and that for lowlands has been maintained at its current level despite an increase in the amount of eligible stock.

"This Common Inheritance"

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking in discussions with the European Commission to honour the Government's commitment in "This Common Inheritance," paragraph 7.20.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Minister will continue to urge the European Commission and colleagues in the Agriculture Council to ensure that environmental considerations are fully integrated in agricultural support measures.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for 29 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Gulf War

Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will make a statement on the current situation in the Gulf.

The Prime Minister: The allied air campaign is proceeding satisfactorily and continues to erode Iraq's military capability. The effectiveness of the campaign so far is amply demonstrated by the very few and unsuccessful deployments of the Iraqi air forces, but there is still some way to go before our aim of implementing United Nations Security Council resolutions can be achieved. We condemn Iraq's use of missiles in indiscriminate attacks against civilian populations in Israel and Saudi Arabia. We also deplore Iraq's wanton destruction of the environment of the middle east by deliberately pumping oil into the Gulf.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Prime Minister what co-ordination and consultation arrangements exist between allied Governments to ensure political control of the military forces engaged in the Gulf war.

The Prime Minister: The aims of the coalition forces are those laid down by the United Nations Security Council. Military forces in the coalition remain under the ultimate control of their national governments who are maintaining close contact with each other.

WALES

Higher Education

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Assembly of Welsh County Councils regarding the impact of the loss of top-up powers on the quality and quantity of public sector higher education in Welsh colleges.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We consult the Assembly of Welsh Counties and the Welsh joint education committee every year before deciding on the higher education quantum, the amount of local authority resources we consider is needed for the provision of higher education in the maintained institutions. The figure we proposed for 1991-92 has been agreed by the assembly and the WJEC. We have had no consultations on topping-up, which is a local matter determined by individual LEAs.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Assembly of Welsh County Councils regarding the implications of the Price Waterhouse report on the future of public sector higher education in Welsh colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: All Welsh LEAs have been consulted on the Price Waterhouse report both individually and collectively through the Wales advisory body for local authority higher education. An announcement on the recommendations of the report concerning the future status of the Polytechnic of Wales will be made shortly.

Student Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his most up-to-date estimate of the amount spent per head per full-time equivalent student in public sector higher education in Welsh colleges in the (a) current and (b) next financial year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The recurrent expenditure on higher education provision in Welsh local authority colleges is funded from three main sources. These are the higher education quantum determined annually by the Secretary of State and paid by LEAs from local authority resources, tuition fees paid through the mandatory awards system and "topping-up" payments paid by LEAs to their own colleges. The Department does not hold information on the level of topping-up payments, which are a local matter, but in some cases they are known to be significant. Recurrent expenditure at Trinity college Carmarthen, the only Welsh voluntary college, is funded by grant from the Welsh Office and tuition fees.

The amount of recurrent funding per full-time equivalent home and EC student in public sector higher education in Wales from the higher education quantum, Welsh Office grant and tuition fees is estimated at £3,335 in 1990-91 and £3,738 in 1991-92. These figures take no account of topping-up payments to recurrent expenditure in the local authority colleges and funding for capital expenditure, but cover all public sector higher education in Wales. In this respect they differ from equivalent information regarding the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council sector, which does not take account of local authority higher education provision in England.

Corlan Housing Association

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation regarding the references to the corporation in the HACAS report on the financial collapse of the Corlan housing association;

(2) what consultations he has had with the chairman of Tai Cymru and the Cardiff Bay development corporation regarding their discussions immediately prior to the financial collapse of the Corlan housing association.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 28 January.

South Glamorgan TEC

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funds he has allocated to the South Glamorgan training and enterprise council for the current financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: Funding for TECs is provided by the Secretary of State of Employment. South Glamorgan TEC has received £60,000 development funding this year and details of its operational budget for the remainder of the year are being finalised.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Expenditure, Harrow

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the per capita expenditure figures for primary and secondary schools in the London borough of Harrow, for the latest date available, of spending per pupil, and the relative figures at constant prices in 1979-80.

Mr. Fallon: Figures for nursery and primary schools are no longer collected separately. Harrow spent £465 per nursery and primary pupil in 1979-80 and £1,115 in 1988-89, the latest year for which figures are available. It spent £745 per secondary pupil in 1979-80 and £1,740 in 1988-89. At 1988-89 prices those figures are £880 and £1,115 respectively for nursery and primary schools, and £1,405 and £1,740 respectively for secondary schools.

Student Costs (Wales)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the unit costs per student for each of the university colleges in Wales for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the 1990 volume of "University Management Statistics and Performance Indicators," produced by the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and the Universities Funding Council, a copy of which is in the Library. This draws on 1988-89 data: detailed figures for university expenditure in 1989-90 are not yet available.

Student Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his most up-to-date estimate of the amount spent per head per full-time equivalent—FTE—student in public sector higher education colleges in England in the (a) current and (b) next financial year.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend announced his plans for spending on higher education on 8 November 1990 and published projections for student numbers in higher education on the same date. Recurrent public funding per FTE student in Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council funded institutions underlying the plans is £4,137 in the financial year 1991-92. The latest estimate for such funding in the financial year 1990-91 is £4,018. Total expenditure per student will depend on a number of additional factors on which information is not yet available.

Students

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many A-level entrants were (a) school students and (b) further education college students on the latest available figures.

Mr. Eggar: For the academic year 1988-89, the total number of A-level examination entries, including AS examinations, taking two AS entries as equivalent to one A-level entry, was as shown.

	A-level examination entries (000s)
School leavers	424·42
Students in further education establishments	76·67

Schools (Salaries)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what principle a grant-maintained school will be funded where its relevant local education authority has opted out of the national determination of wages and conditions and established a salary rate higher than the national rate.

Mr. Eggar: It is not intended that the principles governing the calculation of annual maintenance grant for a grant-maintained school would change because its former maintaining local education authority had opted out in this way.

Training Credits

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has made any assessment of the impact of the introduction of training credits for 16-year-olds upon the staying-on rate in full-time education.

Mr. Eggar: No assessment of the impact is possible in advance of the implementation of the pilot training credit schemes. The impact of the pilot schemes, including the impact on the staying-on rate in full-time education, will be the subject of careful monitoring by my right hon. and learned Friends the Secretaries of State for Employment and for Education and Science.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the grant-maintained schools that have agreed to recognise trade unions for the purpose of representing teachers on disciplinary and individual grievance matters.

Mr. Eggar: It is for the governing body of a grant-maintained school, as the employer, to decide whether it wishes to recognise teacher unions for the purpose of representing teachers on disciplinary and individual grievance matters. The Department does not collect information on this matter.

Physical Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to publish the national curriculum working party report on physical education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering the interim report from the national curriculum working group on physical education. He expects to publish it shortly.

Teaching (Political Bias)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evidence he has as to undue political bias and undue emphasis on values and opinions in the teaching of geography; and if he will place such evidence in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In publishing the draft order for geography in the national curriculum, I made clear my reasons for departing from the recommendations of the National Curriculum Council. I recognise that geography lessons will sometimes deal with conflicting points of view on important geographical issues. The programmes of study which I published with the draft order refer to such issues. However, in setting out statutory statements of attainment against which pupils will be assessed, I believe that the emphasis should be on the knowledge and understanding of geography which inform people's views.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evidence he has available of political and other bias in the teaching of (a) 20th century history and (b) current affairs; and if he will place such evidence in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Of the complaints of bias that I receive from parents, the major part relate to teaching or classroom discussion about current issues and recent events. That is to be expected, because such issues and events arouse the strongest feelings. I believe that the great majority of teachers handle such matters with sensitivity and care and with full regard to their legal duty to ensure a balanced presentation of opposing views on political issues. Nevertheless, there is a special difficulty in achieving balance when dealing with contemporary events and personalities.

Special Educational Need

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils with statements of special educational need are recorded by each local education authority on DES form SEN(2) for January 1990 as attending maintained special schools, non-maintained special schools and independent schools under arrangements made by the authority.

Mr. Fallon: This information was not collected for January 1990 on form SEN2. The Department has since revised form SEN2 in order that such information may be collected for January 1991 in respect of pupils for whom a statement was newly made in the previous year. I have arranged for the hon. Member to receive details in due course.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Liverpool Magistrates Court

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when work will begin on the rebuilding of Liverpool magistrates court.

Mr. John Patten: Subject to the satisfactory completion by the local authority of the various next steps in the planning process, it should be possible for building work on a new Liverpool magistrates court to begin in 1995-96.

Deportation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-Iraqi Arabic or Palestinians resident in Britain have been served with decisions to make a deportation order for national security reasons, on the grounds of being not conducive to the public good; from what areas of the United Kingdom they originated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Twelve non-Iraqi nationals have been advised of my right hon. Friend's decision to deport them on the grounds that their presence is not conducive to the public good for reasons of national security. The majority have lived in the south-east of the country. In one case, my right hon. Friend has decided to take no further action.

Vehicle Clamping

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many motor vehicles have been clamped in the Metropolitan police area in each of the past three years; and how many have been clamped for exceeding the time paid for in an authorised parking bay.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the numbers of vehicles clamped in the Metropolitan police area in the years 1987 to 1989 were respectively: 111,117 in 1987; 125,824 in 1988 and 149,663 in 1989. A figure for 1990 is not yet available. No information is available on the number clamped for exceeding the time paid for in an authorised parking bay.

Iraqi Residents

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many residents of the United Kingdom, of Iraqi origin, have been arrested or detained in the last fortnight for national security reasons, on the grounds of being not conducive to the public good; from what areas of the United Kingdom they originated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 101 Iraqis have been detained since the beginning of the year. They came from all parts of the United Kingdom. Forty-two remain in detention under the Immigration Act and 35 military personnel are in military custody. Two are in the United Kingdom having been released from detention and 21 have left or have been deported. In one case my right hon. Friend decided to take no further action and the man has been released from detention.

Police Searches

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Leicestershire on the number of searches of (a) private homes and (b) businesses that have taken place in Leicestershire over the past five years; and how many of these searches were undertaken without a warrant having been obtained.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no requirement under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 for police forces to produce statistics of searches of premises. The hon. Member should contact the chief constable of Leicestershire for the information available.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of searches of (a) private homes and (b) businesses that have taken place in England and Wales over the past five years; and how many of those searches were undertaken without a warrant having been obtained.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not collected centrally.

Deportation Orders

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what right of appeal residents have when arrested or detained or notified of deportation orders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the Immigration Act, there is no right of appeal to the appellate authorities against my right hon. Friend's intention to make a deportation order for reasons of national security. There is, however, a provision of the immigration rules to permit someone to appear before a panel of three independent advisers, chaired by a Lord Justice of Appeal, who will consider any representations made by the individual and, separately, the security case against the individual. All those made subject to this deportation action are advised of this right and many have chosen to exercise it.

Vagrants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to bring forward proposals to update the Justices of the Peace Act 1361 and in particular the section dealing with branding of vagrants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have no such plans. Neither branding nor vagrants are mentioned in the Justices of the Peace Act 1361.

Ecclesiastic Courts Jurisdiction Act

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to bring forward proposals to up-date the Ecclesiastic Courts Jurisdiction Act 1860; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no plans to amend this Act.

Motor Vehicles (Security)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to persuade the motor vehicle manufacturers to improve the security devices on their vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary and I have discussed this issue with the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders and are considering a report from the society on the action taken by motor manufacturers to improve the security of their cars. The motor manufacturers have clearly taken some steps to improve the security of their cars, but much more remains to be done. The best way for further progress to be made is for car buyers to give as much attention to the security of their car as they do to its performance and looks.

We give advice to car buyers on what to look for in our crime prevention publicity material and intend to publish a car theft index.

In addition, we will continue to support efforts to seek agreement in Europe to the adoption of the British standard on door-locks as an EC directive.

Prison Service

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future location of the headquarters of the prison service.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: In January 1990 my predecessor announced that the headquarters of the prison service would be relocated to the midlands. Following a detailed evaluation of a number of options I have now authorised the opening of negotiations with developers for the construction of a new headquarters building for the prison service at St. Mary's wharf, Derby.

If these negotiations are successful work on site could start later this year with the building being ready for occupation in late 1993 or early 1994. Some posts may move to temporary accommodation in Derby in advance of the general move.

Final details have yet to be settled, but I estimate that around 1,900 posts will eventually be relocated to Derby, 1,500 of these from central London. At least 800 of the 1,900 posts will be filled by local recruitment.

Everthorpe Remand Centre

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish rules establishing the return on capital and turnover which the prison department will be expected to make when submitting a tender for the management of Everthorpe remand centre.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 25 January 1991]: If the prison service decides to tender for the contract for the management of Everthorpe remand centre we would not propose publishing the make-up of the tender, since this could prejudice or distort the competition for the contract.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC Funding

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those areas in Britain that currently benefit from (a) RESIDER, (b) RENAVAL and (c) RECHAR; how much money they receive from the European Community in regional aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The qualifying areas for RESIDER and RENEVAL are as follows:

RESIDER: The county of South Yorkshire and Scunthorpe travel-to-work area;

RENAVAL: Plymouth travel-to-work area, the county of Tyne and Wear, and Middlesbrough and Langbaurgh districts of Cleveland, Wirral and Sefton districts of Merseyside, Kirkcaldy travel-to-work area and parts of Dunfermline and Alloa travel-to-work areas in Fife region, and Glasgow and Greenock travel-to-work areas in Strathclyde.

The qualifying areas for RECHAR were listed in the Official Journal of the European Communities No. C177 of 18 July 1990.

The RESIDER programme and two of the RENAVAL programmes are already current; they provide for 54 mecu of European regional development fund grant up to the end of 1993. The RECHAR programmes and the remaining RENAVAL programmes are expected to provide for approximately 130 mecu of ERDF grant over the same period.

Office Furniture

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many United Kingdom companies tendered for his Department's recent contract for office furniture.

Mr. Leigh: My Department has awarded a number of contracts to different companies to supply furniture in recent months.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which company was awarded his Department's recent contract for office furniture.

Mr. Leigh: My Department has awarded a number of contracts to different companies to supply furniture in recent months.

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Telecommunications Council on 14 December 1990.

Mr. Redwood: The main item for discussion was a communication from the Commission to the Council on the Commission's green paper on satellite communications —"Towards Europe-wide systems and services—Green Paper on a common approach in the field of Satellite communications in the European Community"—which was published on 20 November 1990. The Commission's proposals envisage wide-ranging liberalisation of the use of satellite terminal equipment on a Community-wide basis and equitable and non-discriminatory access to satellite capacity for all telecommunications service providers. The Council held an orientation debate in which the United Kingdom strongly supported the Commission's proposals.

The Council also adopted a resolution on the final phase of the co-ordinated introduction of pan-European public digital mobile cellular communications in the Community—GSM—and a recommendation on the co-ordinated introduction of digital European cordless telecommunications—DECT. A common position was agreed on a proposal for a Council directive on the frequency bands to be reserved for DECT.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total number of foreign diplomats within the United Kingdom accredited to embassies and consulates, respectively, showing within the total the numbers by status against each foreign embassy and consulate; and how many of the total are entitled to diplomatic immunity.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The total number of diplomatic staff accredited to foreign and commonwealth missions in the United Kingdom are:

	Number
a. Diplomatic agents	2,382
b. Members of Administrative and Technical Staff	2,306
c. Members of Service Staff	393
d. Consular officers accredited to subordinate consulates	391

All members of the staff of diplomatic missions in London who are not United Kingdom nationals nor permanently resident here enjoy a degree of diplomatic immunity under the Diplomatic Privileges Act 1964. Those who are diplomatic agents enjoy personal inviolability including freedom from arrest or detention. They are immune from the criminal jurisdiction of the receiving state, and except in relation to certain private matters, from its civil and administrative jurisdiction. Members of the administrative and technical staff also enjoy personal inviolability and the same immunities except that their immunity from civil and administrative jurisdiction does not extend to acts performed outside the course of their duties. Members of the service staff have immunity only in respect of acts performed in the course of their duties. The immunity of consular officers is governed by the Consular Relations Act 1968.

To list the number of staff at each embassy and consulate by status could only be provided at disproportionate cost. The London Diplomatic List, published biannually, lists diplomatic agents, by mission, accredited to foreign embassies; a copy is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give, for each of the past five years to the nearest available date, the number of traffic and criminal offences, respectively, by foreign diplomats who were able to claim immunity, with the offences registered by embassy or consulate, and the action that was taken by Her Majesty's Government in the most serious cases.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our policy on diplomatic immunities and privileges is set out in the 1985 White Paper. In the most serious cases we require the withdrawal of the diplomat concerned. The figures requested for the past five years are shown in the table. Details of serious offences and unpaid parking fines are made annually to the House —the last one by my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to my hon. Friends the Members for Gloucester (Mr. French) and Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 26 April 1990, at columns 303-5.

	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990
Traffic offences[1]
(a) Drink/Driving	24	25	28	27	24

Diplomats withdrawn at FCO request	17	18	14	14	6

[1] Technically all traffic offences are "criminal" offences.

Cambodia

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the number of Cambodians still suffering from injuries inflicted under the Khmer Rouge regime; and what steps he has taken and will take to bring Pol Pot and others before the world court under article 9 of the genocide convention.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There is no accurate information available on the number of Cambodians still suffering from injuries inflicted during the Pol Pot regime. Article IX of the genocide convention concerns disputes between states, not the prosecution of individuals. Only states may be parties in cases before the International Court of Justice, which has no criminal jurisdiction.

Ascension Island

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on feral cats on Ascension island.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There is no statistical evidence that feral cats presently represent a major problem on Ascension island, but the matter is under review. If it appears necessary, we shall take steps to reduce the feral cat population.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has for a single national scale for the energy efficiency rating of domestic dwellings.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave my hon. Friend on 7 December 1990 at columns 243-44.

Combined Heat and Power

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has in accordance with section 47 of the Electricity Act 1989, on measures taken by the Director General of Electricity Supply in respect of combined heat and power and the extent of its outlined and planned use in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Office of Electricity Regulation, in consultation with the Energy Efficiency Office and representatives of industry, are in the process of compiling a database of CHP projects operating in Great Britain. This should give the Director General of Electricity Supply, Government and industry a good indication of how CHP is progressing.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Southern Sudan

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage the Government of Sudan to allow the newly-formed Sudanese Council of Churches to operate famine relief in southern Sudan.

Mrs. Chalker: We have made representations to the Government of Sudan, through the United Kingdom's chairmanship of the donor group in Khartoum, to allow non-government organisations to operate relief activities throughout Sudan to alleviate the present food crisis. We have not taken separate action regarding individual organisations.

Jablonna Conference

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial contribution from public funds was made, and what other support from his Department was given, in respect of the conference at Jablonna, Poland, arranged through the Jagiellonian Foundation in October 1990; and who attended.

Mrs. Chalker: The know-how fund made a contribution of £8,000 towards the costs of the recent Jagiellonian foundation seminar held to discuss general questions of curriculum reform in the Polish educational context.

No other support was given by my Department. No complete record is available of the names of all those who attended, but among those who did so were:

Dr. Leo Katzen, Department of Economics, Leicester University;
David J. Levy, Department of Sociology, Middlesex Polytechnic;
Professor Roger Scruton, Birkbeck College, London;
Dr. John Marks, Director, Education Research Trust;
Ken Connelly, retired headmaster;
Professor Anthony O'Hear, Philosophy, Bradford University;
Dr. Geoffrey Partington, Department of Education, Flinders University of Southern Australia;
Professor David Cooper, Philosophy, Durham University;
President of Philosophy of Education Society;
Dr. Brian Davies, School of Education, University College, Cardiff;
Dr. Andrew King, Department of Physics and Astronomy, Leicester University;
Susan Wright, Department of Education, North London Polytechnic;
Dr. Lawrence Norcross, retired headmaster;
Stuart Sexton, Headmaster;
Liz Lightfoot, Education correspondent, Mail on Sunday;
Marek Matraszek, Jagiellonian Trust, Oxford;
Professor Anthony Flew, Reading University, Philosophy Educational Theorist;
Professor Richard Lynn, University of Ulster, Educational Psychologist;
Chris Coldman, Mathematics teacher, London;
Wiktor Kulerski, Minister of Education;
Dr. Andrzej Pachocinski, Department of Education, Warsaw University;
Dr. Wawrzyniec Konarski, Department of Education, Warsaw University;
Dr. Milowit Kuninski, Department of Philosophy, Jagiellonian University, Krakow;
Dr. Anton Kaminski, Department of Sociology, Warsaw University, and advisor to the Minister of Foreign Affairs;
Dr. Stefania Szscurkowska, Ministry of Education;
Iwona Langer-Kowalewska, Secondary school headmistress, Gdansk;
Magdalena Pilch, Secondary School Headmistress, Warsaw;
Dr. Witold Karczewski, Pan, Warsaw;
together with school teachers from several parts of the country, and occasional visitors from the social and political science and education departments in the university.
Dr. Nicolae Sacalis, from the Department of pedagogy at Bucharest University.
Professor Wayne Shute, department of education at Brigham Young University, Salt Lake City; came as an independent observer.

Third-World Students

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many students from Third-world countries are currently studying in this country on (a) Her Majesty's Government's bursaries, (b) their own resources and (c) other sources of finance; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: In the current financial year over 21,000 students from developing countries are receiving help from United Kingdom Government support schemes for study and training in this country. A total of 45,000 full time students from developing countries enrolled in October 1988 for further and higher education courses in this country for the academic year 1988-89, the latest year for which such a figure is available. This would include some of those here under United Kingdom Government support schemes as well as those here under their own resources and other sources of finance; these categories are not separately identifiable. The two figures quoted are compiled from different sources and in different ways and are not comparable.

Ethiopia and Sudan (Famine)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he first received warnings of the current famine in Ethiopia and Sudan.

Mrs. Chalker: Initial indications from international agencies of possible food shortages were received on September 13—Sudan—and 14—Ethiopia. Confirmed reports arrived in mid-December.

Ethiopia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all assistance given for agricultural rehabilitation and restocking of seeds, tools and cattle in Ethiopia since the 1989-90 food shortage.

Mrs. Chalker: Relevant projects supported since the 1989-90 food shortage are:

Project/Programme	Description/Aims
Teff Research	Collaborative research to improve varieties of Teff
Rainfall Monitoring	Rainfall and crop development estimation and monitoring system
Sidamo Rangelands	Improved food security for ten local communities in South Sidamo; managed by CARE
Koisha Rural Development	Increase food production and strengthen rural economy in Koisha region of Sidamo; managed by SOS-Sahel
Land Use—Western Hararghe	Introduce sustainable system of land use for 17,000 families in Western Hararghe; managed by CARE
Dairy Goat Project	Increase rural incomes by improving the productivity of dairy goats managed by women; managed by FARM Africa
Farmers' Research Project	Assist NGOs working with communities in North Omo region to contribute more effectively to farmers' agricultural research; managed by FARM Africa
Projects funded under the joint funding scheme
Action Aid (Small Scale seed production)	Develop economically viable and sustainable small scale seed enterprises
Catholic Fund for Overseas Development (Rural Development)	To increase productive capacity of land
OXFAM (Delanta Agriculture)	To promote post drought agricultural rehabilitation and prevent environmental degradation of the land
OXFAM (Hararghe Agricultural)	Construct a new seed store and to replace seed stocks lost in the drought
Tear Fund (Cattle Project, Durami)	To introduce the Borena breed bloodstock into the fresian/local bloodstock to increase milk yields and help improve disease resistance

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many tonnes of food aid have been delivered to Ethiopia since the Food and Agriculture Organisation appeal of 13 December 1990 (a) from Her Majesty's Government and (b) in total.

Mrs. Chalker: A total of 19,000 tonnes of United Kingdom food aid, provided through the World Food Programme, is being delivered at Assab this week. Between 28 and 31 December 1990 some 20,467 tonnes of food aid from other donors were delivered at Assab. A total of 42,000 tonnes is expected, but not confirmed, in January.

These figures do not include cross border food aid figures for Ethiopia. The total figure for cross-border operations for December/January is estimated at 30,000 to 35,000 tonnes for Eritrea. Comparable figures are not available for Tigray.

Famine Relief

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all allocations of famine relief made to African countries in 1990 and 1991, with the date on which the allocation was made and stating whether or not the supplies have arrived for (i) aid from the Overseas Development Administration and (ii) aid from the European Community.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom Food Aid committed in 1990

Country	Tonnage	Estimated cost £ million
Ethiopia	53,836	8·230
Mozambique	15,000	1·740
Sudan	10,550	2·807
Tanzania	2,065	0·201
Zaire	3,725	0·446

Other United Kingdom emergency relief in 1990

Month	Country	£ million
January	Uganda	0·03
February	Liberia	0·392
March	Rwanda	0·05
April	Sudan	3·0
April	Ethiopia	5·0
June	Sudan	0·033
June	Sierra Leone	0·067
July	Angola	0·5
August	Mozambique	3·5
August	Sierra Leone	0·084
September	Ghana	0·034
October	Ethiopia	0·5
December	Ethiopia	2·5
December	Sudan	1·2
December	Angola	0·5

The hon. Lady will recall from my statement to the House on 19 December 1990 the most recent emergency aid package worth £7·2 million which is now being allocated to British non-governmental organisations and the UN High Commissioner for Refugees. In addition, I have today announced a further £8·75 million package of famine relief for Ethiopia: It comprises 35,000 tonnes of food aid for 1991 worth some £6·5 million.

£2 million in non-food assistance to enable the food to be delivered.

£250,000 to UNHCR for Somali refugees in Ethiopia.

This new food aid includes an immediate shipment of 10,000 tonnes of food sent into the recently reopened port of Massawa. It has not been possible in the time available to give details of the dates on which the shipments arrived at their destination.

It has also not been possible in the time available to obtain full details of emergency aid provided by the European Community for African countries affected by the famine. However, in the case of Ethiopia normal and emergency food aid provided by the Community in 1990 amounted to some 115 mecu of £80 million, of which the United Kingdom share was some £18 million. Most of this food had been delivered by October 1990.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what improvements have been made in the famine early warning systems, and delivery mechanisms of relief aid used by the ODA since the 1984-85 famine.

Mrs. Chalker: We continue to rely upon the reports of the Food and Agriculture Organisation's global information and early warning system, supplemented by special reports from both the World Food Programme and international and British relief agencies. These reports draw on information from national warning systems, to which the European Community contributes. The quality of these has improved substantially since 1984-85. The recent WFP crop assessment missions to Ethiopia and Sudan played a crucial role in the planning of our current relief activities.

In 1984-85 air drops were necessary to reach those in need in Ethiopia. We now have three established land routes for delivering relief supplies—the southern line, the northern line through the recently re-opened port of Massawa and cross-border from Sudan.

The regular meetings on the Horn of Africa I hold with British NGOs have also helped both the ODA and the NGOs in planning our emergency relief operations.

These improvements have helped enable us to take early and speedy action in response to the threatened famine in Ethiopia and elsewhere in Africa.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inflation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the change in inflation has been from July 1983 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: The annual rate of inflation, as measured by the retail prices index, was 4·2 per cent. for the 12 months to July 1983 compared with 9·3 per cent. for December 1990. Over the period from July 1983 to December 1990 the index has increased by 52·3 per cent., an annual rate of increase of 5·8 per cent. on average.

Consumer Debt

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the level of outstanding consumer debt; and what it was in real terms in 1982.

Mr. Maples: The level of outstanding consumer debt at the end of the third quarter 1990 was £49·6 billion. Due to changes in coverage, comparable figures are not available for 1982. Those which are available are in the September 1982 issue of Business Monitor SDM6 "Credit business of finance houses and other specialist consumer credit grantors". This publication is available in the House of Commons Library.

Charities

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it is proposed that charities should become liable to charge value added tax on the production and sale of books, magazines and other printed matter as part of the European proposals for value added tax harmonisation; and whether it is proposed that charities would be able to reclaim value added tax paid for (a) the purchase and (b) the production of books, magazines and other printed matter.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Commission's most recent proposals, in May 1989, on the VAT rate structure in the single market were not entirely clear as to what might continue to be zero rated. Subsequent European Community discussions have advanced matters little. The United Kingdom has, however, stressed that we must retain the ability to apply a zero rate to those supplies that are currently treated in this way. These, of course, include the production and sale by charities of books, magazines and some other printed matter. As any Community legislation in this area requires unanimity, the United Kingdom's position is protected.

There have been no proposals to alter the rules in respect of VAT reclaimable on purchases and production of books, and so on.

Home Carers

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the practice followed in other member states of the European Community with respect to the charging of value added tax on the supply and delivery of goods and services to home carers.

Mrs Gillian Shephard: Comprehensive information would be disproportionately expensive to obtain. However, the provisions of the EC sixth VAT directive are clear on the charging of tax on the supply and delivery of goods and services, whether to home carers or others. I have no reason to believe that other member states' practices are not in conformity with EC law. If my hon. Friend has a particular case in mind, perhaps he will write to me.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 18 December 1990, what representations he has made to the EC Commission regarding the constraints of EC value added tax law with respect to the delivery of services and goods to home carers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The United Kingdom is bound by the EC sixth directive, to which all the member states gave their assent in 1977. The Government are not in a position to challenge its legal requirements.

Credit Cards

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many credit cards are in circulation in the United Kingdom; what was the comparable level in 1980; what are the comparable figures on a per capita basis in other European Community countries.

Mr. Maples: The only data available are from bank issuers of Mastercard and Visa. These show that at the end of 1989 there were 28·6 million such cards issued in the United Kingdom. The comparable figure at the end of 1980 was 11·7 million. Data for other countries could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Bingo Duty

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much bingo duty (a) yielded to the Exchequer and (b) cost to collect in the financial year ended 31 March 1990.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In the year ended 31 march 1990, bingo duty yielded £66 million; no separate cost of collecting bingo duty is available; the cost of collecting all the exise duties on betting and gaming, totalling £976 million, was £4·03 million.

Personal Debt

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the present outstanding personal debts on (a) bank credit cards, (b) retail accounts, (c) loans on personal accounts, (d) specialist credit and (e) finance house loans.

Mr. Maples: At the end of the third quarter 1990 the amounts outstanding were £ billion

(a) Bank credit cards	7·6
(b) Retail accounts	2·3
(c) Bank loans on personal accounts	17·0
(d) Finance houses and other specialist credit grantors	20·7

Departmental Reports

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the 1991 departmental reports to be published.

Mr. Mellor: The proposed dates for publication of 1991 departmental reports and the supplement to the autumn statement are as follows:

	Proposed date of publication (1991)
Supplement to the Autumn Statement	Friday 1 February
Department of Social Security	Friday 1 February
Ministry of Defence	Tuesday 5 February
Department of Employment	Tuesday 5 February

Note: Copies will be available from the Vote Office.

EC Personnel (Compensation)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will raise with the European Court of Auditors the recent EC decision to pay £4,500,000 in compensation to 150 EC personnel; and if he will make a statement on the implications for the United Kingdom contribution to the EC.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 25 January 1991]: The Government have noted with concern the observations in the European Court of Auditors' recent report on the 1989 EC budget in connection with redundancy payments to temporary staff at the joint research centre—JRC. The estimated cost to the United Kingdom of these payments is some £300,000 after abatement. The Government recognise that costs are frequently incurred when any organisation is restructured, but will want to ensure that measures taken to correct staff imbalances at the JRC do not result in unwarranted expenditure and that they will have the intended effect. The Government will therefore aim to pursue this issue in forthcoming Council discussions on the European Court of Auditors' report and in the review of the JRC planned for later this year.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) unoccupied housing executive houses there are, (b) priority applicants are on the waiting list, (c) transfers are listed and (d) housing executive houses have been sold in 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990, in Newtownabbey borough council area.

Mr. Needham: These are matters for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am advised by its chief executive that the information requested in respect of the Newtownabbey borough council district is as follows:

(a) At 31 December 1990 there were 44 unoccupied Housing Executive dwellings available for letting.

(b) The number of priority applicants on the waiting list at 31 December 1990 was 93.

(c) The number of applicants on the waiting list for transfer to the district at 31 December 1990 was 970.

(d) The number of Housing Executive dwellings sold is as follows:

	Houses sold
1987	165
1988	200
1989	201
1990	165

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) unoccupied housing executive houses there are, (b) priority applicants are on the waiting list, (c) transfer requests are listed and (d) housing executive houses have been sold in 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990 in Antrim borough council area.

Mr. Needham: These are matters for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am advised by its chief executive that the information requested in respect of the Antrim borough council district is as follows:

a. At 31 December 1990 there were 37 unoccupied Housing Executive dwellings available for letting.

b. The number of priority applicants on the waiting list at 31 December 1990 was 58.

c. The number of applicants on the waiting list for transfer to the district at 31 December 1990 was 551.

d. The number of Housing Executive dwellings sold is as follows:

	Houses sold
1987	129
1988	125
1989	174
1990	239

Killead Bypass

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the completion date for the Killead bypass.

Mr. Needham: Killead bypass is expected to be completed in autumn 1992.

Roads, Newtownards

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to remove the mound of earth at the lower end of Hollymount crescent, Newtownards; what action has been taken against the rats at this location; and if planning permission has been granted for development at this location.

Mr. Needham: Outline planning permission was granted for residential development at the Hollymount crescent site on 2 March 1971. On the detailed plans approved in 1975 the area in question was shown as open space. The Department of the Environment (NI) has attempted without success to trace the owner of the land with a view to seeking his co-operation in having an environmental improvement scheme carried out at this location. The problem of rodent infestation is a matter for Ards borough council.

Local Enterprise Development Unit

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many LEDU-assisted firms went into liquidation or ceased trading in 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Needham: This information is available only in respect of firms that were LEDU clients at the time they went into liquidation or ceased trading. The numbers of such firms in the years stated are detailed in the table.

Year	Number of Liquidations	Number ceasing to trade	Total
1988	16	15	31
1989	15	11	26
1990	17	8	25

Local Authorities

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members there are in each of the 26 local authorities; and what was the total amount of allowances and expenses paid to these members by each of the local authorities in each of the past five years.

Mr. Hanley: The information is set out in the table.

Local Authority	Number of Members	Total amount of allowances and expenses paid to members by local authorities in each of the last five years
		1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90

[1] Estimates.

Women Doctors

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the recent announcement about women doctors and their careers will be applied to Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The report of the joint working party on "Women Doctors and Their Careers" was issued by the Department of Health (London) on 22 January 1991. The report's recommendations have been drawn up in terms suitable for application in England only, but the Department of Health and Social Security for Northern Ireland will consider these and the action necessary in the light of needs in Northern Ireland.

Toxic Waste Incinerator

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what public safety and environmental impact assessment criteria and procedures would be invoked by the Government in respect of a proposal to site a toxic waste incinerator in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The effect of a proposal to site a toxic waste incinerator in Northern Ireland on public safety would be examined by the Department of Economic Development's health and safety inspectorate which enforces the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work (NI) Order 1978. The order requires every employer to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, that persons not in his employment who may be affected thereby are not exposed to risks to their health and safety. Regulations prevent the granting of planning permission to proposals of this type unless environmental information has first been considered. Schedule 1(8) of the Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations (NI) 1989 applies and any planning application for such an incinerator must be accompanied by an environmental statement. These statements are available for public information.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on planning applications made by Du Pont regarding waste incineration at Maydown.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The only planning application made by Du Pont at Maydown for a waste incinerator was submitted on the 10 October 1990 for the "installation of a solid waste burner"

the purpose of which is to incinerate only lycra waste from the existing plant. Schedule 1(8) of the Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations (NI) 1989 applies to this application and the company have been asked to submit an environmental statement for consideration with the planning application.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any Government Department or public agency has had discussions with Du Pont about the establishment of a toxic waste incinerator at its Maydown complex.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 January 1991]: In October 1990, Du Pont (NI) Ltd. advised the Industrial Development Board, the Department of Economic Development, and the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland of a proposal to establish a hazardous waste incinerator on its site at Maydown, Co. Londonderry. In December 1990, the company confirmed in writing that an evaluation of the project was under way. Officials from the Department involved will be available for consultations with the company as appropriate.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions have taken place with Republic of Ireland Government departments or public agencies regarding possible siting for a toxic waste incinerator.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 January 1991]: In November 1990, correspondence from the appropriate Minister in the Republic of Ireland indicated that the Republic of Ireland government was a at an advanced stage in its consideration of a central hazardous waste incinerator to service Irish industry, that it had become aware that Du Pont (UK) Ltd. was considering the provision of such a facility on its site at Maydown, Co. Londonderry and sought the views of the Northern Ireland authorities.

The response indicated that Du Pont (UK) Ltd. was engaged in the necessary studies of all the implications of such a facility.

Informal discussion of the matter between officials has been in accord with the correspondence.

ENVIRONMENT

Empty Housing

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of empty properties owned by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The available information for April 1990 for England is in the table

	Vacant dwellings (thousands)
Local authority[1]	99·2
Housing association[2]	19·7

[1] Derived from local authorities' housing investment programme returns for April 1990. Includes 38,900 dwellings which are awaiting or undergoing major works or awaiting sale or demolition.

[2] Derived from housing association returns to the Housing Corporation for March 1990. Includes 12,700 dwellings, mainly purchased from the private sector, which require rehabilitation work before being suitable for occupation.

Homelessness

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what new initiatives he is taking to tackle the problem of homelessness in (a) South Yorkshire and (b) Doncaster;

(2) what new and additional finance is being made available to help (a) local authorities and (b) voluntary organisations to tackle the problem of homelessness in (i) South Yorkshire generally and (ii) Doncaster.

Mr. Yeo: Housing investment programme allocations to South Yorkshire authorities for 1991-92 total £56·574 million, of which Doncaster's share is £7·950 million. When these allocations were determined, the levels of homelessness experienced were taken into account, both through generalised needs index indicators and in the distribution of resources not allocated through the GNI. In addition, Doncaster MBC's proposal to provide an additional hostel for the homeless was taken specifically into account. Our two main national homelessness initiatives, involving expenditure of £396 million, are targeted on the areas of greatest need in London and the south-east. In the longer term, we will consider extension to other areas.

Sheffield and Barnsley's urban programme submissions, which include schemes directed at the homeless, are under consideration now. Neither Doncaster nor Rotherham have included such schemes in their urban programme submissions.

Applications from voluntary organisations assisting the homeless for funding in 1991-92 under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 are also currently being considered.

Unused Sites, Thamesdown

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the unused sites owned by public bodies within the borough of Thamesdown, together with their owners and sizes in hectares, as detailed in the land register.

Mr. Yeo: In 1989 individual public sector owners were asked to keep their own registers of their unused and underused land. Since then up-to-date information has ceased to be available from my right hon. Friend's register. Information on sites on owners' registers as at 31 March 1990 is available from individual owners for their holdings and from district or London borough councils for sites within their areas for which owners have deposited information.

English Heritage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what has been English Heritage's total education budget for each of the last three years for which figures are available;

(2) how many school children are estimated to have used English Heritage properties in each of the last three years for which figures are available;

(3) what has been English Heritage's budget for educational publications, including audio-visual productions, in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: These are matters for English Heritage.

Heveningham Hall, Suffolk

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to whom Heveningham hall in Suffolk was sold.

Sir George Young: I.D. Investment Development AG.

Refuse-derived Fuel

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the arguments his Department put forward during negotiations on the derogation agreement with the European Community for the use and development of refuse-derived fuel.

Mr. Baldry: During the negotiations in the European Community of the draft directives on municipal waste incineration, the United Kingdom sought derogation for refuse-derived fuel in view of the considerable investment and research being undertaken in the United Kingdom to develop RDG as an economic alternative fuel in the interests of recycling, the securing of energy from waste, and the development of waste disposal options.

Crayfish

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received from the Nature Conservancy Council since 1982 recommending the listing of American signal crayfish under schedule 9 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My Department has received a number of representations from the Nature Conservancy Council about this subject in recent years. In October 1990, the council formally recommended that the American signal crayfish should be added to schedule 9 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. My Department is currently considering this recommendation and undertaking the consultation required under section 26 of the 1981 Act.

Nine Elms Coldstore

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his consent has been sought by the Covent Garden market authority for the demolition of the Nine Elms coldstore and for alternative proposals for the site.

Mr. Yeo: No.

City Grant, Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce a decision on the application for £5 million city grant by 3Ds Ltd.; and how many applications are anticipated for the west end scheme in Bradford.

Mr. Key: The proposal for the first phase in the development of Bradford west end is under consideration. Discussions were held earlier this month with 3D Ltd. and further details have been requested from the developer. Once all information has been provided, the Department will be able to undertake a full appraisal of the scheme. No details are available for the likely number of any future applications arising from the proposal.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on efforts to secure international agreement on the environmental safety of genetically modified organisms.

Mr. Baldry: The White Paper on the environment, "Our Common Inheritance", recognised that the safe development of biotechnology based on genetically modified organisms—GMOs—requires the agreement of satisfactory environmental safeguards, both nationally and internationally. Good progress has been made to date. In particular, the United Kingdom Government played an influential role in the adoption last year of two European Communities directives on GMOs and has made provision in part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 for implementation of their environmental requirements.

The United Kingdom is actively participating in work to secure wider international agreement on the safety of GMOs. An opportunity for further significant progress is provided by the United Nations conference on environment and development to be held in Brazil in 1992—UNCED 1992. As part of the preparations for the conference, the UK Government have responded positively to a Netherlands proposal for a UN approach on biotechnology safety and are developing that proposal further in collaboration with their Dutch counterparts. The proposal aims to encourage the effective risk assessment and management of GMO activities worldwide through the development of international guidelines based on the exchange of information and expertise. The Government see this as a positive contribution to preparations for UNCED 1992 and hope that other countries will support the UK and the Netherlands in seeking to make this initiative a success.

Urban Programme

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources will be available for local authorities under the urban programme in 1991-92; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I am pleased to announce initial urban programme resource allocations for 1991-92 totalling over £264 million. The resources will be allocated to the 57 urban programme partnership and programme authorities in England. The money will be used to support a wide range of projects aimed at stimulating enterprise and the development of local economies, improving the environmental quality of inner-city areas particularly through greening, and improving the quality of life in inner-city areas.

The urban programme has achieved a great deal over many years. I now want to build on that success. Our aim is to promote vital and self-reliant communities. The key, I believe, is to target resources effectively on those areas of particular need. I also want to encourage the partnerships that local authorities are developing with other local interests: local business, voluntary bodies, and of course the people in the inner city areas.

The resources I am now making available will allow local authorities to extend this good practice already well established in many areas.

A list of the allocations to individual authorities for 1991-92 is set out in the table.

Combined Heat and Power

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that his technical guidance accompanying the introduction of integrated pollution control will recognise and promote the environmental and economic benefits of combined heat and power.

Mr. Trippier: The chief inspector's technical guidance will focus on the requirements for authorisation under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. However, in seeking to establish the best practicable means not entailing excessive cost for preventing, minimising or rendering harmless polluting substances, and the best practicable environmental option to protect the environment as a whole, the guidance might identify the need to include conditions in an authorisation which an operator could in fact meet by the use of combined heat and power.

HEALTH

Under-fives

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of (a) the secretariat and (b) the annual budget of the inter-departmental consultative group for under-fives.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The secretariat of this group, which I chair, is found from administrative staff in the Department's community services division. There is no separate budget allocation for the work of this group. The group last met on 25 September 1990 when the main subject discussed was the Children Act 1989 and the draft guidance on day care services. The group's next meeting is arranged for 13 March, when it is intended to discuss quality systems for child care providers and consultants, and day care services on Crown premises.

Maternity Units (Security)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what requests he has had for support for the initiative taken by the Royal College of Midwives to improve the security of maternity units and hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: None, but we are aware that the general secretary of the Royal College of Midwives wrote to the chairmen of all district health authorities on 13 December 1990 asking them to review the security system for their maternity services.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make available resources to improve security for mothers, babies and midwives in maternity units and hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department is providing funding to the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts to update the NHS security manual which is the main source of practical guidance to health authorities on security matters.

It is for health authorities to decide how to use the funds already allocated to them in the light of local needs and priorities. The cost and efficiency of security arrangements within any particular hospital or unit are matters for the relevant health authority and its general managers.

Iran-Iraq War

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many Iraqi casualties from the Iran-Iraq war were treated in British hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally.

St. Thomas's Hospital, London

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the ownership of the vacant buildings on the site of the old St. Thomas's hospital; how long they have been empty; and what plans exist for their future.

Mr. Dorrell: The site of the old St. Thomas's hospital in St. Thomas's street, London SE1 is no longer in the ownership of the NHS.

Calorie Intakes

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Health Education Authority's recommended daily calorie intake from food for (a) an adult, (b) a child 16 to 17 years, (c) a child 11 to 15 years, (d) a child six to 10 years, (e) a child three to five years and (f) a child up to two years.

Mr. Dorrell: The Health Education Authority has not made any recommendations on daily calorie intakes. Advice on daily energy requirements is provided by the chief medical officer's independent Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food Policy—COMA. Current advice —for males and females in different age bands from those requested—is contained in the COMA report "Recommended Daily Amounts of Food Energy and Nutrients for Groups of People in the United Kingdom" published in 1979. Copies are available in the Library. COMA is nearing completion of a re-assessment of the evidence and publication of an updated report is expected later this year.

Nuclear Power Station, Dungeness

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to institute a full medical survey into the possible public health implications in respect of radiation levels as a result of the operation of the nuclear power station at Dungeness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: In its third report to the Government, copies of which are in the Library, the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment—COMARE—stated that investigations of the incidence of childhood cancer in the vicinity of nuclear installations would be difficult to interpret until the results of studies of the distribution of childhood cancer incidence on a nationwide basis become available. The committee will then be asked to participate in a review of the evidence relating to the incidence of childhood cancer around nuclear installations. If the hon. Member has any information that he feels may be relevant, perhaps he would write to me.

Old People's Homes

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the privatisation of old people's homes in Leicestershire.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received no such representations.

Consultation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that community health councils are fully consulted by district health authorities and hospital trusts before NHS contracts are awarded; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: District health authorities are responsible for placing contracts with providers, including NHS trusts. They will be expected to seek the views of all interested parties including community health councils, on their overall contracting plans.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if community health councils will continue to be fully consulted before the disposal, change of use or closure of health authority and hospital trust premises and resources; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A district health authority considering a proposal involving the closure or change of use of a health building which it manages will be required to consult the relevant community health council and other interested parties about the proposal. Ministers will continue to make decisions on contested closures. NHS trusts have no duty to consult community health councils on how they manage their premises and resources.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if community health councils will retain the right to attend health authority or hospital trust meetings, including the confidential parts of such meetings after 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Community health council representatives will have the right to attend district health authority and NHS trust board meetings that are open to the public. As previously, it remains for a health authority to decide which of their discussions that are closed to the general public the community health council representative may attend. NHS trust boards will be free to extend similar invitations to their local community health council if they wish.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards he has considered to ensure that the regional health authority role in funding community health councils and as the employer of community health council staff does not undermine the independence and impartiality of community health councils.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Such safeguards have not proved necessary in the 16 years that community health councils have existed. We have no evidence to suggest they are necessary now.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken to improve the community health council role of monitoring quality assurance in all health service provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government have put quality at the top of the agenda for all National Health Service staff and managers. Health authorities have been urged to test the quality of their services through consumer surveys and by other means. The views of community health councils will be important and if a particular community health council has special expertise there is no reason why its health authority should not commission it to undertake such surveys.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if community health council representatives will have a right to speak at health authority or hospital trust meetings after 1 April.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's primary objective is that district health authorities should secure full, effective and early consultation with community health councils; the manner in which they do so is largely for the authority's decision. National Health Service trust boards will decide for themselves whether to involve their community health councils in meetings.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the level of his Department's financial support for the work of the Association of Community Health Councils, for each of the last five years; and what the level of support will be in the next financial year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has provided funding as follows:

Year	Grant (£)
1986-87	40,000
1987-88	50,000
1988-89	50,000
1989-90	50,000
1990-91	50,000

The level of funding for 1991-92 has yet to be decided.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will directly grant aid to community health councils.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to alter the funding arrangements of community health councils. Each CHC will continue to be funded by the regional health authority which covers its district.

Incinerators

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has carried out into the effects on human health of substances emitted from waste disposal incinerators.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment on 21 January at columns 97-98. The Government are currently funding the small area health statistics unit at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine to investigate possible links between pollution from waste incinerators and ill health in the local community.

General Practitioners

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role he envisages for community health councils in respect of the work of general practitioners who become budget holders.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The responsibility of ensuring that adequate patient care is provided will rest with the family health service authority and the regional health authority. The patient will give the GP direct feedback about the service being provided. Patients will still be able to complain to a service committee whether a GP is a fund holder or not. No special role is envisaged for community health councils in respect of the work of GPs who become budget holders.

NHS Funding

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding for health services was provided in each year since 1985 (a) nationally and (b) to the Doncaster health area.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows total spending by Doncaster health authority from 1985-86 to 1989-90—the latest year for which information is available—and total NHS spending for the same years.

	Gross total expenditure
	NHS England (£ million)	Doncaster Health Authority (£ thousands)
1985-86	14,923	48,842
1986-87	16,060	53,520
1987-88	17,659	60,197
1988-89	19,606	68,670
1989-90	21,139	73,298

Notes:

The source for the Doncaster spending figure is the annual accounts of Doncaster health authority. The figures in the table include the cost of capital schemes borne by the district and those borne in the accounts of Trent regional health authority for the district.

HIV

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how long a person claiming payments, as a haemophiliac infected with HIV through NHS treatment, must wait before receiving full payment of the moneys awarded;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that haemophiliac payment claims relating to HIV contamination are dealt with quickly and in full; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The detailed provisions of the proposed settlement are under discussion with lawyers representing the plaintiffs. Payments will be made as quickly as possible once a settlement has been reached and agreed by the courts.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has received concerning mosquitoes and other biting insects as vectors for HIV and other blood-transmitted conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no evidence that mosquitoes and other biting insects act as biological vectors of HIV or blood-borne hepatitis viruses.

Cholesterol Tests

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of tests for high cholesterol blood counts carried out, and the corresponding number of such tests requested, for each health authority, for the latest available year.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Hospital Costs

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current average cost of (a) building a hospital and (b) running a hospital for one year.

Mr. Dorrell: The average capital cost of a 300-bed district general hospital designed in accordance with principles recommended by the Department would be about £32·5 million at current prices. The running cost of such a hospital would be about £15 million per annum.

Kidney Transplants

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the numbers of people waiting, by region, for kidney transplants and the trends in transplants and available treatment for those awaiting a donor kidney.

Mrs. Bottomley: The table gives the number of people waiting for kidney transplants by region as at 18 January 1991. The number of cadaveric kidney transplants performed in the United Kingdom has risen from 849 in 1978 to 1,732 in 1989; an increase of 104 per cent. The most common forms of treatment available for those awaiting a transplant are haemodialysis and continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis. The number of renal patients receiving such treatment has risen from 2,947 in 1978 to 7,751 in 1988; an increase of 163 per cent.

Heart Attacks

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many men had heart attacks for each of the last three years for which figures are available aged (a) 20 to 30 years, (b) 31 to 40, (c) 41 to 50, (d) 51 to 60 and (e) 61 to 70 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not available in the form requested. The table gives, by age, the number of deaths of men caused by acute myocardial infarction in the last three years for which figures are available.

Dental Service

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of dental examinations in each of the last 12 quarters.

Mr. Dorrell: Information on the number of dental examinations scheduled for payment under the general dental services in England and Wales in each of the last 12 quarters is provided in the table:

General Dental Services: Number of Examinations Scheduled for Payment (including Trauma) by quarter for England and Wales

Quarter ending	Number of treatments
March 1988	7,530,040
June 1988	7,433,470

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the costs of the general dental service came from patients' charges in each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: The proportion of gross costs of the general dental service in England met from patient charges is given in the table:

Charge income as a proportion of gross cost

	Per cent.
1985-86	29·8
1986-87	29·9
1987-88	29·4
1988-89	30·7
1989-90	38·7

New NHS Facilities

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will specify by district the new national health service facilities which are planned to be opened after 1 April.

Mr. Dorrell: According to information held centrally, 96 schemes each costing over £1 million are due for completion between 1 April 1991 and 31 March 1992. A list of these has been placed in the Library. The Department does not routinely collect information on smaller schemes or hold details of health authorities' plans for the opening of new facilities.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce NHS trusts' external financing limits for 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The external financing limits for 1991-92 for all NHS trusts which will become operational on 1 April 1991, excluding that for the Northern Devon healthcare trust which will be announced later, are set out in the table. These limits do not include provision for medical audit and resource management developments in trusts which will be added subsequently.

Capital expenditure by NHS trusts forms part of the public expenditure provision in the health programme. The NHS and Community Care Act 1990, however, provides no power for the Department to fund NHS trusts directly or to give them cash limits. Trusts can only obtain funding from the income they receive from purchasers or from borrowing. An annual external financing limit—EFL—controls access by NHS trusts to external finance in all its forms. The EFL is a net financing concept measured by new loans taken out by the NHS Trust less loans repaid, plus or minus changes in deposits. The NHS Management Executive will monitor each NHS trust regularly to see that the EFL is not exceeded.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners, Canada

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of British pensioners residing in Canada are in receipt of a full British state pension.

Mr. Jack: We estimate that about 10 per cent. of British pensioners in Canada are receiving the same rate of pension as if they were in the United Kingdom. In addition, a large number of British pensioners who went to live in Canada during their working lives are receiving less than the full (100 per cent.) rate of pension because they stopped paying contributions when they left the United Kingdom and therefore their national insurance records are deficient.

Child Benefit

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state what the level of child benefit would be in April 1991 if it had been uprated in line with inflation since 1987.

Mr. Jack: The rate would be £9·55 a week for each child.

"Children Come First"

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report his reply to the submission of Church Action on Poverty on the proposals in "Children Come First".

Mr. Jack: The submission from Church Action on Poverty has been acknowledged. So far, some 250 submissions have been received and it is not proposed to respond to each one in detail. We are grateful for all views expressed on the White Paper "Children Come First", they will be taken fully into account in finalising the policy and preparing legislation to give effect to our proposals.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the compliance costs of the provisions in the Statutory Sick Pay Bill.

Mr. Jack: As at 25 January 1991, a total of 184 written representations, mainly from right hon. and hon. Members on behalf of employers and their organisations, had been received on the provisions contained in the Statutory Sick Pay Bill.

Community Charge Benefit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of community charge benefit and transitional protection during 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what was the cost of rate rebates in each year since 1980, at current and at 1990 prices.

Miss Widdecombe: The estimated expenditure on community charge benefit for 1990-91 is £2·25 billion. The estimate for 1991-92 is just over £2 billion, this takes account of estimated expenditure on the community charge transitional relief and reduction schemes for 1990-91 and 1991-92 of £384 million and £1,852 million respectively.

The information requested on rate rebate expenditure is listed in the table. Before 1982-83 assistance with housing costs was through the supplementary benefit scheme administered by the Department, and the rebate and allowance scheme run by the Department of the Environment. Housing benefit was introduced for some supplementary benefit claimants from November 1982 with full implementation for all claimants following from April 1983.

The data for the years prior to 1982-83 are based on the rent rebate and allowance and rate rebate schemes only. The data for 1982-83 combine information from both the old and the new schemes.

	Current prices £ million	1990-91 prices £ million
1980-81	270	494
1981-82	390	651
1982-83	560	873
1983-84	1,220	1,817
1984-85	1,354	1,919
1985-86	1,479	1,988
1986-87	1,635	2,125
1987-88	1,714	2,113
1988-89	1,373	1,577
1989-90	1,261	1,362

Notes:

1. In 1988-89 maximum rates rebate was reduced from 100 per cent. to 80 per cent.
2. Rates were replaced by community charge in 1989-90 in Scotland.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish the details of the poll tax benefit caseload, at the latest convenient date, for (a) Coventry, (b) Warwickshire and (c) each standard region;

(2) if he is now in a position to give a substantive answer to the question from the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, on poll tax benefit, to which a holding answer was given on Thursday 13 December 1990, written question 44.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 13 December 1990]: The latest available information, counting couples as one claim, and based on benefit caseload processed by 31 August 1990 is in the table.

The August 1990 figures are likely to underestimate the current position because some authorities still had a number of unprocessed claims at that time.

Pensioners

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update the answer given to the then hon. Member for Kensington on 14 July 1987, Official Report, column 451, showing the number of pensioners with gross weekly incomes other than the state basic pension of up to £5, £5 to £10, £10 to £15, £15 to £20, £20 to £30, £30 to £40, £40 to £50, £50 to £60, £60 to £70, £70 to £80, £80 to £90, £90 to £100, £100 to £110, £110 to £120, £120 to £130, £130 to £140, £140 to £150, £150 to £200, £250 to £300, £300 to £400, £400 to £500 and over £500, distinguishing between single and married pensioners.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the table.

Sickness Benefit

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the claim of Mr. K O (Ref. RM 173P/CO999/71/83/3) for sickness benefit and the reasons for the delays in this case.

Mr. Jack: The office of determination of contribution questions now has the information required to give a decision. A notice of that decision, given on behalf of the Secretary of State by an authorised officer of the Department, will be sent to Mr. O's solicitor, together with an explanatory covering letter, within the next few days. Any delay was due to the complexity of the case and the need thoroughly to investigate Mr. O's national insurance and benefits position over a period of 21 years.

Social Fund Loans

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of converting all outstanding social fund loans into grants.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 21 January 1991]: The cost of converting all social fund loans outstanding on 31 December 1990 into grants would be £137 million.

National Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated full year revenue effect in 1990-91 and 1991-92 of (a) abolishing the upper earnings limit for employees' national insurance contributions, (b) allowing personal allowances against such contributions and (c) (a) and (b) together.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 21 January 1991]: The revenue effects of the measures described are estimated to be as follows:

National insurance contribution revenue effect

	1990-91 £ billion	1991-92 £ billion
(a)	+2·5	+2·5
(b)	−1·5	−1·5
(c)	+1·0	+1·0

The estimates assume a contribution-free band of employees' earnings up to a lower earnings limit equivalent to a single person's income tax allowance and a 9 per cent. contribution rate on earnings above that limit.

SCOTLAND

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. Lang: A wide range of positive measures, including energy surveys of buildings and the active promotion of good housekeeping practices, has been, and will continue to be, undertaken. Very useful savings have been secured in recent years by positive management related to the setting of realistic but demanding targets. Because of changes in Departmental responsibility and limits on the data available it is not possible to give precise figures on a satisfactory basis for year on year comparisons of total expenditure.

Expenditure

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each year since 1974-75 (a) the total national health service expenditure and (b) the capital expenditure, in Scotland, giving the figures at constant prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Health Service

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of Scottish gross domestic product has been allocated to the health service in Scotland in each year since 1978.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Total national health service expenditure in Scotland as a percentage of Scottish gross domestic product is set out in the following table for the years for which information on Scottish GDP is available:

	Per cent.
1978-79	6·8
1979-80	7·1
1980-81	7·9

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the amount spent on advertising for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available from health boards' annual accounts about advertising costs is shown in the table:

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount of environmentally sensitive area-related grant paid out in each of the environmentally sensitive areas since their inception; what is the total number of individual grant recipients in each environmentally sensitive area; and what is the estimated total number of eligible individuals in each environmentally sensitive area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

Highlands and Islands Development Board

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the total budget available to the Highlands and Islands Development Board in the current financial year, broken down into constituent areas.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is not available.

Training

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about new training measures in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Apart from the training credits pilot, which will become operational under the management of Grampian Enterprise Limited on 1 April 1991, there are no new national training measures to be introduced in Scotland in 1991-92. However, Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and local enterprise companies will become fully operational on 1 April 1991 and will have full responsibility for administration of the Government's training programmes in Scotland.

The local enterprise companies, in preparing their businees plans, have been encouraged to adopt an innovative approach to the provision of training in their areas; and it is clear from the business plans which I have seen that they have risen to this challenge and have developed many interesting new approaches to deal with training needs in their area. Decisions on development of these ideas into operational concepts have yet to be taken by Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and individual local enterprise companies, in the light of the resources available to them and their own priorities.

Gulf Casualties

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to make additional funds available to health boards to ensure that hospital operations postponed because of the Gulf crisis can be carried out within a reasonable time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards have been promised that the full cost of treating Gulf casualties will be met. The resources available to them for treatment of their catchment population will continue to be available for that purpose.

Student Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his most up-to-date estimate of the amount spent per head per full-time equivalent student in public sector Scottish higher education colleges in (a) this financial year and (b) next financial year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I estimate that £4,150 of Government funding per full-time equivalent student was provided to the Scottish grant-aided colleges of higher education in 1990-91, including recurrent grant-in-aid and tuition fees paid through the student awards system but excluding grants for capital expenditure and maintenance awards. The figure for 1991-92 is not available since grant-in-aid funding for that year has not yet been announced.

Penal Institutions (Governors)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish by institution the salary scales of the governors of penal institutions in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information, by institution on the complement and grades of governors and the salary scales appropriate to each grade is set out in the table.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prison officers (a) joined and (b) left the prison service in each of the last five years for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is as follows. The statistics for those leaving the Scottish prison service includes retirals, resignations and dismissals. The larger number of staff recruited in 1988 reflects the increase in manpower required to implement the "fresh start" initiative of eliminating overtime.

	(a) Joined	(b) Left

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by institution the establishment of all penal institutions in Scotland and the current vacancies, and at which grades in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information, by institution, is as follows. The complement figures are as at 1 April 1990 and the vacancy profile is as at January 1991.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will initiate a study of the causeway/barrage proposal put forward by Mr. Peter Findlay, as an alternative to the proposed Skye bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Both the Scottish Office and the Department of Energy are already aware of Mr. Findlay's proposals. Decisions on investment in additional electricity generating capacity are for the industry to take in the light of its own assessment of present and future needs, having regard to the quantity and diversity of plant already on the system as well as the economic viability of potential new developments. I will not therefore be initiating a study into any possible alternative to the bridge. The plans for the construction of the Skye bridge will not be delayed or put in abeyance as a consequence of Mr. Findlay's proposals.

Gartcosh

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the Scottish Development Agency to discuss the future development of the former British Steel Corporation site at Gartcosh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no current plans for a meeting on this matter. The Scottish Development Agency has sold part of the site for redevelopment, and potential uses for the remainder are being discussed with interested parties.

Land Compensation

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many owner occupiers and how many tenants received compensation due to displacement of their houses, under the Land Compensation (Scotland) Act 1973, for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 January 1991]: Information on the numbers of owner occupiers and tenants who received compensation for the compulsory purchase of their houses is not held centrally. Details are however available on the numbers of home loss payments and disturbance payments made under the Land Compensation (Scotland) Act 1973. The figures are:

Financial year	Number of home loss payments	Number of disturbance payments
1979-80	1,645	2,034
1980-81	396	928
1981-82	337	192
1982-83	291	673
1983-84	119	342
1984-85	136	2
1985-86	102	3
1986-87	34	45
1987-88	119	64
1988-89	130	150

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the staffing complement of the new Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland includes an education officer or adviser; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The allocation of duties to staff is a matter for the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland. The promotion of education and advice on conservation is a key task for the new body.

Steel Industry (Lanarkshire)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been lost in the steel industry in Lanarkshire since 1974; and how many people are still employed in the steel industry in Lanarkshire.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The net loss in employment in the steel industry in Lanarkshire between 1974 and 1989 is almost 10,000 jobs. Of this figure, just under half were lost due to closures and just over half due to contractions. The provisional employment figure for mid 1989 was 5,600.

Environmental Education

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to seek the advice of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds concerning the development and implementation of environmental education in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The views of the RSPB and other voluntary environmental bodies operating in Scotland on environmental education are of considerable importance to the development of a national strategy for environmental education in Scotland. This is the task of a working group, established by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) in September 1990, which I know is currently consulting the RSPB and other such organisations in Scotland.

EMPLOYMENT

Pre-entry Closed Shop

14. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workers he estimates will be affected by the provisions contained in the Employment Act 1990 to outlaw the pre-entry closed shop.

Mr. Howard: In 1989 there were some 1·3 million people working in pre-entry closed shops. As a result of the Employment Act 1990, pre-entry closed shops can no longer be lawfully established or maintained. That can be only of benefit to all employees and to all those seeking work.

Tourism

16. Sir Robert McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effect on investment in tourism projects in England of the termination of section 4 grants.

Mr. Jackson: My Department commissioned consultants to look into projects which had been affected by the suspension of section 4 funding in England. The main finding was that, at the time the research was carried out, most of these projects had already gone ahead.

Training and Enterprise Councils

17. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any proposals to alter the funding of training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have agreed a number of changes in the way training and enterprise councils will be funded from April 1991. These changes, which have been warmly welcomed by the TECs, will result in TECs having more freedom to deploy their resources more effectively. May I add how very much I am looking forward to launching the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC this Friday.

Disabled People

18. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to increase employment opportunities for disabled persons.

Mr. Jackson: My Department provides a wide range of services and schemes specifically designed to help people with disabilities. Following an extensive consultation exercise my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State is presently considering how to make the Department's services more effective for people with disabilities.

21. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many submissions he has received in response to the consultative document "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities".

Mr. Jackson: By 21 January my Department had received 353 replies.

Labour Statistics

19. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were in employment in June 1979 and June 1990.

Mr. Howard: The work force in employment in the United Kingdom stood at 25,365,000 in June 1979 and at 27,336,000 in June 1990—an increase of just under 2 million over the period.

22. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to alter the methods used to count the number of unemployed.

Mr. Jackson: The monthly unemployment figures will continue to be based on the claimant unemployed. These figures are supplemented by annual labour force survey information on the international definition. From 1992 the latter will be available on a quarterly basis.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the seasonally adjusted unemployment figures for each month of 1990, by district, in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Jackson: Seasonally adjusted unemployment figures are not available below regional level. Unadjusted figures for the local authority districts in Yorkshire and Humberside are available on the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library.

Training Schemes

20. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the total numbers of people on training schemes and not registered as unemployed for the latest available date.

Mr. Jackson: There are about 200,000 people on employment training and 350,000 on youth training. None of these people is registered as unemployed.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently on courses under the employment training and youth training schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: There are about 200,000 people on employment training and 350,000 on youth training. I am pleased that so many people are taking advantage of the Government's significant investment in training.

Small Shops

24. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the employment and economic implications for small shops of the proposals to amend the European Commission's working time directive to make Sundays and weekends compulsory rest days.

Mr. Forth: The European Commission has told the European Parliament that in view of different traditions and practices they do not recommend that weekly rest days should be harmonised across the Community. The United Kingdom Government believe a blanket prohibition of Sunday or weekend working would be extremely damaging to the interests of consumers and employers generally.

25. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will announce current progress on the operation of training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Howard: Excellent progress is being made in setting up training and enterprise councils. All 82 TECs in England and Wales are now in place, with 46 fully operational. By summer, the full network will be fully operational, almost two years ahead of schedule.

Long-term Unemployment

26. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he is taking to help the long-term unemployed back into work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Long-term unemployment is at its lowest level for eight years and the number of claimants unemployed for a year or more has fallen by 849,000 since April 1986. We are helping long-term unemployed people get back into work through an extensive range of employment and training measures. These are kept under regular review and in November I announced that next year my Department will provide up to 100,000 additional opportunities for long-term unemployed people through programmes such as job club and the job interview guarantee.

Computer Personnel, London

27. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has concerning the number of unfilled vacancies for computer personnel in Greater London.

Mr. Jackson: In Greater London in December 1990 there was one vacancy for computer personnel, which had been notified to a jobcentre. There may be many more advertised elsewhere.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what statutory provisions regulate the amount of notice employers must give before changing an employee's contract of employment without any discussions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: In general, the terms and conditions contained in a contract of employment and changes to them are a matter for the parties to the contract and are not governed by legislation. Changes to contractual terms can only be made with the consent of both parties unless the contract of employment contains a term allowing the employer to make unilateral changes. An employer may give notice to terminate an existing contract and offer employment on new terms and conditions. In that case the employee will be entitled to the minimum notice laid down by statute or contractual notice, whichever is greater.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the organisations he consulted on the effect on small and medium sized firms of the new proposals on the reimbursement of statutory sick pay.

Mr. Forth: Consultation on the Statutory Sick Pay Bill is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security. However, I have welcomed the opportunity to discuss this issue with small firms representative organisations and I have received a number of representations from them on the proposals. I have conveyed their views to the Secretary of State for Social Security and will continue to keep in touch with him on this important issue.

Decency Threshold

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has received from the Council of Europe to establish a decency threshold for low paid work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: No such proposals have been received. Pay is a matter for negotiators to determine in the light of their particular circumstances.

Unemployment, Lambeth

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary State for Employment how many people are currently registered as unemployed in the SW2 and SW9 postal districts of Lambeth.

Mr. Jackson: In December 1990 the numbers of unemployed claimants, not seasonally adjusted, in Lambeth SW2 and SW9 were 3,183 and 3,189 respectively.

Low Pay

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary State for Employment what is Her Majesty's Government's policy for dealing with low pay for women in part-time employment.

Mr. Forth: Pay for women in part-time employment, as for other workers, is a matter for negotiators themselves to determine in the light of their particular circumstances.

Working Conditions

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary State for Employment how he intends to improve health protection and working conditions in the workplace.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Commission's plan of work for 1990-91 and beyond sets out the priorities of the commission and executive for this and the next two years. These priorities will be rolled forward into the commission's plan for work for 1991-92 and beyond.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the total amount of industrial tribunal applications received in England and Wales during (a) 1989 and (b) 1990; what was the number which actually proceeded to hearing; and what was the average lapse of time between receipt of application and hearing taking place.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The information requested is recorded in financial years only and is as follows:

Registered Applications
Year ended 31 March 1990	31,356
Period 1 April 1990 to 31 December 1990	27,698
Cases heard
Year ended 31 March 1990	9,093
Period 1 April 1990 to 31 December 1990	7,018

The information recorded by industrial tribunals does not make it possible to calculate the average time between the receipt of applications and hearing.

However, the following table shows how long registered applications take to come to hearing.

Percentage of cases coming to hearing in less than:	Year ended 31 March 1990 per cent.	1 April 1990 to 31 December per cent.
6 weeks	5	3
8 weeks	20	12
10 weeks	38	27
12 weeks	52	44
16 weeks	73	65
20 weeks	82	80
26 weeks	92	90

Some two thirds of all registered applications do not come to hearing. They are withdrawn or settled prior to hearing.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the total number of industrial tribunal applications received in Scotland during (a) 1989 and (b) 1990; what was the number which actually proceeded to hearing; and what was the average lapse of time between receipt of application and hearing taking place.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The information requested is recorded in financial years only and is as follows:

Registered Applications
Year ended 31 March 1990	: — 3,341
Period 1 April 1990 to 31 December 1990	: — 3,095
Cases heard
Year ended 31 March 1990	: — 1,288
Period 1 April 1990 to 31 December 1990	: — 1,218

The information recorded by industrial tribunals does not make it possible to calculate the average time between the receipt of applications and hearing.

However, the following table shows how long registered applications take to come to hearing.

Percentage of cases coming to hearing in less than:	Year ended 31 March 1990 per cent.	1 April 1990 to 31 December per cent.
6 weeks	1	0
8 weeks	4	13
10 weeks	20	31
12 weeks	43	48
16 weeks	72	69
20 weeks	85	83
26 weeks	91	88

Some two-thirds of all registered applications do not come to hearing. They are withdrawn or settled prior to hearing.

Part-time and Temporary Workers

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Yardley (Mr. Bevan) of 20 December 1990, Official Report, column 315, what concerns the British Government had about proposals from the European Community for directives under articles 100 and 100A of the treaty designed to regulate the rights and benefits available to part-time and temporary workers.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The directives would unnecessarily increase directly the cost of employing part-time and temporary workers and they would add to the burden of regulations on employers. The Government believe that the response of employers to such increased costs and regulation would be to reduce the number of people employed and that the directives would therefore have the perverse effect of reducing total employment and increasing unemployment.

In addition, one of these directives has been proposed by the European Commission under the wrong article of the treaty of Rome. Article 100a of the treaty explicitly excludes matters relating to the "rights and interests of employed persons".

DEFENCE

Service Personnel

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are employed in the Army, Royal Navy and Royal Air Force; and how many are non-combatant.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There were 303,003 service personnel employed in the armed forces as at 30 September 1990, including 12,677 non-combatants. The numbers employed in each service, together with the numbers of non-combatants are shown in the table.

	Total personnel	Non-combatants[1]
Royal Navy	54,859	2,462
Royal Marines	7,474
Army	151,764	7,218
Royal Air Force	88,906	2,997

[1] Medical and dental personnel, as well as chaplains, are regarded as non-combatants. Musicians have also been included in the figures for non-combatants, given that they generally have medical roles.

The Gulf

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on which weapons being used by Iraq against allied forces were supplied by (a) the USSR, (b) Great Britain, (c) the United States of America, (d) France and (e) Germany; and whether he will consider an embargo on all arms sales from the United Kingdom and recommend the United Nations to call for an international cessation of arms sales.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the policy of this and previous Administrations not to comment on such matters relating to other sovereign states or on specific United Kingdom exports to other countries. As to the rest of the hon. Member's question regarding possible United Kingdom and international cessation of arms sales under UN auspices, I can confirm that there are no such plans.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will enumerate by nationality the merchant seamen now serving on ships chartered by Her Majesty's Government for use in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This information is not held centrally in the form requested, but I understand that British, German, Belgian, Danish, Filipino, Spanish, Dutch, Italian and Greek seamen are employed on merchant ships chartered by Her Majesty's Government for use in the Gulf.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, by numbers of vessels, the countries in which merchant ships chartered by Her Majesty's Government for use in the Gulf are registered.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Country of registration	Number of vessels
United Kingdom	7
Norway	11
Antigua	7
Spain	2
Italy	1
Belgium	1
Denmark	26
Cyprus	16
Bahamas	6
Greece	2
St. Vincent	1
Honduras	1
Holland	22
Germany	7
Panama	5
Finland	2
Iceland	1
Sweden	6

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many merchant vessels have been chartered by Her Majesty's Government for use in the Gulf; and how many are registered in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total number of merchant vessels chartered by Her Majesty's Government for use in the Gulf, as at 25 January 1991, is 123, of which seven were registered in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of whether any escape of nuclear material has occurred following the reported destruction of Iraq's nuclear facilities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been reported that damage has been caused to the buildings housing Iraq's two operational nuclear reactors as a result of allied air activity. The design and construction of both reactors is well known; they are small reactors and their cores are surrounded by water below ground level. We assess that any significant radioactive contamination resulting from damage would be confined to the Tuwaitha nuclear research centre.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take immediate action to ensure that the public are made fully aware of the arrangements made to allow parcels to be sent to the service men in the Gulf; and if he will ensure that accurate information is given to the relevant charitable organisations and the media.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Detailed information on forces concessionary rates for sending parcels to service personnel in the Gulf has been published through official, welfare and media channels.

Within BAOR, from where the majority of personnel deployed, the information has been publicised through forces radio, television and newspapers as well as information sheets at forces post offices and through discussions with wives' clubs.

Within the United Kingdom, similar information has been provided through unit families officers and welfare services, Post Office posters, TV statements and press releases by both the royal mail and the Ministry of Defence. A further MOD press release is in hand. In addition a royal mail parcelforce hotline has been established specifically to deal with inquiries from members of the public.

Homosexuality (Services)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men and women in the year 1990 were (i) administratively discharged and (ii) dismissed from the (a) Army, (b) Royal Navy and (c) Royal Air Force as a result of their homosexuality or homosexual behaviour; of those discharged or dismissed, how many faced (x) no formal charges, (y) summary discipline and (z) courts martial; how many of those who faced summary discipline or courts martial were (1) fined, and (2) sentenced to custodial imprisonment; and what were the fines and lengths of imprisonment imposed in each individual case.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Browning Automatic Pistol

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to replace the standard issue Browning automatic pistol used by British forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to replace the standard Browning automatic pistol on general issue to British forces.

HMS Sandpiper and HMS Petrel

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to dispose of HMS Sandpiper and HMS Petrel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Sandpiper and HMS Petrel were paid off on 31 December 1990. No decision has yet been made concerning their final disposal.

Tornados

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current replacement cost for the total number of Tornado planes lost in the Gulf both during hostilities and during training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The question of replacing Tornados lost so far will be considered in the light of total losses sustained in the Gulf.

Desert Boots

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when British soldiers were first deployed to the Gulf; when appropriate desert boots were supplied to British soldiers; when all soldiers in the Gulf requiring desert boots will be supplied with them; where the desert boots now being supplied to British forces were made; and at what total cost of manufacture and supply;

(2) what complaints he has received from British forces in the Gulf about their boots issued at the time of deployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The first significant deployment of ground troops to the Gulf followed my right hon. Friend's announcement on 14 September 1990. A report from 7 Armoured Brigade at the end of October 1990 indicated that some individuals were experiencing discomfort with their combat boots because of the heat and steps were at once taken to procure desert boots. Following trials, the first orders were placed in November 1990. Issues of desert boots have already been made and it is intended that all troops requiring desert combat boots will have at least one pair by mid-March. All desert boots for our forces have been ordered from United Kingdom manufacturers. The cost of these boots is a matter of commercial confidentiality.

RN Detention Quarters

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is proposed to transfer the functions of the Royal Navy detention quarters at Portsmouth to the combined Army and Royal Air Force facilities in Colchester.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The future of the Royal Navy detention quarters at Portsmouth is under consideration, but no decisions have yet been made.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are taken to ensure that his officials and scientific advisers are using the most up-to-date medical and scientific knowledge to study the relationship between radiation exposure and subsequent illness for nuclear test veterans.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 22 January 1991]: The National Radiological Protection Board and the Imperial Cancer Research Fund are accepted authorities in the fields of radiological protection and epidemiology. The methodology they used in the first test veterans study, which will also be used for the follow-up study, was subject to review by other experts in the field of epidemiology and no criticism was made by them.

ENERGY

Energy Conservation

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of eligible homes in England and Wales currently have (a) cavity wall insulation, (b) 150mm of loft insulation, (c) thermostats on 50 per cent. or more radiator valves, (d) double glazing on 50 per cent. or more external windows, (e) compact fluorescent lighting in 50 per cent. or more light fittings, (f) energy labelling on domestic electrical appliances, (g) gas condensing boilers and (h) floor insulation; and by when he forecasts that each of these figures will reach 75 per cent. and 90 per cent. of the eligible market.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is estimated that some 19 per cent. of eligible homes in England and Wales have cavity wall insulation, 43 per cent. have four inches or more of loft insulation, 30 per cent. have double glazing installed in 40 per cent. or more rooms, less than 1 per cent. have compact fluorescent lighting in 50 per cent. or more light fittings, and less than 5 per cent. have gas condensing boilers. No figures are available for thermostatic radiator valves or floor insulation. Energy consumption information is provided in brochures or leaflets by manufacturers for the most important energy consuming domestic electrical appliances.

The Government have made no forecasts of when such energy efficiency measures will achieve particular levels of domestic market penetration.

Domestic Refuse

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether, in the light of Her Majesty's Government's stated recycling and environmental objectives, his Department makes any differentiation between the use of raw untreated domestic refuse in incineration and refuse-derived fuel.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department is keen to encourage the development of renewable energy sources whenever they are, or have the prospects of becoming, economic and environmentally acceptable. This applies equally to the use of untreated domestic refuse in incinerators and to refuse-derived fuel.

Electricity Prices (Large Industrial Consumers)

Mr. Oakes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what representations he has received, and from which bodies, for the extension of the large industrial consumer scheme of electricity prices beyond April;

(2) if he will extend the large industrial consumer scheme on electricity prices for a further two years from April.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have received a number of such representations. The price capping arrangements for large industrial consumers was established only as a one-year transitional measure: I do not propose seeking to extend it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General on what dates the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal aid has met within the last 12 months; on what dates the advisory committee's legal services conference has been convened within the last 12 months; and when the advisory committee will publish its report for 1989-90.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's advisory committee met twice in the last 12 months, on 8 February and 2 October 1990. No legal services conference has been convened within that period. Since both meetings in 1990 were devoted to considering options for the future role of the Committee, no annual report will be published for 1989-90. The next report will be published in 1991-92 and will address the committee's future role.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Workers Educational Association

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how he intends to monitor local authority support for the Workers Educational Association; and what steps he is taking to ensure adequate grant for the Workers Educational Association's programme;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that changes in the financing of the Workers Educational Association will not adversely affect the organisation's activities.

Mr. Eggar: Under the arrangements for education support grant, local education authorities are expected to report to the Department on each activity for which they receive grant. Authorities have been asked to provide a short progress report on the WEA ESG to the Department by 31 March 1991. The working party of officials, which was established to consider the funding of the WEA during the transitional period, will take account of those reports in making further recommendations.

The Government have not reduced overall support for the WEA; provision is being transferred to local education authorities. We shall undertake a review during the third year of the transitional period to assess how authorities are carrying out their new responsibility for the WEA.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the new funding arrangements for the Workers Educational Association will take into account the increased administrative resource impact on district Workers Educational Associations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In several WEA districts, district secretaries already have formal or informal arrangements for liaising with their local education authorities. The new sytem of funding the WEA provides district secretaries with the opportunity to build on those arrangements. In addition, the Department's grant to the national association will now include specific provision for the costs of the employment of district secretaries and basic administrative support. This central support will continue when responsibility for funding the districts is fully transferred to local education authorities.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on the role of the Workers Educational Association in providing adult education in the 1990s; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The WEA is the main voluntary sector provider of adult education at local level, and I would not expect that to change. The Government wish to encourage local education authorities to take account of WEA provision within their strategic plans for further education, including adult education. Greater collaboration should enable a more effective response to local needs.

Dyslexia

Mr. Peter Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what training is given to the teaching profession on how to identify cases of dyslexia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: All courses of initial teacher training are required to equip prospective teachers to teach the full range of pupils whom they are likely to encounter in an ordinary school and to introduce them to ways of identifying children with special educational needs. This should include cases of dyslexia. Further in-service training is also available for teachers of pupils with dyslexia. Training of teachers in special educational needs in ordinary schools has been a national priority area under the local education authority training grants scheme since the scheme came into operation in 1987. The Department has also sponsored the production of an audio-visual pack to help teachers in ordinary schools to identify children with special educational needs. Part of this deals with dyslexia.

Mr. Peter Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied with the provisions made by education authorities for the special tuition of children suffering from dyslexia.

Mr. Fallon: Yes. Under the Education Act 1981, LEAs have to make appropriate provision for pupils with dyslexia, or specific learning difficulties, as they have to make provision for all other pupils in their area. Decisions on invidual cases—including whether, or what, specific provision should be made—are matters for the LEA concerned.

University Pay

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the percentage increase in pay for university (a) teachers and (b) support staff in each year from 1985 to 1990.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The figures are given in the table and relate to total average percentage increases during the year 1 April to 31 March. The figures take into account both lump sum payments and discretionary pay awards where applicable. The normal settlement dates are 1 April, except for clerical staff and computer operators where it is 1 July. Phased increases have not been identified.

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
Academic staff
Non-clinical	5·25	16·6	7·4	[1]—	7·0	10·0
Clincal	6·3	8·8	8·25	8·1	8·0	9·0
Support staff
Technical staff	5·3	5·5	5·8	5·1	11·0	9·0
Clerical staff	5·4	5·9	6·0	5·0	8·3	10·6
Manual staff	6·3	8·3	7·2	[2]14·0	—	9·6
Computer operators	5·25	5·7	5·9	6·1	8·3	9·0

[1] The pay settlement for non-clinical academics agreed in March 1987 provided for an increase of 16·6 per cent. from 1 December 1986 and a further 7·4 per cent. from 1 March 1988.

[2] The settlement reached in 1988 for manual staff provided for an increase of £4 per week from 1 April, and assimilation to a new pay structure from 1 December 1988 with a minimum increase of £7 per week.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in connection with the pay awards for university teachers, support staff and technicians.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend and I have meetings from time to time with representatives of the staff associations representing university staff, at which various issues, often including salary levels, are discussed. The Government also receive a number of letters from individual university employees.

Art Teaching

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the interim report of the national curriculum working group for art will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I are publishing today the interim report of the national curriculum working group for art, together with our letter to the group's chairman, Professor Colin Renfrew. Copies of this initial advice, including our letter, have been placed in the Library. We welcome the progress which the group has made in developing the attainment targets and programmes of study for art. We have emphasised the need for the group to make recommendations that are much more flexible and less prescriptive than those for other national curriculum subjects, and that the language in which the targets and programmes of study are expressed should be simple, clear and readily understood.

Although we have concluded that it would not be right to compel every single pupil in the 14-to-16 age group to study art, we have made it clear to the group that we still wish it to offer advice in its final report on appropriate courses of study for this age group. We look forward to receiving the group's final report by the end of June.

Sports Council

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he has made for continuing the payment of Government grant-in-aid to the Sports Council.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Parliamentary approval for my Department to make payments of grant-in-aid to the Sports Council will be sought in a spring supplementary estimate for the schools, research and miscellaneous services vote (class XI, vote 1). Pending that approval, urgent expenditure of £14,161,000 will be met by repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq (Sanctions)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East of 24 January, Official Report, column 455, if he will seek to obtain a copy of the report held by the United States State Department detailing the 500 companies in 50 countries who have allegedly broken the United Nations embargo on Iraq; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

The Prime Minister: No. The United States State Department has assured us that no such publicly available reports have been prepared or published by it.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Naturalisation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of naturalisation and registration work is being dealt with at (a) Croydon and (b) Liverpool.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 31 December 1990, 36 per cent. of outstanding applications were being dealt with in Lunar house, Croydon and 64 per cent. in Liverpool.

Probation Service

Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the appellate procedure available to a probation officer who is dissatisfied with the point of salary grading determined locally.

Mr. John Patten: The joint negotiating committee for the probation service makes recommendations to the Secretary of State who determines the conditions of service of probation officers by virtue of paragraph 18A of schedule 3 to the Powers of the Criminal Courts Act 1973. The existing terms and conditions are set out in the code of conditions of service of probation officers. Each probation committee has a grievance procedure which all probation officers employed by it are made aware of. The code contains a model grievance procedure for the guidance of committees. In addition, where there is a complaint of unreasonable exercise of any discretion granted to probation committees in the code, the national conciliation function of the joint negotiating committee may be invoked.

Electoral Registers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he hopes to publish, by parliamentary constituency, the number of overseas electors included in the 1991-92 electoral registers; and if he will make it his policy to publish this figure also as a percentage of the electorate.

Mrs. Rumbold: The numbers of overseas electors included in the electoral register for 1991-92, by parliamentary constituency, will be published in the summer. We have no plans to publish these figures as a percentage of the registered electorate. We shall very shortly make known to the House the numbers of overseas electors included in the draft register for 1991-92, which was published on 28 November 1990.

Probation Officers

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to sign the agreement, following arbitration, with the National Association of Probation Officers on last year's pay award; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are considering the arbitration recommendation for main grade probation officers' pay. I will write to the hon. Member when we announce our decision, which will be as soon as possible.

Iraqi Nationals

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons were the Iraqi nationals detained in Scotland removed from that jurisdiction and taken to England.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Iraqi nationals detained in the last two weeks pending deportation on conducive grounds for reason of national security came from all parts of the United Kingdom. All were initially transferred to a central location in a London prison to facilitate interviewing, appeals and removal. Most have since been transferred to Her Majesty's prison Full Sutton in Yorkshire in the light of discussions with the International Red Cross.

Barlinnie and Saughton Prisons

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied that appropriate facilities exist for the detention of individuals under the Immigration Act 1971 at Her Majesty's prisons Barlinnie and Saughton.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Yes. Persons detained under the Immigration Act are detained at the most appropriate location to facilitate further inquiries, any appeal and, if agreed, eventual removal.

Criminal Records

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish his scrutiny team's report on the proposal that the maintenance and disclosure of criminal records should pass to a statutory agency independent of the police.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend expects to receive the report of the efficiency scrutiny into the maintenance and use of criminal records in April. We will then consider the report and the question of publication.

MSM, Warrington

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what involvement his Department has with MSM, unit 9, centre 21, Bridge lane, Woolston, Warrington; and what advice the Home Office is giving them in relation to security.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Red Routes

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what proportion of parking tickets issued have been challenged in (a) London as a whole in 1990 and (b) on the red route since its inception.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Complete figures for 1990 are not yet available, but the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that, in 1989, 2,216,989 fixed penalty notices were issued in the Metropolitan police area for non-endorsable, driver-absent offences. Information is not available on all challenges to those notices, but 4,783 of them were contested by court process. Since the inception of the red route, 1,015 fixed penalty notices relating to offences on it have been recorded by the Central Ticket Office as being issued. It is too early to say how many may be challenged.

Provincial Police Forces

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to change the arrangements for inspection of provincial police forces by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Yes. I have decided that, from January 1991, the 42 provincial forces, including the City of London police, inspected annually by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary under the Police Act 1964, will normally be subject to primary inspections once every two years and intermediate inspections every other year. Primary inspections will cover the present full range of issues; intermediate inspections will involve similar procedures but will concentrate on selected issues in greater depth. Reports on all 42 forces will continue to be published each year and will contain details of any thematic inspections (ie of a particular subject area across a number of forces) relevant to the force in question. The aim of the changes is greater flexibility to concentrate Her Majesty's inspectorate's efforts where they are most needed. Chief constables and local police authorities are being told of these changes.

WALES

Sheep (Killings)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sheep were killed by dogs in Wales during 1990; what were the corresponding figures for the last 10 years and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not held centrally.

Housing Associations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to make further changes in the monitoring of the activities of Welsh housing associations; and on what date they will become effective.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 28 January 1991.

Land Authority for Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to review the appointments of Geoffrey Inkin as chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation and chairman of the Land Authority for Wales, and of John Allen as chairman of Tai Cymru and vice-chairman of the Land Authority for Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No.

M4

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish full details of the timetable for the completion of the missing sections of the M4 between Baglan and Lon-las, including the dates of awarding of contracts.

Sir Wyn Roberts:; Work is under way on the Earlswood-Lon-las section, which is due for completion in spring 1993. Work is planned to start on the Briton Ferry-Earlswood section of the M4 in 1991-92. Construction of the Baglan-Briton Ferry section is planned to start six months later, so that both sections are completed together by 1995. It is too soon to say when contracts will be awarded.

Rechem Plant, Pontypool

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is now in a position to respond to the Welsh Affairs Committee's second report of Session 1989-90 "Rechem International Limited: Incineration Plant, Pontypool" (House of Commons Paper 80) published on 6 June 1990.

Mr. David Hunt: I am pleased to announce that the response has been published today.

Higher Education

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has reached a decision on future funding and planning arrangements for the local authority higher education sector in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Last year, my predecessor commissioned a report from consultants, Price Waterhouse, on the polytechnic of Wales. I received the report in May in which the consultants recommended that responsibility for funding the polytechnic should be transferred from the maintaining local authority to my Department. Section 227(4) of the Education Reform Act provides for any or all of the local authority higher education institutions that meet criteria specified in section 122 to be incorporated and to leave the local authority sector if the holder of my office considers that to be necessary.

My hon. Friend the Minister of State has had face-to-face consultations about the recommendation with the polytechnic and the other institutions, and with representatives of those employed in the institutions. The Wales Advisory Body for Local Authority Higher Education (WAB) has discussed the question fully. All eight local education authorities were invited to provide their views in writing on the recommendation and on the implications for the other higher education institutions of implementing the recommendation for the polytechnic. All those who have responded are agreed that whatever decision is made for the polytechnic should apply to the other institutions in the local authority sector.

In the light of the views expressed by those consulted I have now concluded that it would be in the best interests of those higher education institutions in Wales which are currently maintained by local authorities and which meet the specified criteria to be incorporated as independent institutions with effect from 1 April 1992. This will provide a period of 14 months during which they will be able to prepare themselves for independence. From 1 April 1992 the institutions will receive their funding from my Department. The appropriate transfer of funds between local authority resources and the Welsh Office's programme resources will be made for 1992-93.

The Wales Advisory Body for Local Authority Higher Education, which has advised me and my predecessors on the distribution of local authority funds allocated for higher education since 1983, will be dissolved on 1 April 1992. It is my intention, however, to invite the Wales advisory body to advise me on the distribution of funding for the sector for 1992-93, after which that responsibility will pass to my Department. I shall then be establishing a small group of people involved in higher education and business to advise me on the issues involved in funding higher education directly.

The institutions to be incorporated and which will leave the local authority section on 1 April 1992 are as follows:

The polytechnic of Wales
Bangor Normal college of higher education
Cardiff institute of higher education
Gwent college of higher education
West Glamorgan institute of higher education

The Welsh college of music and drama has too few full-time equivalent students to be transferred without the agreement of its maintaining authority and my officials will be discussing with South Glamorgan county council whether it should be added to the institutions named.

I shall be laying the orders necessary to give effect to these proposals shortly.

Hospital and Community Health Services

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has now reached decisions about the allocation of resources for hospital and community health services in Wales for 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I announced on 11 December, subject to parliamentary aproval, my decision on the allocation of resources for health and personal social services in Wales. Within the resources available I propose to provide £1,188·4 million for the hospital and community health service in Wales. Excluding the cost of the artificial limb and appliance service (which is administered on my behalf by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority) £1,078·4 million will be provided for current purposes and £102·3 million for capital spending.

For current spending, this represents a cash increase of £103·7 million or 10·6 per cent. over estimated outturn for the current financial year. In addition, a further £2·63 million (0·3 per cent.) is available, representing both savings in central funding requirements and non-recurrent funding which is available as a result of health authorities repaying loans borrowed in earlier years.

In total, therefore, some £106·3 million is available for recurrent and non-recurrent revenue development purposes in 1991-92. This sum, together with the additional £10·4 million which authorities are expected as a minimum to achieve from new cost improvements and income generation schemes, provides an effective increase in resources over 1990-91 of 11·9 per cent.

Authorities will also receive a further £38 million in 1991-92 to meet the net cost of putting cross-border usage of services between Wales and England on a contractual basis. The additional funding available next year is also on top of the extra funding which is being provided to meet the recurrent effect of the supplementary provision made available during 1990-91 for the 1990 review body pay awards.

£92 million of this sum will be made available to health authorities for their discretionary use which represents a cash increase of 9·76 per cent. over this year's estimated outturn provision. £5·1 million will be allocated to fund the continuing and full year cost of developments which are being funded centrally in 1990-91. £9·2 million will be allocated to new centrally funded developments of both a recurrent and non-recurrent nature.

These developments, which are shown in the following table, will considerably assist authorities in meeting future service requirements including those associated with the introduction of the NHS White Paper reforms.

	£ million
Regional services and centrally funded developments	1·20
Expansion in medical staff numbers and day surgery facilities aimed at reducing junior doctors hours, waiting lists and waiting times	2·60
Manpower/Training	1·11
Project 2000	1·13
IT/Clinical audit, quality assurance	1·00
Training of ambulaneemen in defibrillation techniques	0·59
Care of the terminally ill	1·00
Other	0·61
	9·24

Of the capital provision, £60·9 million will be made available to health authorities for their discretionary use, but with proviso that at least 7·5 per cent. of each authority's share of these resources should be devoted to works associated with the maintenance of the estate. The provision includes a sum of £2·4 million which is available as a result of authorities repaying brokerage loans from earlier years. This amounts to a cash increase of 10 per cent. over last year's capital allocation. The balance is required for the all-Wales capital programme, including schemes associated with remedial work in four major hospitals and with the rationalisation of authorities' estates. Further details will be announced in due course.

The distribution of discretionary resources between authorities will, as in previous years, be based on capital formula shares but I shall be announcing new arrangements for 1992-93 and subsequent years in the next month or so.

The current and capital allocations to individual authorities are as shown in the following table. These allocations do not take into account the further sums which will be allocated when decisions have been taken on the distribution of the funds reserved for centrally directed developments and on the introduction of charging for various of the services provided by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

	Allocation (£ Million)
	Current Element	Capital Element
Clwyd	146·685	8·582
East Dyfed	89·184	4·382
Pembrokeshire	40·676	2·690
Gwent	156·325	8·454
Gwynedd	86·819	2·337
Mid Glamorgan	201·696	11·010
Powys	52·057	1·522
South Glamorgan	175·045	10·852
West Glamorgan	131·632	11·034

These current and capital allocations provide for a 3·8 per cent. real terms increase in overall discretionary spending by health authorities after taking into account the forecast of general inflation provided by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement; and they substantially exceed the resource planning assumptions which were issued to authorities last year.

In addition, authorities will be able to retain all the proceeds of their cost improvement programmes and income generation schemes. They will also retain the income which they raise from charges for private treatment and the receipts which they obtain from the sale of surplus land and buildings. Property sales are expected to generate a further £7 million in 1991-92. In total, I expect authorities to achieve additional savings and to generate additional income amounting to at least 1·1 per cent. of their recurrent revenue allocations.

The allocations therefore provide health authorities with a secure basis, not simply for maintaining services, but for the expansion of services on behalf of their resident populations next year. Thus, although the basis of funding has changed, there should be no effect on patient services as a consequence of that change. The allocations for next year represent the first step in the process of moving towards funding each health authority in line with its weighted capitation share. I shall be announcing the way in which weighted capitation shares will be calculated in due course when the consultation on this with DHAs in Wales is completed at the end of this month.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Household Incomes

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of households in Great Britain have a weekly income of less than £100.

Mr. Maples: It is estimated that in 1989 approximately 20 per cent. of households in Great Britain had a gross income below £100 per week, approximately two thirds of these were one-person households. This is the latest year for which information is available from the family expenditure survey.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing information available to him on the tax allowances and tax reliefs given to parents in European Community member states.

Mr. Maude: The latest available information is given in the following table, which is supplemented by notes. To make a valid comparison between countries the level of child benefits given through the social security system would also have to be taken into account.

All amounts have been converted to sterling using the latest available purchasing power parities.

Belgium

Deductable allowances are given:

1 child	BF 36,000	(£505)
2 children	BF 93,000	(£1,304)
3 children	BF 209,000	(£2,931)
4 children	BF 338,000	(£4,740)

Plus BF 129,000 (£1,809) for each additional child.

Plus BF 10,000 (£140) for each child under three years (if no deduction is claimed for childcare expenses).

Denmark

No child tax allowances are given.

France

Tax relief is given by means of a family quotient system. The benefit of this relief is normally limited to FF 12,180 (£1,018) for each child.

Germany

A child deduction of DM 3,024 (£783) is granted, reduced to DM 1,512 (£392) per child if the child is not maintained by the taxpayer, but by the former spouse of the taxpayer to whom he/she makes maintenance payments. If spouses are assessed separately, both may deduct DM 1,512 (£392) per child.

Greece

Child allowances are given:

First two children—Dr 130,000 (£666) each
Third child—Dr 208,000 (£1,066)
Fourth child—Dr 325,000 (£1,665)
Fifth and each subsequent child—Dr 390,000 (£1,998)

Ireland

There are no universal tax allowances for parents.

Italy

Each spouse may claim an income tax reduction of L50,928 (£21) per child.

Luxembourg

At lower income levels, eg not exceeding LF 883,200 (£13,228) if there is one child, or LF 918,600 (£13,758) for two children, relief is given through a family quotient system. In all other cases a tax credit is given depending on taxable income and the number of children. If taxable income does not exceed LF 2,150,400 (£32,206) the tax credit is for one child, 1 per cent. of taxable income plus LF 29,338 (£439) for two children, 2 per cent. of taxable income plus LF 54,694 (£819).

Increased tax credits are available for parents with taxable income exceeding LF 2,150,400 (£32,206).

Netherlands

There are no universal tax allowances for parents.

Portugal

There is a tax credit of Esc 12,000 (£75) for each child.

Spain

There is a tax credit of Pta 19,000 (£105) for each child.

United Kingdom

There are no universal tax allowances for parents.

Notes

1. According to the family quotient system which applies in France and in some cases in Luxembourg, the family's taxable income is divided by a certain coefficient (for example, in France, married person with one child—2·5, married person with two children—3). The income tax table is then applied and the resulting income tax is multiplied by the same coefficient.

2. Most European Community member states give special tax allowances and reliefs to single parents and parents of disabled children. In the United Kingdom, for example, a single parent can claim an additional personal allowance of £1,720, the same amount as the married couple's allowance.

Gift Aid Certificates

Mr. Channon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the shortage of forms for gift aid certificates; and if he will ensure that the Inland Revenue provides adequate supplies of the forms.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The gift aid scheme was introduced by the 1990 Finance Act. There has been a small number of telephone calls but no written representations to the charity division administering the scheme, in relation to the supply of forms. Initial demand for the forms exceeded expectations, but to date over 300,000 forms have been issued. Of these, 4,006 have been returned and processed, with a small number currently awaiting processing.

Requests for these forms are still higher than expected and additional stocks have been ordered. I can confirm that stocks and usage are being closely monitored.

Taxation

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the money raised by 5 per cent. value added tax, if it were expended as a fixed personal rebate on community charge to each charge payer pro rata rebated to rebated charge payers; by how much this would reduce the community charge paid; and what impact such a transfer would have on (a) the balance of payments and (b) the retail price index.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 21 January 1991]: The money raised would be £8·5 billion. Assuming no change in local government expenditure, community charges would be reduced by around £225 where the full charge is made and by around £45 for those paying only 20 per cent. of the charge.

It is not the practice to provide estimates of the wider economic effects of hypothetical tax changes.

TRANSPORT

Pedestrian Crossings (Aural Warnings)

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will review the provision of aural warnings to blind people at pedestrian crossings.

Mr. Chope: Audible signals can be fitted at pelican crossings and at traffic signals with a pedestrian phase except where there are two or more crossings close together—for example at dual carriageways. In these cases it would be dangerous to include audible signal because the sound from one could be interpreted as a cue to cross at the other crossing where the traffic had not been signalled to stop. Complaints from people in residential areas about the intrusive nature of the signals have led some local authorities to remove audible signals.

The Department has developed a new audible signal for use on staggered dual carriageway crossings. It emits a localised sound which can also adjust to the ambient traffic noise level. That signal is currently being tested at 25 trunk road sites around the country. We hope it will be available to local authorities around the country later this year.

In the meantime, where it is not possible to install an audible signal, the Department advises that a tactile signal should be installed as an aid to visually impaired people. The rotating cone device is activated during the green man phase to indicate that the traffic has stopped.

Locomotives

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the type, number and age of locomotives currently in use by British Rail and their designated length of service; and what is the type, number and age of passenger rolling stock and their designated length of service.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail owned the following traction and rolling stock at 31 March 1990:

Type	Number
Diesel locomotives	1,835
Electric locomotives	260
High Speed Train power units	197
Coaching vehicles	13,833

The Department does not hold comprehensive information on the age of railway rolling stock.

British Rail uses the following estimates of useful life for accounting purposes, but these book lives are conservative estimate. Actual lives can be much longer, depending on a range of factors such as condition and maintenance costs.

Type	Book life
Locomotives	20 years
Electric multiple units	25 years
Passenger carriages	20 years
High Speed trains	15 years

Westway

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any further information on his proposals to widen the Westway at the intersection with Old Oak road and the impact it will have on tenants and home owners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The public inquiry into the western circus improvement scheme at the junction of the A40 trunk road and Old Oak road closed on 16 August 1989. The inspector's report on that inquiry, at which the impact on local residents was discussed, is now being considered. My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Transport and the Secretary of State for the Environment hope to announce their decision soon.

European High-speed Railways

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking following agreement at the meeting of the Council of Ministers on 17 December to provide a complete and integrated high-speed European rail network over the next 20 years.

Mr. Freeman: The 17-18 December Transport Council adopted a resolution (11124/90) welcoming the Commission's initial report on the development of a European high-speed rail network and noting the progress made. The Council asked the Commission to carry out further studies of, among other things, the commercial aspects and financing of specific key links in the proposed network, including the proposed link from the channel tunnel to London.

These further studies will be undertaken by the existing high level working party of representatives of the Governments of member states, the railway undertakings and the rail manufacturing industry. The United Kingdom will continue to take a full and active part in the work of this group.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will reconsider the requirement of Network SouthEast to run without Government financial support by 1993.

Mr. Freeman: We continue to discuss with British Rail the financial objective we have set for Network SouthEast and how it will be achieved.

EMPLOYMENT

Women

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list recent measures to encourage mothers to return to work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: While recognising that returning to work must be a matter of personal choice for the woman concerned, my colleagues and I take every opportunity to encourage employers to adopt working practices to make it easier for employees to combine work and family responsibilities. This means more flexibility in hours of work and leave arrangements, job-sharing, career breaks, part-time working and, where appropriate, help with childcare costs.

Electricity Prices (Large Industrial Consumers)

Mr. Oakes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of job losses which would arise from the ending of the large industrial consumer scheme for electricity prices in April.

Mr. Jackson: My Department has made no such estimate.

Jobstart

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for the future of the jobstart programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Howard: The jobstart programme started in July 1986 as part of the package of measures available under the restart programme. Its aim is to encourage long-term unemployed people to take up full-time jobs they would otherwise not consider by paying them an allowance of £20 a week for six months. An adaptation of the programme was introduced as a pilot programme in four areas in June 1989. It aimed to encourage people aged over 50 to take up part-time work as a route back into full time work.

Research has shown that the programme is not meeting this aim. A large number of participants would have taken their jobs without the allowance. In addition, it has sometimes been used to subsidise the wages of young single people.

Take up of the programme has fallen significantly in the current financial year with applications in the last four months less than 50 per cent. of those for the same period last year. In these circumstances I have decided that the programme will close on 28 February 1991. The 50-plus jobstart pilots will also close at the same time.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what European or other overseas government practices his Department has researched as part of its review of employment and training for disabled people.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 29 January 1991]: In the course of its internal review which led to the consultation document "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities", my Department took into account available information on the practices of all European Community countries. We did not commission specific research into this subject.

Youth Training

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many complete non-vocational qualifications at level II, or their equivalents, have been obtained by people on youth training in the last 12-month period for which figures are available; and what was the total cost to public funds of youth training over the same period.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The information is not available as requested. Information about vocational qualifications collected through the youth training management information systems does not identify non-vocational qualifications separately. Estimates are available from the follow-up survey about the number of people obtaining academic qualifications. However, this information is not sufficiently detailed to identify national vocational qualification level equivalence.

Expenditure on the youth training scheme for the period April 1989 to March 1990, the latest 12-month period for which figures are available, was £976 million.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Insurance Claims

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidance he has to offer insurance companies and insured businesses and persons in respect of insurance claims arising from damage suffered to property in the United Kingdom as a direct result of terrorist activity related to the current conflict in the Gulf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have nothing to add to my answer of 17 January (Official Report, column 595) to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns).

Telecommunications (Wales)

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what response he has received to the consultative document on telecommunications in respect of Wales.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has received five responses to the Government's consultative document "Competition and Choice: Telecommunications Policy for the 1990's" (Cm. 1303) from bodies either representing Welsh interests generally or located in Wales.

Laundering

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will investigate the part played by auditing firms in laundering cash.

Mr. Redwood: If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind and cares to let me have details, I shall be pleased to consider it.

Norton Group

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry from which firms inspectors were appointed to investigate the affairs of the Norton Group plc.

Mr. Redwood: The inspectors appointed on 7 January 1991 under section 432(2) of the Companies Act 1985 to investigate and report on the affairs of Norton Group plc are Mr. John Kenneth Heywood, FCA of Messrs. Price Waterhouse and Mr. Richard George Bramwell McCombe, QC.

Industrial Electricity Consumers

Mr. Oakes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect of the ending of the large industrial consumer scheme of electricity prices in April, with particular regard to the export and import of chloralkali products.

Mr. Sainsbury: Large consumers, including chloralkali producers, have a number of supply options open to them as a result of the competitive framework which the Government have introduced in the electricity industry.

ECGD Insurance Services Group

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has had with the staff of the insurance services group of ECGD regarding their preferences for retaining their civil service status subsequent to the trade sale to a private bidder.

Mr. Sainsbury: In June 1990, all staff in ECGD were invited to complete a questionnaire to state their preliminary preferences, without commitment, about joining the privatised company or remaining within the civil service. Since then, around 800 staff have been invited to individual interviews, including all staff in the insurance services group. Almost all staff invited to interviews accepted. Staff are encouraged to discuss the matter with their line managers or personnel officer at any time. When the identity of the new owners and the terms and conditions of employment they are offering are known, staff will be given at least a month to state their final preferences.

Food Safety

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many additional standards officers have been employed to implement the provisions of the Food Safety Act 1990 and the EC directive on consumer protection.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 January 1991]: Trading standards officers are employed by the local weights and measures authorities. It is the responsibility of each authority to employ sufficient staff to enforce consumer protection and environmental health legislation.

Motor Vehicles (Security)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research his Department has undertaken or sponsored into improvements in security devices on motor vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 29 January 1991]: None. There is considerable scope for improving vehicle security, using known technologies, through ordinary product development work. The industry is already pursuing this, in response to commercial pressures, and I see no role for the Department in support of additional research.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

The Gulf

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the Arab states with whom, before 15 January, he discussed the issue of linkage between Iraq's retreat from Kuwait and a middle east peace conference; and what positions they took.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since 2 August of last year, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and other FCO Ministers have had opportunities to discuss Iraq's invasion of Kuwait with the majority of Arab leaders. They recognised that the present crisis had to be resolved before attention could return to the other problems of the middle east.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Arab states have committed forces to the allied side in the Gulf conflict; and what formal intimation he has received from each about their war aims.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Contributions to the multinational force have been made by Egypt, Morocco, Syria, Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, and the United Arab Emirates. The aim of the force is to enforce the relevant Security Council resolutions acting under the authority of the United Nations as given in Security Council resolution 678.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the state of Kuwait formally requested the United Kingdom to engage in the use of force under resolution 678 of the United Nations Security Council.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: British forces are engaged under the express authority of the Security Council in resolution 678.

The action has the support and approval of the Government of Kuwait, whose forces are also in action alongside those of their allies.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy with regard to that part of United Nations Security Council resolution 678 which refers to restoring international peace and security in the area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our objectives in the current crisis remain as defined in UNSCR 678 which authorises United Nations member states co-operating with the Government of Kuwait to use all necessary means to uphold and implement SCR 660 and all subsequent relevant resolutions of the council and to restore international peace and security in the area.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest position with the full implementation of United Nations Security Council resolution 672.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: UNSCR 672 requires a continuing commitment by the Israeli Government to apply the provisions of the Fourth Geneva convention in its administration of the occupied territories. We continue to press for this. The resolution also asks the United Nations Secretary-General to report on the situation there. He did this on 1 November.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he discussed Gulf war aims at his meeting with the French Foreign Minister on 24 January; and what conclusions were reached.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our aims in the conflict are clear and limited and are set out in the United Nations Security Council resolutions on the Gulf crisis. There was thus no need to discuss them at my right hon. Friend's meeting in Paris on 24 January.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to seek the authority of the United Nations Security Council before considering any extension of current Gulf war aims.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our objectives in the current crisis remain as defined in UNSCR 678 which authorises United Nations member states co-operating with the Government of Kuwait to use all necessary means to uphold and implement SCR 660 and all subsequent relevant resolutions of the Council, and to restore international peace and security in the area.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with members of the Union of Arab Maghreb nations about an early meeting of the United Nations Security Council to address the issues of the Gulf war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: SCR 678 authorised United Nations member states co-operating with the Government of Kuwait to use all necessary means to uphold and implement United Nations resolutions on the Gulf crisis and to restore international peace and security in the area. We see no need for the Security Council to hold an early meeting to address the current hostilities.

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about recent executions of senior Iraqi military officers in Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Press reports of 25 January suggested that the commanders of the Iraqi air force, and of the anti-aircraft defence, had been executed. We cannot confirm the accuracy of these reports.

Peace Conference

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to discuss with the Governments of Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait a timetable or other relevant issue in connection with the promotion of a peace conference to resolve the Israeli-Palestinian issue.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made it clear that we intend to return to the unfinished business of the Arab/Israel dispute, including the convening of an international conference at an appropriate time, as soon as Iraq has left Kuwait. Our renewed efforts to find a solution will certainly include consultations with our Arab partners in the coalition against Saddam Hussein.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how soon after the expulsion of Iraq from Kuwait Her Majesty's Government will seek a peace conference on the Israeli-Arab issue.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We shall be working to restart the peace process as soon as Iraq has left Kuwait. We have long believed that a properly-structured international conference would, at the right time, be a useful mechanism, but a conference is a technique, not an end in itself. It needs willing participants if it is to get anywhere. There will be much preparatory work to be done. It would not be realistic to set a timetable now.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in his meeting with the French Foreign Minister on 24 January, he discussed the question of an international conference designed to address the Israeli-Palestinian issue; and what conclusions were reached.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A range of topics were discussed, including the Arab/Israel question. The meeting was an exchange of views and not designed to arrive at agreed conclusions.

UN Security Council

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when was the last occasion that (a) the United Nations Security Council and (b) the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council discussed the Israeli-Palestinian issue in the context of a possible peace initiative.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Arab/Israel dispute has frequently been on the agenda of the Security Council during the last three months. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed the issue with his colleagues from the other permanent member states in New York on 28 September 1990.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Nations Security Council resolutions relevant to the Israeli-Palestinian issue have been subject to a veto over the past five years; and if he will show the text of each such resolution and the countries which exercised the veto.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Seven draft Security Council resolutions on the Palestinian problem and the occupied territories have been vetoed since the beginning of 1986. All were vetoed by the United States alone. I am placing copies of the texts in the Library of the House. The three most recent resolutions, 672, 673 and 681, were unanimously adopted by the Council.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest position with regard to the terms of United Nations Security Council resolution 673.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The focus of Security Council resolution 673 was the report on the situation in the occupied territories requested by the Council from the UN Secretary-General in resolution 672. The Secretary-General delivered this on 1 November 1990. Security Council resolution 681 asked him to develop some of his ideas. He is now doing this.

Saddam Hussein

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give dates and names of when, during the last eight years, Ministers have personally met Saddam Hussein.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met Saddam Hussein on 27 March 1983 while a Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. My right hon. Friends the then Ministers of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Sir Richard Luce MP and David Mellor QC MP) met Saddam Hussein on 21 November 1984 and 24 February 1988 respectively.

Iraq (Human Rights)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in the past 10 years Her Majesty's Government have made a formal protest to the Government of Iraq about abuses of human rights and breaches of the United Nations charter.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The precise information the hon. Gentleman requests is available only at disproportionate cost, but I can confidently state that we have repeatedly made clear to the Iraqi authorities our concern at Iraqi human rights violations.

HEALTH

Births and Deaths (Doncaster)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list, for each of the past 10 years, the number of births, by postal code of the residence of the mother, for each postal code area in the Doncaster metropolitan borough area;

(2) if he will list, for each of the past 10 years, the number of deaths, by postal code of the resident, for each postal code area in the Doncaster metropolitan borough area.

Mr. Dorrell: The postcode system's geographical structure does not coincide exactly with the geographical boundaries of local authority areas. The tables give the information requested for each of the postcode districts which are wholly, or partly, within the Doncaster metropolitan district. These statistics are not available prior to 1982.

Sugars

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the Government are doing to implement the recommendation of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy's report that the consumption of non-milk extrinsic sugars by the population should be decreased.

Mr. Dorrell: Since publication of the report by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy "Dietary Sugars and Human Disease" in December 1989, action has been taken on all of the major recommendations.

The Department, in collaboration with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Health Education Authority has developed a set of eight straightforward, easily understood guidelines for people to follow for a healthy diet. One of these COMA-endorsed guidelines is "Don't Eat Sugary Foods Too Often". The first education booklet based on this advice was published in July 1990, a copy of which is available in the Library. The HEA is reflecting the advice on sugars consumption in all appropriate health education programmes designed to equip people to make sensible food choices.

The Government took an active part in negotiating the recently agreed EC nutrition labelling rules directive, which built on earlier United Kingdom guidelines and provides for the declaration of total sugars content on food labels. The provision of nutrition information will continue to be voluntary except where a nutrition claim is made. The Government are encouraging the industry to provide as comprehensive a picture of information as possible in order to ensure that consumers are not misled by selective claims. The provisions of the directive will be reviewed after five years. A second directive to allow the introduction of selective compulsory nutrition labelling has not been agreed; a decision on this is likely to be made once experience has been gained with the voluntary system.

The pharmaceutical industry continues to play an important part by increasing the number of sugar-free medicines, particularly those for use by children or taken over a long period.

A joint working group of the Department, MAFF and HEA, together with outside experts, is considering ways in which good catering practice can contribute to healthy eating patterns, including the restriction of sugars consumption.

Steps have been taken to inform health care professionals. The HEA have produced a briefing paper explaining COMA's recommendations. A video tape is being produced under the auspices of the British Postgraduate Medical Federation. It will be distributed to all dental practices and is designed to help dentists in providing dietary advice as an important part of their health education of patients.

Under the national curriculum, it is a requirement that pupils are taught the factors that contribute to good health and body maintenance, including balanced diet and oral hygiene.

Finally, the Government continue to monitor the population's eating habits. The national food survey has recently been enhanced to provide information on the consumption of two key foods containing sugars—soft drinks and confectionery.

Dental Caries

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will include dental caries in the Green Paper on targets for disease reduction.

Mr. Waldegrave: This is one of the areas we are considering for inclusion in the forthcoming consultative document which will set out proposals for developing a strategy for health in England, and begin the process of setting priority health objectives.

Health Targets

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish his health targets for the country.

Mr. Waldegrave: We shall shortly be publishing a consultative document setting out proposals for developing a strategy for health for England, which will begin the process of setting priority health objectives. We intend that there should be wide consultation on the proposals involving all those interested in and concerned about the nation's health.

Generic Medicines

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received representations from the major manufacturers of generic medicines in the United Kingdom seeking United Kingdom Government support for the European Commission's proposed regulation on supplementary protection certificates for medicinal products.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A number of representations have been received. Some recognise that there should be a realistic effective patent term for new compounds, qualified by the ability to begin development of generic alternatives within patent term to enable their marketing immediately on expiry of the patent. One major manufacturer has opposed the extension entirely.

Medicines

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has any fundamental objection to the European Commission's proposed regulation on supplementary protection certificates for medicinal products.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government will be announcing their conclusion on the Commission's proposed regulation shortly.

Patent Protection

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to the (a) French and (b) Italian legislation giving additional patent protection for domestic research-based pharmaceutical companies through the establishment of supplementary protection certificates; and whether he has any plans to introduce similar legislation in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have noted developments in France and Italy, as well as previous extensions in the United States of America and Japan. We believe that the issue is best considered in the context of the European Commission's draft regulation, which would override any separate national legislation.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he sought before issuing the recent circular to health authorities concerning the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act; whether environmental factors, such as poor housing, are to be regarded in the terms of the circular as a sufficient ground, constituting grave distress, for doctors to proceed with an abortion up to and during birth; and if he will publish a list of the handicaps which his Department advises would be recognised as justifiable reasons for full-term abortions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I assume that the question relates to the joint Chief Medical Officer/Chief Nursing Officer letter, reference PL/CMO(90)13 and PL/CNO(90)12, which was issued on 26 November 1990, a copy of which is available in the Library. The purpose of that letter was to inform all doctors and nurses in England about the changes to the law on abortion as a result of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990. The opinion as to whether an abortion is justified within the terms of the 1967 Abortion Act is for two registered medical practitioners to form, in good faith, in the light of their clinical judgment of all the circumstances of the particular case.

Nurses (Grading)

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to change the nurses regrading appeals procedures.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Nurses' grading appeals are heard under an agreement of the General Whitley Council. Any changes to these procedures for appeals would therefore be a matter for the council.

When the nurse clinical grading structure was negotiated the management side of the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council offered to discuss a streamlined procedure specifically for clinical grading appeals, but the staff side chose not to pursue this possibility.

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average cost of conducting an appeal tribunal for nurses' regrading;

(2) how many regrading appeals by members of the nursing profession are currently awaiting assessment in the Northumberland district health authority;

(3) how many regrading appeals by members of the nursing profession are currently awaiting assessment in the Northern regional health authority;

(4) how many regrading appeals by members of the nursing profession are currently awaiting assessment in the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Braille

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the cut to RNIB's braille grant.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) on 20 November at column 99. We have received a further 41 letters since that date. My noble Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, is due to have a further meeting with the RNIB on 19 February.

Child Abuse

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for each London borough, what is (a) the number of children, (b) the number on the at risk register and (c) the number who are on the register, but do not have an allocated social worker.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The total number of children in each London borough (estimated mid-year population under 18 at 30 June 1989) is set out in the table.

The most up-to-date information about numbers on the child protection registers relates to the 31 March 1990 and is published in the provisional feedback "Children and Young Persons on the Child Protection Registers year ended 31 March 1990". Copies are available in the Library.

The number of children on the register who do not have an allocated social worker is published in "Child Protection Services in London, Aspects of Management Arrangements in Social Services Departments, 31 December 1989", together with numbers on the register at the time at which the survey took place. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Mendip Hospital (Sale)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce the price obtained for the sale of Mendip hospital and the name of the successful tenderer.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Charles Stuart, the chairman of South Western regional health authority for details.

NHS Nurses

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of nurses adjusted for changes in the length of the working week employed by the NHS in each year since 1974.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The information is provided in the table. Column 1 shows the actual number of staff in wholetime equivalents for the period 1974 to 1989. Column 2 shows the estimated number of staff (WTE), based on a 37·5 hour week, during the period 1974 to 1980.

[1] Figures adjusted to the standard weekly hours operative from 1980-81 (37·5 hours).

[2] Comparability affected by the 1974 NHS re-organisation.

[3] All figures have been independently rounded to the nearest 100.

[4] There is a discontinuity in the time series during the period 1979 to 1981, as a consequence of the reduction in standard weekly hours at that time. The size of the discontinuity is unknown; and the figures should therefore be interpreted with caution.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Action Trusts

17. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on housing action trusts.

Sir George Young: I am always ready to consider proposals from local authorities or tenants to establish housing action trusts. They can play a valuable role in tackling the problems of rundown council estates.

I announced last week the Government's decision to proceed to a ballot in north Hull following the encouraging response of tenants there to the local authority's proposal.

I shall shortly be meeting Waltham Forest council and tenants to discuss the proposals for a trust there.

First-time Home Buyers

18. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households have bought their first homes since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: Since April 1979 over 6·5 million dwellings in Great Britain have been bought by first-time buyers. No less than 1·6 million of these were sales by local authorities, new towns and housing associations, over three quarters being made possible by the right to buy.

Local Government Finance

19. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his review of the community charge.

Mr. Portillo: Our review is making progress, as can be seen from my right hon. Friend's recent announcement of the community charge reduction scheme. We are now considering the longer-term issues of local government functions, structure and finance.

33. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has commissioned any survey or research studies to support his review of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No studies have been commissioned specifically for the purpose of the review.

24. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he envisages completing his review of the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The review is intended to be thorough and fundamental. It is premature to say when it might be complete.

27. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the review of the community charge which his Department is currently carrying out.

Mr. Portillo: Work is in progress to identify the building blocks for a stable and just basis for the future development of local government.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an updated statement on his Department's criteria for community charge capping.

Mr. Portillo: As my right hon. Friend told the House on 17 January, we stand firmly by the capping intentions announced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Bath (Mr. Patten) last October.

Housing Starts

20. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of housing starts in the northern region in the last quarter of 1990 and in 1990 as a whole.

Sir George Young: The Department's preliminary estimates for housebuilding in 1990 will not be available until 6 February 1991. However, over the three months to November 1990 there were 2,055 housing starts in the Northern region. In the first 11 months of 1990 there were 8,763 housing starts.

Liverpool City Council

21. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to visit Liverpool in order to hold discussions with the leader of Liverpool city council on the financing of the council.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hopes to visit Liverpool later this year, but the details have yet to be arranged. I met the leader and other representatives of the council on 6 December to discuss various matters affecting their current financial position.

Business Rates

22. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the extent to which changes in business rate bills are the result of (i) the introduction of the uniform business rate and (ii) the accompanying revaluation.

Mr. Key: Almost 75 per cent. of the aggregate shift in rate burden under the new system in England is caused not by the move to a uniform business rate but by the accompanying revaluation. The total amount payable by business as a whole is broadly the same in real terms in 1990-91 as in 1989-90.

Homelessness

23. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recent initiatives taken by his Department to help relieve the plight of the homeless.

Sir George Young: We are taking urgent action on a number of fronts to relieve and reduce homelessness. To tackle the most acute problem of those sleeping on the streets of central London, we are making available £96 million over three years for direct-access hostel places and longer-term accommodation for those already in hostels. As I announced on 18 December, to carry forward development under this programme we are fortunate to have the assistance over the next six months of Nick Hardwick, director of Centrepoint.

We are also anxious to help local authorities in the areas where homelessness pressures are greatest. Therefore, £300 million is being provided over this year and next to local authorities in London and the south-east to reduce the need to use bed-and-breakfast hotels for homeless families. To help those at risk before they actually become homeless, we are establishing a national homelessness advice service through Citizens Advice Bureaux, with specialist support from Shelter and SHAC. We are also expanding support to individual voluntary sector projects to assist single homeless people to find temporary and permanent accommodation. Total support for the voluntary sector under these last two initiatives will increase from £2 million this year to £4·5 million next.

Pollution (Rivers and Seas)

25. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure that the British Government meet their international obligations to reduce the amount of pollution discharged into our rivers and seas.

Mr. Trippier: Regulations have been made under the Water Act 1989 to implement EEC directives on dangerous substances. In addition, we published a guidance note in July last year concerning implementation of agreements reached at the third North sea conference.

Vacant Council Properties

26. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 councils with the highest number of vacant domestic properties.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities reporting the highest number of empty council dwellings at April 1990 were Manchester, Liverpool, Salford, Sheffield, Birmingham, Newcastle upon Tyne, Newham, Leeds, Sunderland and Tower Hamlets.

Housing (Mobility Standard)

28. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to encourage private sector developers to build to mobility standard.

Mr. Yeo: In association with the National House Building Council and the Prince of Wales advisory group on disability, my Department has supported the initiative launched by the Prince of Wales in 1985, aimed at encouraging private sector housebuilders to design all new housing to be convenient for the disabled to live in or visit, coupled with house adaptations where necessary. Disabled people may obtain assistance for house adaptations under the new house renovation grant system introduced in the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 and this should help to increase the amount of housing suitable for people with disabilities. Local authorities' spending on home improvement grants for works to disabled persons' dwellings in England increased from £2·547 million in 1980-81 to £51·549 million in 1988-89. In addition, since October 1987 all housing association build and rehabilitation schemes have been built to mobility standards, wherever practicable.

Household Waste (Disposal)

29. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to reduce the amount of household waste disposal of inland fill sites.

Mr. Trippier: The White Paper on the environment, "This Common Inheritance", (Cm. 1200), sets out a number of measures that we will be pursuing to ensure successful recycling and minimise waste. We will be pressing industry to increase both the recycling of materials and the use of recycled material; encouraging retailers to provide collection facilities for recyclable material for their customers; and persuading industry to expand its capacity to process reclaimed material. We will also be encouraging industry to reduce unnecessary packaging of consumer goods.

Caravan Sites Act 1968

30. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the workings of the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Yeo: I receive a range of comments from hon. Members and the public about the principles and operation of the Act.

Planning Legislation

31. Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will introduce his new planning Bill.

Sir George Young: The Planning and Compensation Bill was introduced in another place on 15 November 1990.

Disabled Facilities Grants

32. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review his policy on the provision of discretionary and mandatory disabled facilities grants.

Mr. Yeo: This is a matter which is being kept under review to ensure that grant assistance continues to go to help disabled people least able to afford the cost of house adaptations.

Local Authorities (Responsibilities)

34. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his estimates of the additional costs to local authorities of the new responsibilities placed upon them for 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Standard spending assessments for 1991-92 will rise by a total of £5·78 billion. That is an average increase of 19·4 per cent. It takes full account, among other things, of the additional costs in aggregate of new responsibilities placed on local authorities.

Private Rented Sector

35. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy on the role of the private rented sector in Britain.

Sir George Young: The private rented housing sector has been in long-term decline. The measures introduced by the Housing Act 1988 are designed to stem this decline and bring the private rented sector back into the mainstream of housing by increasing the supply and improving the quality of privately rented accommodation.

Recycling Credits

36. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress in the introduction of recycling credits.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has commissioned a study by independent consultants on the operation of a system of recycling credits. We expect to receive their report shortly. When we have considered their advice we will consult local authorities and other interested parties on draft regulations governing the payment of these recycling credits.

Capper Pass Smelting Plant

37. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will report on the progress being made by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and academics from Lancaster university, in their research into levels of radioactivity around the Capper Pass smelting plant in Humberside.

Mr. Baldry: The study being carried out by Lancaster university under contract to my Department is proceeding satisfactorily and to schedule. The results are due to be published by 31 December 1992.

Housing Associations

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of housing association build is built to (a) wheelchair standard and (b) mobility standard.

Mr. Yeo: Approximately 5 per cent. of housing association completions of new dwellings in England reported to my Department in the year ending September 1990 were dwellings for the chronically sick and disabled, built to mobility standards. A further 4 per cent. were dwellings for the chronically sick and disabled built to wheelchair standards.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. Heseltine: Since 1985, energy efficiency in my Department has been promoted by monitoring its fuel and utilities consumption, the establishment of energy conservation targets, the implementation of energy saving schemes, including the installation of more energy efficient lighting and improved computerised building management control systems, and the promotion of staff awareness relating to their energy usage and role in its conservation.

Further measures include the proposed replacement of the building research establishment heating system and the installation of lighting controls and low-energy-consuming luminaries in headquarters buildings in London and Bristol.

Over the four-year period ending March 1990, the energy bill for my Department's office estate (excluding the Property Services Agency and Property Holdings) was reduced by approximately 30 per cent. Whilst figures for the current financial year will not be available until May 1991, my Department expects to achieve further savings of 3 per cent. over 1989-90.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider the application of subsidiarity to the respective powers of local and central Government.

Mr. Key: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 5 December, we are currently conducting a thorough and fundamental review of the structure and finance of local government. Nothing is ruled out of its scope and nothing ruled in.

Land Designation

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received urging a single, national comprehensive scheme for the designation of land which must be farmed or otherwise used in special ways for environmental or conservation purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: None. Government policy on the designation of land is to target areas of particular environmental value or sensitivity and to apply objectives which are relevant to those specific areas. Examples of designations for which my Department is responsible include national parks, areas of outstanding natural beauty and sites of special scientific interest.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is responsible for the designation of environmentally sensitive areas in which farmers are invited to maintain or adopt traditional farming methods in return for annual payments. As announced in the Environment White Paper, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is carrying out a review of environmentally sensitive areas this year.

Marine Resources

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the legislation affecting the planning and use of marine resources; and if he will indicate a time scale.

Mr. Yeo: The environment White Paper announced our intention to review existing legislation to see how this could help meet conservation objectives in the marine environment.

Housing Investment Programme, Warrington

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the housing investment programme allocation for Warrington for (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Yeo: Warrington borough council's housing investment programme allocations for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are £2·610 million and £2·659 million respectively. For 1990-91, the council received additional resources of £0·4 million through the estate action programme. Decisions on estate action schemes to be funded in 1991-92 will be taken shortly.

Common Land

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to introduce comprehensive common land legislation.

Mr. Trippier: We are reviewing the position in the light of the discussions held in the major interests following the statement I made on 26 July last.

Leaseholders

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take towards allowing leaseholders to buy the freehold of the property which they occupy.

Mr. Yeo: Most leaseholders of houses, but not of flats, already have the right to purchase their freeholds. In addition, a court can order the compulsory acquisition by the leaseholders of flats of the freeholder's interest in certain circumstances where he is failing in his duties. Leaseholders of flats also have the right of first refusal when the freeholder sells his interest. And it is open to leaseholders to seek to purchase the freehold by negotiation.

The possibility of compulsory acquisition of the freehold interest when a commonhold is being established is one of the options considered in the paper on commonhold which the Lord Chancellor has recently issued for consultation. No decision on this has been taken.

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take to enable leaseholders to exercise greater managerial control of the property which they occupy.

Mr. Yeo: Under the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987 residential leaseholders already have considerable rights in respect of the management of their properties. In most cases, they can apply to the courts for the appointment of a manager if the landlord is not managing the block properly. Leaseholders can wholly control the management of their flats by purchasing the freehold and establishing a managing company. In addition, the Lord Chancellor has issued a consultation paper on proposals for commonhold tenure, which provides an alternative management structure. The consultation period ends on 28 February.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to meet the chairman of the National Rivers Authority; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment met Lord Crickhowell on 17 December and intends to meet him again on 5 February. Discussions cover a range of matters relating to the National Rivers Authority's responsibilities for the water environment.

Drinking Water

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department is gathering about water companies' plans to improve the quality of drinking water, and especially on their planned investment to purify water from dangerous substances.

Mr. Baldry: Public water supplies already comply with the great majority of the standards in the Water Quality Regulations, which are in some respects more stringent than those in the EC drinking water directive; and, even where they do not comply with all the standards, the water is still safe to drink. Water companies have drawn up programmes costing £1·8 billion over five years in order to improve quality further. These programmes are incorporated in undertakings under section 20 of the Water Act 1989 and in conditions attached to authorisations under regulation 4 of the Water Quality Regulations, and copies of these undertakings and authorisations are in the Library. The drinking water inspectorate makes regular checks to ensure that completion dates are being met. As part of its technical audit of water companies, the inspectorate will examine these programmes in detail, to assess whether they continue to represent the fastest practicable means of achieving compliance with the remaining standards.

Playing Fields

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to discourage the sale of playing fields; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The issue of the disposal of playing fields has been addressed in the draft planning policy guidance note on sport and recreation which my Department issued for public consultation in October last year. In the light of the several hundred responses received, my right hon. Friend will be considering carefully, in consultation with other Departments concerned, what advice should be included in the final guidance.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will require county and district councils to indicate those areas within their planning control which are suitable for use in the disposal on land of waste products at present disposed of into coastal waters.

Mr. Yeo: Assessment of the relative merits of alternative means of waste disposal is one of the matters for consideration in the waste disposal plans which authorities are already required to prepare under environmental protection legislation. Amendments to the Planning and Compensation Bill have been tabled in another place which will also require county councils in England to prepare waste disposal development plans for their areas. These plans, which will complement the present waste disposal plans, will set out authorities' land use policies and proposals for the management and disposal of waste.

Fire-resistant Materials

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his Department's proposals to reduce the amount of fire-resistant materials in new buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The consultation paper on proposed amendments to part B, "Safety in Fire", of the Buildings Regulations 1985 includes proposals to reduce periods of fire resistance in some situations, particularly when active fire prevention measures such as sprinklers are also being provided. Comments on these proposals are currently being considered by the fire advisory panel and the Building Regulations Advisory Committee but there are some difficult issues involved and their final advice is unlikely to be available before the summer.

Council Houses

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new local authority homes for rent he expects will be completed during 1990-91.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities in England are expected to complete about 13,000 houses during 1990-91. Housing associations are becoming the main providers of additional subsidised housing for rent. Public funding for associations through the Housing Corporation will increase from £1·2 billion this year to over £2 billion by 1993-94. Together with their increased ability to draw in private funds, this will permit a sustained increase in output of subsidised housing by associations over the next few years.

Right to Buy

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many dwellings each local authority has sold under the right to buy legislation or voluntarily since April 1979; and what percentage of the total local authority stock they represent.

Mr. Yeo: I have placed in the Library a table giving available information on local authority sales up to September 1990. It shows year by year information for each authority since 1985-86 together with cumulative figures since April 1979 and the proportion of their stock sold since April 1979.

Battersea Power Station

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has received from English Heritage about the fabric of the former Battersea power station.

Sir George Young [holding answer 29 January 1991]: English Heritage has not to date seen the need to offer formal advice to my right hon. Friend on the state of the fabric of Battersea power station, but have kept officials of the Department informed on the progress of their direct dealings with Mr. John Broome and his company. Mr. Broome met the chairman and officials of English Heritage last October and gave them an assurance that the company would be carrying out urgent repairs to certain parts of the building which are particularly at risk, notably the control room and the directors' staircase.

English Heritage officials have been holding monthly meetings on site with the company's agents and have continued to press for these repairs. A start has been made on them, and the company has promised to tackle the remainder very shortly. I gather that Mr. Broome hopes to start work on the leisure complex scheme, for which he holds extant planning and listed bulding consents, in the late spring or early summer, subject to raising finance and concluding negotiations with Wandsworth borough council on ancillary matters.

Ministerial Responsibility

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report a list of all those Ministers who have been given a specific responsibility for environmental matters within their respective departmental portfolios.

Mr. Heseltine: [pursuant to his reply, 24 January, column 274]: The name of the Secretary of State for Wales, the right hon. David Hunt, MP, was inadvertently omitted from the list of Ministers nominated to be responsible for environmental matters within their respective departmental portfolios.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Labelling

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress in establishing a common European standard for the labelling of fats and other nutritional contents of food offered for sale.

Mr. Maclean: The directive on nutrition labelling rules was finally agreed by the Council on 24 September and was published in the Official Journal of 6 October. It lays down the statutory format for giving nutrition information on food labels. It provides for a two-stage approach with energy, protein, carbohydrates and fat in the first group, plus sugar, sodium, saturates and fibre in the second. The giving of information remains voluntary, although when given it must be comprehensive and in the agreed format. The exception to this is that, where a nutrition claim is made, the provision of the information in the agreed format is compulsory.

The first stage of the approach comes into effect from 1 October 1993; the second stage comes into effect two years later. There remain some detailed provisions still to be agreed but I anticipate these issues will be resolved within the initial run-in period. We are disappointed that we did not achieve earlier implementation dates and I know that consumer and health groups will be similarly disappointed. It was, however, not possible to rally majority support in Brussels for an earlier implementation date, and we thought it best to enable this important directive to be agreed without further delay and possible dilution. We shall be making the necessary changes to United Kingdom food labelling legislation, but in the meantime we shall now actively encourage the United Kingdom food industry to provide comprehensive nutrition information to the level of both first and second stages as we do already in the United Kingdom Government guidelines on nutrition labelling of food.

The second directive, giving powers to require selected nutrients to be the subject of compulsory labelling, has not been agreed, but we have ensured that it remains on the table in Brussels. There is a general support amongst a majority of member states for the principles behind this proposal, but it is felt that decisions about compulsory labelling will best be considered after experience has been gained with the voluntary system. Because the science of nutrition is relatively new and ideas and knowledge are still developing, the United Kingdom Government are prepared to go along with the majority view whilst wishing to ensure that the issue of compulsory nutrition labelling does not disappear from view.

Set-aside

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies his Department has undertaken or commissioned to determine what savings are made in common agricultural policy commodity market support by farmers forestalling increased production by joining the set-aside scheme; and what are the results.

Mr. Curry: The Department has commissioned an evaluation of the set-aside scheme by Reading university, and we are awaiting the results.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will make it his policy to extend the currently experimental countryside premium top up scheme from the east of England to the whole of the farmed countryside subsequent to his Ministry taking over the running of this scheme; whether he will extend the period of agreement under the scheme on set-aside land; and what plans he has to ensure that any extension of the scheme is sensitive to local environmental conditions;

(2) what advice is available to farmers who wish to manage set-aside in ways compatible with wildlife and nature conservation; and whether he will extend the period of agreement under the existing set-aside scheme for land managed in ways compatible with the environment.

Mr. Curry: A booklet is available under the set-aside scheme which provides farmers with advice on how they may manage their land for the benefit of wildlife, nature conservation and the landscape. Advice is also available from the agricultural development and advisory service and the Farming and Wildlife Advisory Group and, to participants in the countryside premium scheme, from the countryside Commission and the Nature Conservancy Council.

The EC Commission's proposals on agriculture and the environment contain measures which, if adopted, would permit the Agriculture Departments to take over the countryside premium scheme and the payment of set-aside aid for up to 20 years on afforested land or land used for specified ecological purposes. Subject to adoption of these proposals and review of the existing scheme, the intention is to extend the countryside premium scheme to the whole of Great Britain.

If appropriate, the period of set-aside agreements will be reconsidered in light of any changes addopted by the Council of Ministers.

Beef and Sheep Extensification

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies his Department has undertaken or commissioned to determine what savings are made in common agricultural policy commodity market support by farmers forestalling increased production by joining the pilot beef and sheep extensification scheme; and what are the results.

Mr. Curry: The Department has commissioned an evaluation of the beef and sheep pilot extensification schemes by Wye college (London university) and the centre for European agricultural studies at Wye, and we are awaiting the results.

Animal Welfare

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to his counterparts (a) in the European Economic Community and (b) in the United States of America, Australia and New Zealand, for those countries to bring their animal welfare provision in line with the standards prevailing in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: No such representations have been made, except in discussions in the European Community where we are pressing for the uniform application of high welfare standards.

Strategic Food Stocks

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will give details, for each of the years 1979-80 to 1989-90, of losses from the strategic food stocks due to damage and contamination in terms of (a) type of food lost, (b) quantity of food lost, (c) value of food lost and (d) cause of loss;

(2) what steps are being taken to prevent losses to strategic food stocks caused by deficiencies in storage arrangement.

Mr. Maclean: Strategic food stocks are kept under regular surveillance by scientific and other staff and remedial action taken as appropriate to ensure the quality and condition is maintained. The average annual losses during the period 1979-80 and 1989-90 of all stocks, including the inevitable deterioration of stocks at the end of their storage life, is less than 0·1 per cent. of the total stock and is valued at less than £100,000 per annum at present-day replacement costs.

Protected Species

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licences were issued during each of 1989 and 1990 by him under section 16(3) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and what are the species involved, the method of taking specified and the number of each species actually taken.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested, for England, is as follows:

Year	Species	Licences issued for England	Method of taking	Number taken
1989	Badger	6	Cage traps	7
	Glis glis	5	Cage traps	57
1990	Badger	2	Cage traps	0
	Glis glis	4	Cage traps and taking from nests	[1]0

[1] Provisional—One licence return pending.

Foodstuffs Control

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the expenditure implications of the EC directive on the official control of foodstuffs.

Mr. Maclean: An extra £30 million has been added to the revenue support grant from 1991-92 to meet the costs falling to local authorities in Great Britain, as a result of new food legislation. This includes expenditure arising from the EC directive on the official control of foodstuffs.

The money will be distributed among local authorities in the usual way.

Milk

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has made to the recommendation from the Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food, that the consumption of untreated milk is hazardous; and whether he will now take steps to ban the sale of untreated milk in England and Wales.

Mr. Maclean: Following public consultation in 1989, the Government decided that consumers in England and Wales should continue to be free to choose untreated milk. However, in view of the established health risks associated with this product, new labelling and microbiological testing requirements were introduced in 1990 to ensure that consumers were properly informed and that the risks were minimised. The Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food has recommended that these new measures should be very rigorously enforced and the incidence of food-borne illness associated with the consumption of untreated milk kept closely under review. The Government have accepted this recommendation.

Livestock Extensification Scheme

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors determined his proposal to offer £55 per grazing livestock unit under the livestock extensification scheme; and what information he has of publicly funded bodies which are offering a higher figure per grazing livestock unit.

Mr. Curry: When determining the rate of payment under the beef pilot extensification scheme all relevant factors were considered, including the possible effects on the financial position of those who might participate and the need to achieve value for money. There is no equivalent extensification scheme run by other publicly funded bodies.

Flood Prevention

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the National Rivers Authority to discuss flood prevention schemes.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Minister meets the chairman of the National Rivers Authority on a regular basis to discuss implementation of the Government's flood defence policy.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Petitions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he has to simplify the language required to be used under the public petition procedure.

Mr. MacGregor: I have no proposals at present. The marked increase in the number of public petitions written by the public and presented by hon. Members since 1983 suggests that the language currently required does not present a significant obstacle to those wishing to petition the House and hon. Members may consult the Clerk of Public Petitions when necessary. Nevertheless, I would give any proposals made to me careful consideration.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will establish a survey of Members in connection with possible improvements to the public petition procedure.

Mr. MacGregor: I have no present plans to do so. If the Select Committee on Procedure were to examine amendments to the resolutions and practices of the House concerning public petitions, hon. Members could make their views known to the Committee and its recommendations would be given careful consideration.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many public petitions have been submitted to the House in each year for which data are available.

Mr. MacGregor: The number of public petitions presented to the House in each Session since 1785 for which data are available is as follows:

Orders in Council

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the Orders in Council which have been approved in 1990.

Mr. MacGregor: Over 530 orders were approved in Council in 1990, including 133 statutory instruments, 187 orders approving schemes of the Church Commissioners, 86 approving reports of the judicial committee of the Privy Council, 47 approving Acts of the legislatures of the Channel Islands, 21 approving the grant or amendment of royal charters, 18 approving statutes of universities, colleges and schools, 19 making various appointments and 14 relating to the closure of burial grounds.

The orders could be individually listed only at disproportionate cost.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Privy Council

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list those who attended the Privy Council on 19 December 1990.

Mr. MacGregor: A list of those who attended the Privy Council meeting on 19 December 1990 was published in the court circular. In addition to Her Majesty the Queen, those present were myself as Lord President of the Council, Mr. David Hunt, Mr. Michael Heseltine, Mr. Peter Brooke, Mr. Malcolm Rifkind, Mrs. Lynda Chalker and Mr. Christopher Patten. Mr. Geoffrey de Deney also attended as Clerk of the Council.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the Privy Council will hold its next scheduled meeting.

Mr. MacGregor: The Privy Council is next scheduled to meet in early February.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Poverty

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give his Department's latest official figures for the numbers of people living in poverty in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: The Department continues to follow the line of all post-war Administrations in not keeping statistics based on a single definition of poverty. Information on the income and characteristics of people in the lower half of the income distribution are provided in the publication "HBAI a Statistical Analysis 1981-87", produced on a bi-annual basis, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Camden Office (Dispute)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the effect of the current industrial dispute at his Department's office in Camden on homeless claimants; and what steps he has been able to take to alleviate the situation.

Miss Widdecombe: Claims from homeless people are being handled and cleared in the normal way and the office is open to callers as usual.

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends making any changes to severe disability premium entitlement for claimants who jointly occupy.

Miss Widdecombe: Subject to other conditions, the severe disability premium is available, in income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit, to claimants who jointly occupy the dwelling with another person where they are co-owners, or are jointly liable to make payments in respect of their occupation of that dwelling, for example, if they are joint tenants. There are no plans to change this policy at the present time.

Local Offices (Staffing)

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) why he no longer takes into account the number of pensioners in an area when fixing the staffing of local Department of Social Security offices;

(2) if he will make it his policy that there will be an immediate increase in staffing at the Department of Social Security local offices to process claims when unemployment rises.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department allocates staffing resources to its local offices according to workload. Local offices record workload, including claims from pensioners and unemployed people each month. Resource managers take account of revised workload forecasts based on those returns when reviewing local office complements.

Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has regarding the income levels of people who have opted out of the state earnings-related pension scheme into personal pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: An examination of a 1 per cent. sample of national insurance records shows that for the year ending 5 April 1989, the latest period for which information is available, the average earnings of those people who had taken out an appropriate personal pension was just under £8,000.

Invalidity Benefit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) of 13 December 1990, Official Report, columns 501-4, on the numbers of people receiving invalidity benefit, what factors are responsible for the assessment he has made of the increase in the number of claimants from 1980 to 1990.

Mr. Scott: Recent research has shown a number of reasons which may have influenced the increase in numbers receiving invalidity benefit, but none is conclusive. In the main, increases seem to be due to people staying on invalidity benefit longer. For some illnesses—for example, those of the circulatory system, including heart diseases—life expectancy has increased. In addition, more women have become entitled to receive invalidity benefit because most now pay full rate contributions rather than the married women's reduced rate. Unemployment may also be a factor; when jobs are more scarce people with disabilities or poor general health may find it harder to obtain employment.

The Department is currently planning further research into this question.

Family Credit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the proposed family credit ceilings in 1991-92 for each of (a) a married couple with one child under five years, (b) a married couple with two children under 11 years, (c) a married couple with two children over 11 years, (d) a married couple with three children under 11 years, (e) a married couple with three children over 11 years and (f) a married couple with two children under 11 years and two children over 11 years.

Mr. Jack: At the new benefit levels proposed for April 1991 the family credit ceiling represented by the highest amount of net earnings and other relevant income a family can have and still qualify for family credit at the minimum payment of 50p will be as follows:

Married couple with one child under 5 years	130·11
Marrried couple with two children under 11	143·96
Married couple with two children over 11 (but under 16)	162·25
Married couple with three children under 11	157·82
Married couple with three children over 11 (but under 16)	185·25
Married couple with two children under 11 and two children over 11 (but under 16)	189·96

SCOTLAND

Local Authorities

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to review or amend the system of remuneration for elected members of Scottish local authorities.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Details of a revised scheme of councillors' allowances were announced in May 1990 and draft regulations were issued for consultation in June 1990. Consideration of a number of detailed points which arose has taken longer than expected, but we hope to issue revised draft regulations for final consultation shortly.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last increased the rate of remuneration payable to elected members of Scottish local authorities in the form of attendance allowances and expenses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Increased rates of attendance allowance, financial loss allowance and special responsibility allowance came into effect on 1 September 1990. Rates of travelling and day and night subsistence allowances were increased from 1 January 1991.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the figure for the total number of employees in employment, plus self-employed, in Scotland, for each year from 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is shown in the table:

Number of employees in employment and self-employed in Scotland in June of each year from 1979

Electronics Industry

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were employed in the electronics industry in Scotland for each year from 1979.

Mr. Lang: The number of people employed in the electronics industry from 1979 is set out in the table. The latest available figures are for 1988.

Women Employees

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of employees in Scotland were women, for each year from 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is shown in the table.

Number of women employees in employment and number as a proportion of all employees in employment in Scotland in June of each year from 1979

Year	Women employees in employment (thousands)	Proportion of all employees in employment (per cent.)

Sandeels

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the numbers of O-group, 1-group and older fish in the sandeel catches in International Council for the Exploration of the Seas division VIa in each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The estimated numbers are as follows:

Thousands

	O-group	1-group	2+
1986	3,065,660	1,845,060	873,010
1987	700,070	1,196,780	518,460

1989	444,595	225,564	1,284,771
1990	411,994	628,767	761,519

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the size of the sandeel catches in ICES division VIa in 1990; and what was the amount of fishing effort directed towards sandeel fishing and the home ports of vessels concerned.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my previous answer on 23 November 1990, Vol. 181, col. 243. The full year figures are now available and the information given on 23 November can be confirmed as reflecting the final position for 1990.

Exports

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the composition of Scottish-manufactured exports, by standard industrial classification, for each year from 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available at the level of disaggregation requested.

The information is available at a more aggregated level of classification within the manufacturing industries from 1979 to 1989.

The figures are set out in the table.

Prestwick Airport

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve rail and road communications to Prestwick airport; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government are committed to improving the A77 Ayr road route south of Glasgow in due course when Strathclyde regional council proceeds with improvements to that part of the route for which it is responsible.

Rail links are primarily a matter for British Rail and Strathclyde regional council, but the Government consider that investment in such a link would not be justified at the present time. The matter will, however, be kept under review in the light of trends in the level of passenger traffic using the airport.

Health Targets

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish his health targets for Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The consultation document "Health Education in Scotland: A National Policy Statement", which I issued in October 1990, proposed the following targets for Scotland over the period 1986 to 2000:

A reduction of 25 per cent. in mortality from heart disease in people under age 65;
a reduction of 15 per cent. in mortality from cancer in people under age 65;
a reduction of 30 per cent. in the number of smokers in the age range 12 to 24; and of 20 per cent. in the age range 25 to 65;
a reduction of 20 per cent. in the proportion of the population exceeding the recommended sensible limits of alcohol consumption.

I hope to publish the final version of the policy statement shortly in the light of comments on the consultation document.

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish total proposed budget figures for Scottish Enterprise for 1991-92.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Scottish Enterprise budget for 1991-92 will be published in the supply estimates.

Cholesterol Tests

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of tests for high cholesterol blood counts carried out, and the corresponding number of such tests requested, for each health board, for the latest available year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of cholesterol tests carried out in each health board for the year ended 31 March 1990 is listed in the table. All such tests requested are carried out.

Cholesterol tests

Health board	Number
Argyll and Clyde	13,301
Ayrshire and Arran	14,255
Borders	3,890
Dumfries and Galloway	4,741
Fife	7,042
Forth Valley	7,545
Grampian	15,087
Greater Glasgow	129,363
Highland	6,705
Lanarkshire	14,596
Lothian	27,234
Orkney	176
Shetland	190
Tayside	13,764
Western Isles	991
SCOTLAND	258,880

Scotland Europa Ltd.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his office has retained advisers to assist in the creation of Scotland Europa Ltd.; and if he will make a statement on his current plans for the future of Scotland Europa Ltd.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Scottish Office has retained no advisers in relation to Scotland Europa.

The initiative is under consideration by the Scottish Development Agency. I look forward to seeing its proposals.

Local Health Councils

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of local health councils, following submissions received from Scottish health boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Schemes for local health councils have been submitted by all 15 health boards. Those boards representing Ayrshire and Arran, Borders, Dumfries and Galloway, Fife, Forth Valley, Grampian, Greater Glasgow, Lanarkshire, Orkney and Shetland have concluded that the interests of the public in the health service in their areas would be best served by single councils. Argyll and Clyde, Highland, Lothian, Tayside and Western Isles health boards have all submitted proposals for multiple councils.

Following very careful consideration my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has decided to approve, under the provisions of section 7(3) of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978, schemes, with modifications as required, to establish single councils for all boards with the exception of Highland, where three councils, based on parliamentary constituency boundaries, and Western Isles with two councils will be permitted. On account of the large population which Greater Glasgow and Lothian health boards served, the councils in these areas will comprise 20 members instead of 15 elsewhere. Letters to this effect are being issued today to all boards.

Foresterhill Hospital

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the cost to Grampian health board for services in connection with preparing business plans for Foresterhill hospital under direct management unit and NHS trust status by Price Waterhouse.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The purpose of the exercise is twofold: to prepare business plans for Foresterhill, but also to serve as a model for business planning in the board and among its other units. The cost to Grampian health board will be of the order of £50,000.

DEFENCE

Medals and Awards

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces have received the general service medal or other awards for service in the area of hostilities during the Iran-Iraq war.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In recognition of service in the Gulf region, with special regard to the dangers and hardship accompanying that service, Her Majesty the Queen graciously approved the award of the general service medal (1962) with "Gulf" clasp for personnel who served in the Gulf region on board vessels of the Royal Navy and the Royal Fleet Auxiliary between 17 November 1986 and 31 October 1988, and during continuing mine countermeasures (MCM) operations between 1 November 1988 and 28 February 1989.

Qualified personnel who had previously been awarded the General Service Medal (1962) have received the clasp only.

So far 6,316 general service medals and 402 clasps have been awarded to members of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines. Seventeen medals have been awarded to Army personnel and two to members of the RAF.

In addition, one Queen's gallantry medal and two Queen's commendations for brave conduct have been awarded to naval personnel for explosive ordnance disposal operations following the collision between HMS Southampton and MV Tor Bay in 1988.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there have been any visits to the atomic weapons establishments at (a) Aldermaston, (b) Burghfield and (c) Llanishen by scientific experts from Iraq during the last six years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No.

Gulf War (Press Coverage)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the instructions given to United Kingdom journalists covering the Gulf war, issued by the joint Saudi/United States/United Kingdom information bureau; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All journalists registered with the joint information bureaux are required to sign up to ground rules designed to protect the security and safety of allied troops while allowing reasonable freedom to the press. Copies of the United Kingdom ground rules were placed in the Libraries of both Houses on 9 January.

Service Families (Counselling)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make arrangements for families with relatives serving in the Gulf war to receive support via counselling agencies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Where the dependants of service men and women are living at overseas stations, we aim to replicate locally the current United Kingdom Department of Health and local authority provision. We therefore fund the Soldiers', Sailors' and Airmen's Families Association (SSAFA) to provide professional primary health care and social work service. Similarly, we fund Relate to provide a marriage guidance counselling service. These agencies will provide counselling to all service families overseas, including those with relatives deployed to the Gulf.

In the United Kingdom, families of our service men and women have access to the normal range of counselling agencies. In addition, SSAFA's voluntary representatives, who have wide experience of supporting the service community, offer advice and help to the wider families of service personnel. At service hospitals worldwide we fund the joint committee of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem and British Red Cross to provide low-level professional welfare support to patients and visiting relatives. In planning for the Gulf crisis this service has been expanded, from voluntary resources, to include representation at all hospitals which may expect to receive war casualties.

Prisoners of War, Iraq

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes to request the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit British service men held prisoner of war in Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The International Committee of the Red Cross has reminded all combatants of their obligations under the Geneva convention 1949 relating to the treatment of prisoners of war. Representatives of the committee have made a preliminary visit to the United Kingdom and we will facilitate further visits in accordance with our obligations under the convention. We have made representations to the committee about British service men believed to be held in Iraq and, in particular, about our concern over reports which suggest that they are not being treated in accordance with the requirements of the convention. We understand that the committee's attempts to obtain access to British (and other allied) prisoners have so far been unsuccessful.

Defence Establishments (Wales)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many defence research establishments and bases there are in Wales; and what is the purpose of each and the number of people employed in each establishment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are 14 major defence research establishments and bases in Wales. As at 31 December 1990, the total number of service personnel and civilians employed in these establishments and at other locations in the Principality was 5,256 and 5,549 respectively. Of the former, 45 were Royal Navy, 40 Army and 4,805 Royal Air Force.

The Gulf (EC Personnel)

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list information available to him on the total number of active and support personnel each European Community country has committed to the Gulf conflict.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In addition to the United Kingdom, which has made by far the greatest European contribution to coalition forces, France has deployed naval, ground and air forces; Italy, naval and air forces; and Belgium, the Netherlands, Denmark, Greece and Spain have contributed naval forces; detailed information relating to these deployments is a matter for the Governments concerned. European allies have also provided a wide range of support to the United Kingdom and other countries involved in the multinational force.

The Gulf (Air Sorties)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of sorties made by each category of RAF aircraft in the first seven days of conflict in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the first seven days of conflict in the Gulf the RAF flew some 650 sorties, of which nearly 300 were offensive and over 180 were air defence. The remainder were carried out on various combat support tasks such as air-to-air refuelling.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of sorties made by the allied forces in the first seven days of conflict in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the first seven days of conflict in the Gulf the allied forces carried out some 15,000 sorties, of which 8,000 were combat sorties.

The Gulf (Combat Losses)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of combat losses from (a) the allied forces and (b) the United Kingdom forces in the first seven days of conflict in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the first seven days of conflict the allied forces lost a total of 16 aircraft in combat, four of which were RAF.

Operation Granby

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) dated 17 January, Official Report, column 547, on the Gulf crisis, if he will define operating costs as employed in that answer.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Full operating cost comprise two sorts of cost: those of a recurring nature such as the pay of service personnel, the consumption of spares and the repair and maintenance of weapons platforms and equipments; and those one-off costs arising specifically from the operation such as the costs of deployment and of equipment procurement and modification.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the total cost to the United Kingdom of the Gulf crisis; and how much of this represents replacement costs of equipment where payment will be made outside the current financial year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The latest total full operating cost to date of the United Kingdom's military involvement in the Gulf crisis is estimated to be about £1 billion. This does not include the value of equipment lost and ammunition consumed in operations which is estimated to be well over £100 million. No decisions have yet been taken on the replacement of lost equipment.

Iraq (Military Exports)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military equipment and spares were supplied to Iraq in each year from 1980 to the present date.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the consistent policy of this and previous Administrations not to comment on such matters. Details of restrictions imposed on military exports to Iraq since 1980 were given in my answer to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 25 January 1991, Official Report, Vol. 184, col. 359.

Shandwick

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the terms of the contract for public relations given to Mr. Peter Gummer of Shandwick.

Mr. Hurd [holding answer 24 January 1991]: I have been asked to reply.

No contract has been given to Shandwick. All its advice has been on an informal and unpaid basis.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action he will take further to restrict the sales of substances such as butane which can lead to addiction through abuse; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he has taken and intends to take in the future in order to combat lighter fuel sniffing; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he can provide figures for the number of persons who undertake solvent abuse and lighter fuel sniffing; and what resources he has committed to fighting this.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has the lead in co-ordinating Government policies in this area, which are directed primarily towards education and prevention. It is not possible to estimate the extent of volatile substance misuse with any accuracy as this is essentially a clandestine activity: the numbers are thought to vary greatly over time and place.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary's main responsibility so far as the inhalation of lighter fuel is concerned is for the application and enforcement of the criminal law. We supported the passage through Parliament of the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act 1985 which penalises anyone who supplies, or offers to supply, a substance while knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that it is likely to be inhaled by someone under 18 for the purposes of causing intoxication. Figures for the cost of enforcing this law, and of police action in dealing with misusers, are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

In view of the very wide range of everyday substances which can be misused, we believe there is little to be gained from further restricting sales. But we shall continue to encourage the voluntary co-operation of retailers in controlling the supply of volatile substances to young people.

Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many project licence applications were referred to an external assessor by the inspectorate under section 9(1) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, in the years 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mrs. Rumbold: Statistics on the referral of project licence applications to external assessors are not collected centrally. Applications are referred for formal external assessment on a case-by-case basis where advice is required on specialised aspects of projects, although the number of such referrals is unlikely to be large. In addition, referrals under section 9(1) are made to the Animal Procedures Committee.

Iraqi Service Personnel

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Iraqi army, air or navy officers are known to be present to date in the United Kingdom; how many such personnel have been admitted to the United Kingdom in each of the past five years for courses of study; and how many such officers (a) have left the United Kingdom voluntarily, (b) have been deported, (c) are in detention, (d) are subject to restriction on their movements and (e) are resident without restriction.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No information is recorded on the number of Iraqis admitted to the United Kingdom who were serving members of the Iraqi armed forces. Thirty-six Iraqis, whom we now have reason to believe are serving members of the forces, entered the United Kingdom as students to study at various colleges. Thirty-five of these did so without declaring their military status. One was allowed to make a voluntary departure before confirmation of his status was received and 35 are in military custody. We have no knowledge of the presence in the United Kingdom of any other serving member of the armed forces.

Braille

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what would be the cost of producing form RPF 7B for application to vote by post or proxy in respect of physical disability in braille.

Mrs. Rumbold: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Refugees

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people with refugee status currently reside in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Around 37,000 people, including sough-east Asian refugees, have been allowed to stay in the United Kingdom as refugees since 1979. Corresponding information for earlier years is not available. Comprehensive records are not kept of those who leave the country, die, obtain British citizenship or otherwise cease to hold refugee status here.

Prostitutes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from police authorities regarding the practice of introducing women in court as known prostitutes.

Mr. John Patten: We have received a letter from the West Yorkshire police authority, forwarded by several hon. and right hon. Members. I have sent the hon. Member a copy of our reply.

Iraqi Detainees

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what comments the International Red Cross has made on the conditions in which Iraqi detainees were held at Her Majesty's prison Pentonville; and what changes the Government are introducing as a result of representations made by the Red Cross.

Mrs. Angela Rumbold: The detainees initially located in Pentonville are now held in Full Sutton prison in Yorkshire in appropriate living conditions with integral sanitation. This accommodation had been identified before the representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross made their visit. Communications between the ICRC and Her Majesty's Government are conducted in confidence and it is not the practice to disclose details.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer, Official Report, 18 December 1990, column 104, if he will list the dates in 1991 on which information relating to poll tax liability orders will be collected and the dates on which it will be published.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 29 January 1991]: During 1991 information on community charge enforcement proceedings in the magistrates courts will be collected on 31 March, 30 June, 30 September and 31 December. The information should be available in the Library within six weeks of the end of each quarter.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to require local authorities to apply a multiplier of zero to those public houses occupied by persons as tenants who are also registered to pay poll tax at a separate address.

Mr. Key: Under the new standard charge classes which take effect from 1 April 1991, the multiplier may not exceed one times the personal community charge where unoccupied domestic property shares the same building as a business and as a result would be difficult to let separately. In addition we have now prescribed a new standard community charge class of property whereby the multiplier may not exceed one half if the person subject to that charge is also living in job-related accommodation. Charging authorities will have the discretion to apply either a standard charge multiplier of 0 or one half.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available to establish the percentage of payments of community charge and uniform business rates which are still outstanding for each local authority for 1990-91.

Mr. Key: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 23 January 1991, Official Report, column 190.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his best estimate of the cost of administering his proposed community charge reduction scheme.

Mr. Portillo: I hope to be in a position to publish an estimate following further discussions between my Department and the local authority associations.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his estimates of the numbers entitled to relief under the community charge reduction scheme using the tax/benefit model based upon the latest family expenditure survey data, breaking the numbers down by size of household and distinguishing between those receiving automatic relief and pensioners or disabled persons who qualify for special relief.

Mr. Portillo: The figures requested are in the table. They are for England only and are based on the family expenditure surveys for 1987, 1988 and 1989. They incorporate a 10 per cent. per annum allowance for depletion of entitlement for charge payers who have moved or died.

Effect of Community Charge Reduction Scheme in 1991-92, by household type

	Number of households (000's)	Number of adults (000's)	CC reductions (£ million)
All households	8,950	18,530	1,700
One-adult households	1,150	1,150	190
Two-adult households	6,340	12,700	1,220
Larger households	1,470	4,680	290
Of which extra help to:
Pensioners	350	430	70
Disabled	100	100	20

Landfill Sites

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many landfill sites containing methane have subsequently been the subject of developments.

Mr. Baldry: Government advice since 1978 has been that building development is inadvisable on former landfill sites known to be emitting methane. Figures for developments on former landfills are not collected centrally. However, since 1988 local planning authorities have been required to consult waste disposal authorities on applications for development within 250 m of landfills.

Maps

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that Ordnance Survey continues to show the location of Forestry Commission land on its Landranger and Pathfinder maps.

Mr. Baldry: The chief executive will write to the hon. Member.

Refuse-derived Fuel

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has executive power to conclude regulations governing the burning of refuse-derived fuel without reference of final decisions to him.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution does not have power to make regulations. Regulations governing the burning of refuse-derived fuel are being prepared by the Department as part of the regulations to implement the EC directive on municipal waste incineration. They will be subject to parliamentary approval in the usual way.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Members for Thurrock and for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin), Official Report, column 87, 21 January, whether Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will consider the effects of disproportionate costs on small-scale users of refuse-derived fuel when drafting integrated pollution control regulations.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is not drafting regulations. When drafting the guidance to cover the burning of refuse-derived fuel Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will consult widely the relevant sectors of industry and will take into account the costs to users.

First-time Buyers

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of schemes to assist first-time buyers with below-market value homes (a) in the European Community and (b) in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Department is aware of several schemes for assisting house purchase deployed in European Community countries. Most involve assistance towards loan repayments; we are not aware of any schemes in which property can be purchased at less than full market value. By contrast, in the United Kingdom the Government have offered wider forms of assistance of which right to buy, shared ownership, homesteading and licensed development schemes involve substantial discounts to first-time buyers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of the people who bought homes for the first time in 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Yeo: The number of first-time buyers in Great Britain is estimated at 630,000 in 1987, 770,000 in 1988 and 640,000 in 1989. Figures for the whole of 1990 are not yet available, but in the first three quarters of 1990 it is estimated that there were some 450,000 first-time buyers.

Spending Assessments

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the standard spending assessments for (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92 for each of the boroughs in Greater London in respect of (i) education and (ii) social services.

Mr. Key: The figures requested are shown in the table.

The 1990-91 and 1991-92 Standard Spending Assessments for Education and Social Services and for each borough in Greater London in £ million.

Pollution Control (Appeals)

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the appeals under section 10 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 currently under consideration, showing the dates when they were first lodged; how many decisions have been issued since 30 August 1990; and whether he has any proposals for speeding the process.

Mr. Trippier: The table lists the appeals currently under consideration showing the dates they were first lodged. Three decisions have been issued since 30 August 1990. Following internal reorganisation of staff to allow greater priority to be given to these appeals in future, we are now in the process of hiring consultants to provide additional technical support.

Waste Regulation (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received the report from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on the arrangements for waste regulation in South Yorkshire; what action he has taken on the report; and when he intends to publish it.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution submitted its report to the Secretary of State on 12 December 1990. Copies have been placed in the Library, and are available from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on request. I have concluded on the basis of this report that unless the four district councils in South

Yorkshire are able to agree improved joint arrangements which meet Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's concerns, my right hon. Friend will have no alternative but to set up a statutory waste regulation authority for the area. Officials have written to the councils concerned informing them of these views, and the action we propose to take.

Titnore Lane Landfill Site

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when any parties to the planning appeal regarding the Titnore lane landfill site were informed of the proposed date for the appeal to be heard; on what date the county council was informed; and what representations he has received about the time necessary for all parties to prepare their case adequately.

Sir George Young: The parties, including West Sussex county council, were notified formally on 18 January that this inquiry will open on 16 April—the first date on which a suitably qualified inspector is available to take it. An informal indication of an April inquiry was given, inadvertently, to the appellants' agents during a telephone conversation in December. The county council wanted more time in which to prepare its case. However, the council's initial written statement on the appeal proposal was lodged on 19 December, and three months' notice of the inquiry is considered reasonable. Under the inquiries procedure rules this inquiry should have opened not later than 14 March, but that was not practicable.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions have been made for the long-term management or disposal of radioactive wastes arising from the decommissioning of the Windscale piles Nos. 1 and 2, B6 and B16, at Sellafield; and if the costs are rechargeable to any Government Department.

Mr. Trippier: Low-level waste arising from decommissioning of the Windscale piles is likely to be disposed of at the Drigg disposal site. Intermediate-level waste will be disposed of in United Kingdom Nirex deep repository. I understand that the costs of this work will be met by the Ministry of Defence and the Atomic Energy Authority.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the leaders of local authorities to discuss the housing sector.

Mr. Yeo: My hon. Friend the Member for Worcestershire, South (Mr. Spicer), the then Minister for Housing and Construction, met representatives of the local authority associations at the Housing Consultative Council on 19 November. The council normally meets twice a year.

Security

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he has issued guidance to local authorities in England and Wales about increased security in public buildings such as libraries;

(2) whether he has issued guidance to local authorities concerning security of local authority employees with regard to possible terrorist action.

Mr. Heseltine: It is the duty of everybody in the country today to be vigilant. Local authorities are well aware of their responsibilities in this matter and of the precautions which they should be taking.

Urban Development

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake a policy and quantitative evaluation of the work of each urban development corporation covering the period of their existence.

Mr. Portillo: Arrangements are in hand for an exercise in 1991-92 to establish baseline data for future evaluation of UDCs and Birmingham Heartlands.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the urban development corporations which have areas of land in their charge which have yet to show some development taking place on land acquired.

Mr. Key: The UDCs acquire, reclaim and dispose of land for development as one means of securing the regeneration of their areas. All UDCs currently hold some land which is awaiting development.

The Gulf

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has conducted into the possibility of smoke pollution from the Gulf reaching the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: A note by the Meteorological Office on possible environmental consequences of burning oil wells in Kuwait was placed in the Library of the House on 17 January by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. It contains no suggestion that smoke from Gulf oil fires would reach the United Kingdom. The Meteorological Office is continuing to refine its assessment, in consultation with the Department.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what preparations were made before 28 January by his Department to deal with any major environmental consequences of the conflict in the Gulf; on which dates each of these preparations was made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Job Creation

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the projected number of jobs to be created by (a) the London Docklands development corporation and (b) the Merseyside development corporation.

Mr. Portillo: No numbers were projected when these development corporations were set up. To March 1990, there had been a net gain of 29,000 permanent jobs in the London Docklands area and 4,200 in Merseyside's area.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local people have secured jobs in the area of (a) London Docklands development area and (b) Merseyside development corporation since their introduction.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not collected by Merseyside nor on a regular basis by London Docklands. However, a London Docklands survey in 1987 indicated that out of 42,000 then employed in the urban development area about a third were residents of the three dockland boroughs.

Regional Offices

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table of expenditure on the regional offices of Government Ministries in 1989-90, broken down by Ministry and separating out the cost of running the regional office from the funding programmes it discharges and showing the expenditure on, and of, each regional office separately.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 22 January 1991]: The estimated costs of running each regional office of the Department of the Environment in 1989-90 are shown in table 1. Information on the Department's programme expenditure is collected by standard economic planning region; the breakdown for 1989-90 is shown in table 2. Both tables exclude the Property Services Agency. Information on other Departments' regional offices is not held by my Department.

The expenditure on urban programme includes previously with DES, DH and DTp. The totals also include LAs contribution (25 per cent.).

NATIONAL FINANCE

Interest Rates

12. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Bank base rates are 14 per cent.

Imports

13. Mr. Norris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how imports have performed over the latest three months for which figures are available.

16. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how imports have performed over the latest three months for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: In the fourth quarter of 1990 the volume of imports—less oil and erratics—fell by 1 per cent. on the previous quarter. Volumes in the year as a whole rose by only 1 per cent. compared with export growth of 7½ per cent.

Income Tax

14. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his assessment of the impact on income from income tax of the reduction of the higher rates of that tax.

Mr. Maude: Since 1979, the top rate of income tax has been reduced from 83 to 40 per cent., and nine separate higher rate bands have been reduced to a single rate. Over that period, receipts from higher rate tax have increased two and a half times in real terms.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to reduce the standard rate of tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Manufacturing Exports

15. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on the export performance of United Kingdom manufacturers during 1990.

Mr. Mellor: The volume of manufactured exports rose by 8 per cent. in 1990 after a 10½ per cent. rise in 1989. The United Kingdom share of world trade in manufactures rose for the second successive year.

Taxation

17. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his current estimate of the percentage of central Government revenue raised from income tax in each of the main OECD countries.

Mr. Maude: The latest estimates by the OECD show that in the United Kingdom the share of taxes on personal income in total tax and social security revenues in 1988 was equal to the EC average.

24. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has of the changing impact of taxes, including income tax, indirect taxes, insurance and local taxes and charges, on 18-year-olds and 21-year-olds between 1 January 1979 and 1 January 1991 on average earnings and incomes for those age groups.

Mr. Maude: A young person in employment aged between 18 and 20 paid on average 25 per cent. of gross earnings in income tax and national insurance contributions in 1978-79; and will pay 22 per cent. in 1990-91. Information on the effects of other taxes is not available.

Public Expenditure

19. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Trades Union Congress about the public spending planning total for 1991-92.

Mr. Mellor: None.

Investment

20. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest OECD estimates for investment growth in the United Kingdom and Germany in 1990.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Latest OECD estimates for total fixed investment in 1990, published in the December "Economic Outlook" and, partly based on forecasts, show a fall of 1·3 per cent. in the United Kingdom and a rise of 8·2 per cent. in western Germany.

Manufacturing Output

21. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is manufacturing output today; and what was the comparable figure in spring 1979.

Mr. Mellor: Manufacturing output data are published in index form, with the average for 1985 equal to 100. In the three months to November manufacturing output averaged 116·2. In the second quarter of 1979 the index was 108·7.

Savings

22. Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest estimates for the savings ratio.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce).

Inflation

23. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the prospects for inflation.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: RPI inflation fell from 10·9 per cent. in October to 9·3 per cent. in December. This is consistent with the autumn statement forecast which pointed to a fall to 5½ per cent. by the fourth quarter of this year.

Exports

25. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the level of export growth over the latest three months for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: In the fourth quarter of 1990 United Kingdom export volumes—excluding oil and erratics—rose 2 per cent. on the previous quarter and were 4 per cent. higher than a year earlier.

Child Poverty

26. Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the Child Poverty Action Group to discuss the effects of the Government's policies on child poverty.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My right hon. Friend met representatives of the Child Poverty Action Group last June and has no plans to do so again in the near future.

Tax-exempt Savings

27. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many building societies and banks are offering a TESSA.

Mr. Maude: A total of 150 so far, including the great majority of high street banks and building societies.

London Weighting

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the amount which has been spent in the last two years as London weighting for civil servants represents increases to the salaries of lower-paid civil servants.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: London weighting has not been increased over the last two years. However, of the £87 million spent enhancing London pay in other ways during the period approximately 41 per cent. has been paid to staff with salary maxima below £10,000.

New Coins

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consult all interests, including vending machine operators, shops and the general public, before introducing any new coinage or notes.

Mr. Maples: It is standard practice for the royal mint to consult interested parties before the introduction of any new coins, and it will continue to do so. Before the new 5p coin was introduced into circulation in June 1990, the royal mint undertook extensive consultations with interested parties and the general public. In addition vending companies were given test coins and two and a half years' notice to plan for the change.

The Bank of England is responsible for note issue matters. It also carries out extensive consultations prior to new notes being issued. It consults, in particular, organisations representing the blind, and also makes samples of the new notes available to banks, building societies, and note-handling machine manufacturers well in advance of issue.

"Next Steps" Agencies

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made towards establishing Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and the Inland Revenue as "next steps" agencies.

Mr. Maude: Following the announcement my predecessor made on 25 July 1990 at c.239-42 on steps to be taken to ensure both Departments operated fully on "next steps" lines I intend to make further announcements in respect of both Departments shortly.

Gulf War

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the total cost of British involvement in the Gulf has been calculated.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 30 January 1991]: The basis for the calculations of the cost of United Kingdom military operations in the Gulf was explained in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence's letter of 21 January to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill), a copy of which is in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Disabled Access

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) what plans he has for the improvement of disabled access in the House;

(2) when a review of disabled access in the House was last made.

Mr. MacGregor: The all-party disablement group carried out a review and submitted proposals to the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee in May 1981 to improve access for disabled people. As I stated in my reply of 21 January to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner), the Parliamentary Works Officer is carrying out feasibility studies into a number of further proposals that were received in December 1990 from the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley), chairman of the all-party disablement group. Once they have been completed, the results of these studies will be forwarded to the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee for its consideration.

Members' Accommodation

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Lord President of the Council what investigations have been carried out to try to identify extra office accommodation for hon. Members pending the completion of the new office buildings.

Mr. MacGregor: The results of a comprehensive space audit of the parliamentary estate will be presented to the Services Committee shortly. They are expected to confirm that there is little scope for providing extra accommodation for Members prior to the opening of phase I of the new parliamentary building later this year. About 100 extra Members' offices will be provided at that time. Planning is under way for phase 2 of the project, with a view to achieving the Services Committee's objective that by the time the new building is complete,

"every Member who wants a room of his or her own should have one".

In addition, urgent consideration is being given to the possibility of acquiring alternative accommodation within a reasonable distance of the Chamber for Members and staff currently occupying buildings, such as St. Stephen's house, which it is proposed to redevelop as part of phase 2. The Services Committee expects to report to the House on these matters shortly.

Statues

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Lord President of the Council for what reason the statue of Joseph Chamberlain in the Members' Lobby of the House was replaced with one of Benjamin Disraeli during the Christmas recess; if he will outline the total cost of such a move; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The statues were moved following a resolution of the Advisory Committee on Works of Art in the House of Commons. The cost of the work was some £3,000.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 31 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

The Gulf

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the contribution made by EC members to the Gulf crisis in terms of cash and resources; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The majority of the European Community member states have already contributed to the multinational force in the Gulf, whether with military forces, logistical, medical, financial or other forms of assistance. We are seeking additional contributions to our costs from a number of countries, including EC members. The Community and its member states are also providing economic assistance to those countries most directly affected economically by the crisis, as well as providing substantial humanitarian assistance to alleviate the refugee problem in the region.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what (a) governmental and (b) international activity, involving Her Majesty's Government, took place before 28 January to prepare the specialist method of responding to any environmental crisis in the Gulf; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government have responded promptly and positively to requests from the Saudi Arabian Government for expert advice and assistance following the deliberate pollution of the Gulf by Saddam Hussein. We are also in touch with other states in the region. Since the risk of conflict arose, the Government have been fully conscious of a number of possible environmental risks arising from it and has maintained close contact with the allies on all matters connected with it. It is for the Gulf states affected, drawing on the expertise on offer from the United Kingdom and the international community, to lead the response to the environmental damage that Iraq is inflicting on the region.

Gas Masks (Palestinians)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has made to the Israeli Prime Minister concerning the provision of gas masks to the Palestinian population in the occupied territories.

The Prime Minister: None. On 14 January the Israeli High Court ordered the army to distribute its stock of masks to Palestinians along the green line between Israel and the occupied territories immediately, and to obtain more for the remaining residents of the west bank and Gaza. The distribution has begun. We welcome this decision.

Pay Review Bodies

Mr. Madel: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the latest reports of the pay review bodies.

The Prime Minister: The 1991 reports of the review bodies on the pay of the armed forces, the doctors and dentists, the professions allied to medicine, nursing staff, midwives and health visitors, and of the Top Salaries Review Body have been published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office. The Government are grateful to the members of the review bodies for the time and care which they have put into the preparation of the reports. The table shows the increases recommended by the review bodies for each group, and their cost.

	Pay bill increase Per cent.	Range of increases in 1991-92 Per cent.	United Kingdom public expenditure cost[1] £ million
Armed forces	12·2	[2]11·2-18·0	536
Doctors and dentists	10·2	9·5-12·7	454
Professions allied to medicine	10·8	10·0-14·2	74
Nursing staff, midwives and health visitors	9·7	[3]9·5-11·0	696
Top salaries	9·6	[4]9·5-12·1	10

[1] These figures are higher than those in the Review Bodies' reports, which do not cover the full public expenditure costs.

[2] University cadets will receive lower increases, down to 7·8 per cent. for first year students. A few Captains RN may receive up to 20·1 per cent. as a result of changes to submarine and bonus payments.

[3] A small number of Grade B staff and staff nursery nurses will receive rises of 14·1 per cent. or 14·2 per cent., and some nurses in receipt of the geriatric lead will receive 9·3 per cent.

[4] The 12·1 per cent. is for 2 star officers only; all others receive 9·5 per cent.

The Government accept the recommendations of the review bodies and will be implementing them in full. All the proposed improvements in pay structures, designed to assist in recruiting, retaining and motivating staff, are accepted, indeed welcomed. But the overall cost of the pay packages proposed by the review bodies is high. The cost exceeds the provision available in Departments' spending plans for next year at a time when public expenditure is under pressure as a result of events in the Gulf.

Accordingly, given the size of the recommended increases as well as wider economic considerations, it will be necessary to stage payment of the review bodies' awards, except to the armed forces. When many of our armed forces are on active service, we have concluded it would not be appropriate to ask them to wait for their full pay award. For all other groups the staging will involve an increase of at least 7·5 per cent. from 1 April with the balance paid from 1 December. In consequence the full awards for all groups will be in payment before the end of this year.

The cost of implementing the recommendations on this basis will be met from within the public expenditure planning totals published in the autumn statement. The Government recognise that the cost of the health service awards could not be met in full from present health service provision without adversely affecting services to patients. The Government will therefore provide an extra £250 million from the reserve for next year, bringing the total increase in the resources available for the national health services between 1990-91 and 1991-92 to £3·4 billion. The full increase in costs for the armed forces over the provision previously made in the defence budget will also be met from the reserve: an allocation of £70 million will be made from the reserve for this purpose.

The specific application of this approach to the respective groups will be as follows.

The increases recommended by the review body on the armed forces will be paid in full from 1 April 1991. The increase in the 'x' factor, which reflects the special demands of service life, will be larger for women than for men and will remove all pay distinctions between them.

The Government have decided to accept the recommendations of the review body on doctors and dentists, but to stage their implementation so that 7·5 per cent. is paid in all cases from 1 April and the remainder of the increases, ranging from 2 per cent. to 5·2 per cent. for different categories, from 1 December. Increased expenses for general medical practitioners, which are a necessary part of the cost of running a practice, will be paid in full from 1 April.

Similarly, for nursing staff, midwives and health visitors, the Government accept the recommendations of the review body, but their implementation will be staged so that all staff will receive at least 7·5 per cent. from 1 April and the remaining 2 per cent. from 1 December. Lower-paid nursing staff, for whom the review body has recommended higher increases, will receive all but 2 per cent. from 1 April with the balance paid from 1 December.

The Government have also decided to accept the recommendations of the review body on professions allied to medicine, but to stage their implementation so that 7·5 per cent. is paid to all from 1 April and the remaining pay increases and other additional payments are paid from 1 December.

Groups covered by the Top Salaries Review Body will receive 7·5 per cent. from 1 April, with the remainder from 1 December. However, two-star military officers, for whom higher increases were recommended, will receive all but 2 per cent. from 1 April with the balance paid from 1 December. The new system of performance-related pay for civil servants, which the Top Salaries Review Body recommended in their report last year, will be implemented from 1 April 1991.

The pay rates and scales resulting from the decisions will be promulgated as soon as possible for the groups concerned. Pensions will follow the rates of salary in payment.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Companies Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will give the number and list the companies in which he has appointed inspectors from within or outside his Department under the Companies Act 1985 since 1979; and if he will give the number of those inspectors' reports which he has published.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 8 January 1990, Official Report, columns 519-24. Since that date, inspectors have been appointed in the following cases:

1. BOM Holdings plc.
2. Atlantic Computers plc.
3. Atlantic Computer Systems plc.
4. Astra Holdings plc.
5. London United Investments plc.
6. Norton Group plc.

Seventeen reports have been published in relation to inspections begun since 1979.

Questions

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central of 23 January, Official Report, column 329, what has been the cost of the 436 questions asked by the hon. Members for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) and Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on accountancy during the last two years.

Mr. Redwood: Detailed information on the cost of providing each answer is not recorded, but the total cost to my Department has probably been between £30,000 and £60,000 in the period since 1 December 1989.

Environmental Sensor Technologies

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the laboratory of the Government chemist received the report on environmental sensor technologies commissioned by his Department from Robert Bogue and Partners; to whom and through what outlets the report will be made available; and what was the cost of the consultancy with Robert Bogue and Partners for the preparation of the report.

Mr. Leigh: The report on environmental sensor technologies was received by the laboratory of the Government chemist on 3 September 1990. The findings of the consultancy were presented at an open seminar held in London on 28 November 1990. Copies of a short report which summarises the findings of the consultancy are available free on request from the laboratory of the Government chemist. A more detailed report can be purchased from the laboratory of the Government chemist. The cost of the consultancy is commercial-in-confidence information.

Iraq

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the value of export credits granted to Iraq in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 17 October 1990, Official Report, column 837.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many ministerial visits have been made by his Department to Iraq since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: Eight.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the value of export and import trade with Iraq expressed at constant prices in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: These figures from 1979 to 1988 are available from the "Annual Abstract of Statistics"—1990 Edition, tables 12.5 and 12.6. From 1989 to date, the figures are available from the "Monthly Digest of Statistics" tables 15.5 and 15.6.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how much has been spent by his Department on activities arising from trade fairs in Iraq since 1979;

(2) if he will give details of financial and technical support supplied to visiting trade delegations from the United Kingdom to Iraq in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: Details of Department of Trade and Industry programme expenditure on financial support for trade delegations is not available for the years 1979-80 to 1983-84. Net expenditure on events opening in subsequent years, with that on trade fairs identified separately, is set out in the table:

Assistance provided under the outward and inward trade missions, trade fairs and seminars scheme

Year	£ thousands	Of which trade fairs £ thousands
1984-85	145·6	135·3
1985-86	122·6	108·6
1986-87	158·7	149·7
1987-88	60·3	47·9
1988-89	238·6	221·8
1989-90	559·6	483·6
1990-91	4	—

These delegations received the additional support normally provided from Her Majesty's Government.

Walter Somers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what companies were mentioned in documents forwarded to the Department by Walter Somers and Forgemasters Engineering Ltd. in connection with the inquiries made of the export licensing division since 1988; and in what capacity they were mentioned.

Mr. Lilley: It is not the practice to reveal details of individual licensing applications.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many inquiries the export licensing division has received since the beginning of 1988 from (1) Walter Somers and (2) Forgemasters Engineering Ltd.; what products the inquiries concerned; which require export licences; and which were deemed to have a potential military application.

Mr. Lilley: It is not the practice to reveal details of individual licensing inquiries.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Cambodia

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which United Nations agencies have received funding from Her Majesty's Government for work in Cambodia; if the £1·25 million announced to support United Nations work in Cambodia has been fully utilised by United Nations agencies; and if more funds will be made available to them.

Mrs. Chalker: Since the Government reviewed their policy towards Cambodia in November 1989 the following allocations have been made to United Nations agencies:

1989-90

UNICEF—£0·25 million for immunisation, water supply and sanitation, pre-primary education and textbook production.

1990-91

UNICEF—£0·5 million for health, nutrition, water and sanitation.

World Health Organisation—£0·2 million anti-malaria programme.

World Food Programme—£0·3 million for rice in support of UNICEF's well and pond digging programme.

These funds are being used by the agencies to support their current programmes in Cambodia. We are monitoring progress and we are prepared in due course to consider providing further support for their work.

Refugee Relief

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which nations have been refused refugee relief in the last three years.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

International Organisations (Subscriptions)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total cost of United Kingdom subscriptions to international organisations in each of the last five years at constant prices.

Mrs. Chalker: The total cost to the United Kingdom aid programme of contributions and subscriptions to international organisations in each of the last five years at constant 1989 prices was as follows:

	£ million
1985	612
1986	611
1987	596
1988	702
1989	674

Foreign Investment Advisory Service

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of funding of the foreign investment advisory service; and how many staff it has.

Mrs. Chalker: The foreign investment advisory service has received funding as follows.

Period	US$
1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989 (actual)	2,182,000
1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990 (estimated)	3,360,000
1 July 1990 to 30 June 1991 (projected)	3,946,000

In the fiscal year ending 30 June 1990 FIAS employed the equivalent of eight staff years and seven consultant years.

Cuba

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the purposes for which the United Kingdom has given aid to Cuba since 1987.

Mrs. Chalker: A total of £5,000 was spent in 1988 and in 1989 under a gift scheme run by Her Majesty's ambassador in Havana: the items involved were principally books and information equipment for local institutions. Data for 1990 is not yet available.

Assistance Unit

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff are currently working within the joint FCO/ODA assistance unit.

Mrs. Chalker: Twenty-three.

Know-how Funds

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the current advisory board members of each of the United Kingdom know-how funds.

Mrs. Chalker: The composition of the advisory board for central and eastern Europe is as follows:

Mr. George Robertson, MP
Sir Russell Johnston, MP
Mr. Nigel Forman, MP
Mr. Gavin Laird, CBE
Dr. Zbigniew Pelczynski
Dr. John Howell
Mr. Angus Cargill
Sir Frank Lampl
Dr. Dennis Deletant
Mr. Ralph Land
Dr. Edwina Moreton
Dr. N. S. Wooding, CBE
Ms. Hella Pick

Professor Crampton
Mr. John Murphy

Eastern Europe

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any of his officials are currently advising east European countries on privatisation policies.

Mrs. Chalker: Advice on privatisation in Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia is being given, not directly by officials but by British financial consultancies and individuals under contracts paid for by the know-how fund.

THE ARTS

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Arts if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since an announcement was last made on the subject to the House.

Mr. Renton: Since my announcement on 19 December 1990, at column 175, I am pleased to announce that three further offers have been accepted. These consist of a collection of photographs by and of Cecil Beaton, a collection of private and Post Office telegraph stamps of Great Britain—1854 to 1881—and a collection of 38 paintings connected with East Anglia including a number of works by Pieter Tillemans together with a George III cabinet. These offers will satisfy £125,331, £113,000 and £211,552·80 respectively. No decision has yet been taken on the allocation of the Beaton photographs or the stamp collection, but the paintings and cabinet will be allocated to the Norwich Castle museum in accordance with the condition on which the offer was made. As with previous "hybrid" offers, the Norwich Castle museum agreed to pay the offerer an element of the difference between the tax liability and the special price.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland by what method he intends to legislate for the proposed privatisation of Northern Ireland Electricity.

Mr. Needham: Since the matter is in the "transferred" field, it is proposed to legislate for the privatisation of NIE by an Order in Council under the Northern Ireland Act 1974. A small number of consequential amendments to certain United Kingdom enactments may need to be effected by a separate order under the Northern Ireland Constitution Act 1973. Any necessary taxation provisions, as "excepted" matters, would be contained in a Finance Bill.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. Needham: On 6 December 1990 the Department of Economic Development issued a consultative paper on energy efficiency in Northern Ireland. It set out the extensive initiatives already under way to promote energy efficiency in the Province; by all other interested parties through a "Partnership in Action" programme. Specific recommendations for further action were made and comments on the consultative paper have been requested by 1 March 1991. A copy of the consultative paper has been placed in the Library.

Since 1984 Northern Ireland has had its own interdepartmental committee on energy efficiency. It monitors annual energy use by Government and submits reports to the Secretary of State. In addition, Northern Ireland participates in the United Kingdom-wide ministerial group on energy efficiency. Moreover, schemes of assistance for low-income households and the best practice programme are operative in Northern Ireland.

In the calendar year 1990 expenditure on energy in the Northern Ireland Government office estate was £2·1 million which represents a 5 per cent. reduction compared with the previous calendar year in 1990 price terms.

Constituencies

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the size of the electorate in each Northern Ireland constituency; and what they were immediately following the last revision of parliamentary boundaries in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of electors in each parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland on the electoral register in 1990 and in 1983—the first register with details of the revised parliamentary constituencies—was:

Constituency	1990 Register	1983 Register
Belfast East	53,933	56,065
Belfast North	56,991	61,703
Belfast South	53,516	54,115
Belfast West	57,456	60,404
East Antrim	63,025	59,372
East Londonderry	75,407	68,215
Fermanagh and South Tyrone	70,535	68,913
Foyle	74,558	67,918
Lagan Valley	71,904	60,685
Mid Ulster	69,415	64,840
Newry and Armagh	68,154	62,896
North Antrim	69,562	63,951
North Down	68,496	62,194
Strangford	68,242	60,813
South Antrim	66,763	59,931
South Down	75,364	67,723
Upper Bann	67,281	61,447
Totals	1,130,602	1,061,185

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to give discretion to social fund officers, during spells of severe cold weather, to make cold weather payments in cases of need.

Mr. Hanley: This is not in accordance with the regulation of the scheme.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the last occasion on which cold weather payments were made by the Department of Health and Social Services; how many recipients received payments; and what was the total cost to the Department of Health and Social Services.

Mr. Hanley: Cold weather payments totalling £233,194 were made to 46,646 people in respect of the winter of 1986-87.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to grant cold weather payments to (i) pensioners, (ii) those in receipt of income support and (iii) those in receipt of other benefits.

Mr. Hanley: There are no plans to alter the present scheme which provides for a payment of £5 for any period of seven consecutive days during which the average temperature is 0 deg. Celsius or below. Those eligible are people getting income support which includes one of the pensioner or disability premiums or who have a child under five living with them. People aged 60 or over can have savings of up to £1,000 without the payment being affected. For other claimants the corresponding limit is £500.

Domestic Heating Fuel

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average increase in the price of home heating fuel since 2 August 1990.

Mr. Needham: The increase in prices of home heating oils peaked at the end of October 1990 at between 70 and 90 per cent. above those at 2 August 1990. Current prices are 33 to 38 per cent. above those on 2 August 1990. Some smokeless coal prices have risen by 14 to 17 per cent. in the same period, which included the removal of summer discounts on 8 September 1990.

Government Appointees

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of all Government-appointed nominees to each education and library board since its formation, giving the year of appointment and the length of service in each case.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 16 January 1991]: The education and library boards were established in 1973 and are now in their fifth term of office having been reconstituted every four years. The information requested about the membership of the boards during their first four terms could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. All board members are appointed by the head of the department, regardless of the source of their nomination. The current membership of the boards, excluding district council members who are selected for appointment by their councils, is as follows:

Western Board

1. Members appointed July 1989

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education, Bexley

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what representations he has received concerning the future of Howbury Grange school, Erith;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the development of secondary education within the London borough of Bexley.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend has received one letter, which expressed concern about the future of the Howbury Grange school. No other representations have been received concerning the development of secondary education in Bexley.

Capital Expenditure

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by what formula English counties' individual allocation of capital expenditure on education for 1991-92 was calculated.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what expenditure assumptions he made for commitments to projects in Devon started in 1990-91 or earlier when determining his capital authorisations for Devon for 1991-92.

Mr. Fallon: In determining each authority's annual capital guideline, my right hon. and learned Friend applied the objective criteria set out in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 17 December 1990, Official Report, columns 41-50.

For committed expenditure, account was taken of the second and third year costs of projects and work allowed for in the 1989-90 and 1990-91 allocations and annual capital guidelines for Devon, as in all other English LEAs. For plans to provide new school places in areas of population growth, cost multipliers, reflecting the average cost to authorities of providing a new school place, as well as different regional building costs, were applied to the net deficit of places indicated by each authority in its capital plans. This amount was then phased over three years beginning in 1991-92 in the ratio 35:50:15.

For projects to remove surplus places, full account of authorities' actual cash plans for building works were allowed for when these arose from approved statutory proposals; or in the case of projects unrelated to statutory proposals, where these were cost-effective.

After allowing for a number of projects at special schools and allowing for authorities' liabilities arising from agreed projects at voluntary aided schools the resources remaining for schools were distributed to each authority for improvement/replacement work at schools on the basis of a formula. This formula took account of the authority's cash plans for improvement/replacement work, its pupil numbers and the numbers of substandard places it had.

Capital allocations for local authority further education—LAFE—for 1991-92 were determined as follows:

a. allocations for bids for major building projects—those valued at £200,000 or more—were made on the basis of value for money and in competition with other bids; and
b. allocations for minor works and equipment were made on the basis of weighted full-time equivalent student numbers and the value of bids.

Commitments in LAFE are limited solely to allocations arising from the further years of major building projects which the Department has specifically approved as part of the process which I have already outlined, with the whole being subject to the availability of sufficient funding in any particular year.

The figures set for each of these component parts were then added together to provide the annual capital guideline.

Refugees (Course Fees)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will permit all refugees to pay home student fees for courses of over 15 hours per week.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Under existing arrangements, those granted refugee status by the Home Office are afforded home fee status for full-time courses of further and higher education of not less than 15 hours per week; in cases where they receive a mandatory award, this includes payment of their tuition fees.

Spelling

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research has been undertaken on behalf of his Department on methods of teaching spelling.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Spelling is a vital skill for pupils to learn, but I do not prescribe the methods by which it is taught. My Department has not commissioned research on the subject.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice has been given by his Department or by the Council for the Accreditation of Teachers Education to teacher trainees on methods of teaching spelling.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None. I expect teacher training institutions to introduce their students to a broad range of sensible methods.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in what manner the information and experience of the adult literary and basic skills unit as to the teaching of spelling has been communicated by his Department to teacher trainees.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The unit publishes a range of materials, which are available to all, including teacher trainers and student teachers. But the unit's responsibility and expertise relates to the teaching of adults rather than children.

Capital Authorisations (Devon)

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) in determining Devon's capital authorisation for 1991-92, what assumption he made as to the amount which Devon could raise by way of capital receipts from disposal of land and other assets, in the current property market;

(2) in determining the quantum of Devon's capital authorisations for 1991-92, what assumption he made as to Devon's ability to augment this by funding from its revenue budget.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend took no account of capital receipts likely to be realised nor of possible transfers from the revenue budget in deciding the level of Devon's annual capital guideline for education for 1991-92. However, the size of Devon county council's basic credit approval, which is the limit to which it can borrow to fund all its capital programmes, reflects an estimate of Devon's likely receipts position.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which of the projects submitted to his Department by Devon education authority as part of the bids process for capital authorisation for 1991-92 were not taken into account in the final capital authorisation of £7·7 million.

Mr. Fallon: Devon's annual capital guideline bid was considered against the objective criteria set out in detail in the Department's letter of 31 May which sought bids for capital expenditure in 1991-92.

Allowance was made for the cost of providing new school places in respect of all of the individual projects listed in the authority's capital plans. Of projects to remove surplus school places, that at Teignmouth community college was not allowed for. No specific allowance was made for any individual improvement or replacement projects. Such work falls to be covered from the resources distributed by formula to all authorities. No allowance was made for the special education project at Exmouth Hillcrest school nor in respect of the authority's liability for those projects at voluntary aided schools which were not approved for a start in 1991-92.

The further education allocations for Devon education authority which were announced by my right hon. and learned Friend last December did not cover the capital cost arising from statutory school reorganisation in Tiverton. My right hon. and learned Friend will shortly be considering the award of a supplementary credit approval for the 1991-92 financial year for the proposed new tertiary college on the site of East Devon college of further education.

It is, of course, entirely for Devon to determine its priorities and which projects should proceed.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what account he took of the capital costs of implementing the reorganisations he has made for Axminster and Tiverton when determining the capital authorisation for Devon for the next financial year; and what figures were used when allocating the capital authorisation for Devon.

Mr. Fallon: The Tiverton proposals had not been decided at the time that Devon education authority's annual capital guideline for 1991-92 was announced. As is normal practice, a small proportion of the capital costs of the building work arising from the proposals, as set out in the authority's 1991-92 capital bid, was included in the annual capital guideline. The balance was held back to be issued as supplementary credit approvals, if the proposals were approved. The authority has presented some revised phasing of the costing following approval, and in line with those we shall issue a supplementary credit approval of £342,000 for the Tiverton project in 1991-92.

The building works arising from the Axminster proposals were put forward by the authority as improvement/replacement work in its 1991-92 capital bid. These costs have not, therefore, been covered individually in the annual capital guideline, but will fall to be met from the formula distribution for such work made to all authorities.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what capital authorisations for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools he has made for 1991-92, under the headings (i) all local education authorities in England and Wales, (ii) all counties in England and Wales and (iii) Devon; and if he will indicate for each of the above headings, the number of pupils of statutory school age in January 1990.

Mr. Fallon: The information that my hon. Friend has requested will take time to put together. I shall write to him when it is available.

Iraqi Students

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will be in a position to write to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby, in respect of Iraqi students, following his reply of 17 January, Official Report, column 555; and if he will publish this correspondence in the Official Report.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I wrote to the hon. Member on 29 January.

School Visits

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report details of official visits which he has made to schools, with date and purpose of each visit and the type of school visited.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 26 November 1990 I visited Ribston Hall grant-maintained grammar school. On 30 January 1991 I visited Stockington first and middle schools, Nuneaton, and Alderman Smith high school, Nuneaton. I have met school pupils and teachers on several other occasions since my appointment on 5 November 1990.

Science and Engineering Research Council

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the level of funding for SERC for the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 in (a) current and (b) constant prices.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The SERC's grant in aid from this Department was as follows:

£ million

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
Cash	367·595	406·162	440·752
1990-91 prices	422·307	438·654	440·752

Science Budget

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what allowance he has made for the effect of Swiss and other overseas inflation on (a) the CERN budget and (b) the physics element of the United Kingdom science budget in the financial year 1990-91.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The United Kingdom's annual contribution to the CERN budget, and other expenditure on research in the field of physics, is met from grant in aid to the Science and Engineering Research Council allocated annually in the light of the Government's overall decisions on public expenditure and following advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils. It is for the SERC to determine the distribution of the resources it receives, including those to be directed to international subscriptions for CERN and other organisations. For this purpose, the council will make its own assumptions concerning rates of inflation in the United Kingdom and other relevant countries. The level of grant in aid announced for the financial year 1990-91 was £440·8 million, representing an increase of £34·6 million—8·5 per cent.—over the previous year.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the average central annual maintenance grant for grant-maintained schools based on section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988 returns for local education authorities for which returns are available.

Mr. Eggar: The average full-year equivalent central costs component of annual maintenance grant for the existing 50 grant-maintained schools in 1990-91 is £203,286. Central annual maintenance grant is calculated in accordance with the Education (Grant-maintained Schools) (Finance) Regulations 1990. These calculations take account of data provided by schools and local education authorities, including section 42 returns from LEAs.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the representations which he has received on his paper "The Proposed Arrangements for the Calculation of Annual Maintenance Grant for Grant Maintained Schools for 1991-92"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: By 29 January we had received written comments on our consultation paper from 42 LEAs, 11 schools, and six others. My right hon. and learned Friend will be considering the comments received.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has yet received the report of the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions in 1991-92

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have now received the fourth report of the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions. Its main recommendations are

- a 9·5 per cent. increase in the standard scale for classroom teachers
- a 12·75 per cent. increase in the pay spine for heads and deputies
- a 30 per cent. increase in the value of the five rates of incentive allowances
- an extra 9,100 incentive allowances for the 1991-92 academic year, so that nearly 200,000 teachers will hold the allowances
- a 50 per cent. increase in the upper limit of discretionary scale points to be awarded on top of the standard scale for good classroom performance
- a 9·38 per cent. increase in the value of London allowances and the inner London supplement from 1 July 1990
- greater local discretion about the pay of heads and deputies
- an amendment to teachers' conditions of service to require them to co-operate in new arrangements for their appraisal to be established by regulations.

The committee's recommendations address all the issues that my predecessor asked it to consider when setting this year's remit. They should substantially help the recruitment, retention and motivation of sufficient teachers of the quality the country needs. I am most grateful to the committee for all the work which it put into its report.

The recommendations offer considerable flexibility to make discretionary and selective payments as governing bodies and LEAs judge best in the light of local circumstances. They are directed towards recognition of good teaching, extra responsibility and scarce qualifications. They will improve career prospects and incentives to promotion within the profession. The committee emphasised the benefits of appraisal for individual teachers, for heads, for the management of schools and ultimately for pupils. It also recognised that appraisal might have a link, although indirect, with pay.

I propose to accept all the committee's recommendations, but, as for the doctors, nurses and other groups covered by the review bodies except the armed forces, to stage their introduction over the period up to 1 December 1991.

The decision to stage was taken in view of the size of the recommendations and for wider economic reasons. It now seems overwhelmingly likely that inflation will fall to 5·5 per cent. by the end of the year. I believe that it is right to reflect the sharp drop in pay expectations in the rest of the economy by the staging of this generous award for teachers.

I propose to increase all pay scales by 7·5 per cent. from 1 April 1991. I propose to implement from the same date the committee's proposals for greater local discretion about the pay of heads and deputies, and to backdate to 1 July 1990 increases in London allowances. The increase of 30 per cent. in the value of incentive allowances would be introduced on 1 December 1991, as would the further increases in the scales needed to bring them up to the full amounts recommended by the committee. The extra 9,100 incentive allowances proposed by the committee would be introduced from September 1991, as it recommended. The committee's recommendations would thus be implemented in full on 1 December 1991. Overall, the increases in the pay bills for school teachers in England and Wales flowing from these proposals would be 8·4 per cent. in 1991-92 and 11·3 per cent. in a full year.

The education standard spending totals we announced last autumn comfortably allow for the cost of implementing these recommendations as well as for the follow-through costs of the 1990-91 pay award. These totals also include an element for the exercise of local discretion introduced following the recommendations of the committee's previous report and of this one which we are assuming will add a further 1·5 per cent. to the pay bill. This leaves plenty of scope for well-managed authorities to find resources for the other pressing demands on the education budget.

I am publishing the committee's report today and have initiated the consultations required by section 3(1) of the Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1987 on my detailed proposals for implementing its recommendations.

ENERGY

Sizewell B

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has had any recent discussions with the chairman of Nuclear Electric concerning (a) construction delays in the schedule drawn up for Sizewell B, (b) the failure of the computer programme design consultants to meet their target in completing the main safety computer programme and (c) the revised costings produced by Nuclear Electric and its consultants for the decommissioning and waste management programme for the Sizewell B plant.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The construction of Sizewell B is a matter for Nuclear Electric plc. I understand from the company that the project is eight months ahead of programme. It remains Nuclear Electric's intention that the software for the integrated systems for control and operation of the station should be available to enable commissioning of the station in accordance with the project programme. The latest costs available for decommissioning of Sizewell B or its waste management programme are those presented to the Hinkley Point C public inquiry.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the final capital cost of the Sizewell B nuclear plant on commissioning expressed in (a) March 1987 prices and (b) present-day prices; what was the estimate 15 months ago; and if he will indicate the reasons for the differences.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In his letter of 26 June 1990 to the Chairman of the Energy Select Committee, the Secretary of State gave the revised estimated cost to completion of Sizewell B as £2,030 million, April 1987 prices, together with a full explanation of the reasons for the revision of the estimate. This remains the latest estimated cost to completion for the project. Over the period from April 1987, the inflation in power station construction costs has been slightly less than in retail prices.

Atomic Safeguards

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has concerning the work of the standing advisory group on safeguards implementation organised under the auspices of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The standing advisory group on safeguards implementation provides advice to the director general of the International Atomic Energy Agency. Its work is confidential to the group.

THORP

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to institute a near-real time nuclear materials accountancy arrangement for the safeguards provisions at the new thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Detailed arrangements for safeguards at specific sites are confidential. However, BNFL is developing near real time materials accountancy systems in support of safeguards on the thermal oxide reprocessing plant—THORP. Technical reports relating to this technique have been published by BNFL. Details of these publications can be obtained from the company.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he possesses concerning the applicability of Euratom nuclear safeguards to the new BNFL thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield will be fully subject to Euratom safeguards under the Euratom treaty of 1957, as are all other civil nuclear facilities.

Sellafield

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when an assessment was last made of the environmental implications of a serious leak from Sellafield, including the localities which would be most affected; and if he will publish its findings.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Assessments of the safety of operations at Sellafield, which include assessments of the possible environmental implications of serious leaks, are the responsibility of BNFL in accordance with conditions attached to the nuclear site licence. These assessments are independently examined by the regulatory authorities in the regular discharge of their statutory functions.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the level to which the public sector is taking advantage of private sector energy efficiency management services and third-party financing for energy efficiency investment; and if he will make a statement on progress.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In taking forward the energy efficiency campaign on the Government estate where Departments are working towards achieving 15 per cent. savings in their energy bills over the next five years, my Energy Efficiency Office employed an energy efficiency management services company to assist Departments in the preparation of their energy strategies. The majority of Departments continue to seek advice from Property Holdings and the Property Services Agency on energy efficiency initiatives, but a number have also commissioned advice from private sector companies.

I understand that a number of Government Departments are presently considering whether third-party financing is a suitable option for their estates. I also understand that certain authorities and local authorities have entered into contracts for third-party financing.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what specific measures his Department has taken to promote energy efficiency; what further measures his Department intends to take to promote energy efficiency; and by what amount and what percentage of its total energy bill his Department's energy bill has been reduced over the past year.

Mr. Wakeham [pursuant to the reply, 24 January 1991, c. 276-77]: The table and explanatory footnotes show how effectively the main Government Departments used energy in their HQ type offices for the period April to September 1990.

The league table and performance ratios are an important part of the Government estate campaign where all Departments are working towards achieving savings of 15 per cent. of their energy bill over the next five years.

Department	Performance Ratio	Position
Welsh Office	0·750	1
Lord Chancellor's Department	0·790	2
Scottish Office	0·830	3
Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	0·860	4
Energy	0·920	5
Education and Science	0·920	5
Employment	0·950	7
Home Office	1·010	8
Ministry of Defence	1·050	9
Environment	1·070	10
National Savings	1·090	11
Inland Revenue	1·120	12
Customs and Excise	1·130	13
Health	1·150	14
Northern Ireland Office	1·189	15
Transport	1·192	16
Trade and Industry	1·210	17
Foreign Office	1·290	18
Treasury	1·440	19
Social Security	1·450	20

Notes:

1. The league table of performance is based on Departments' main(HQ) office buildings. In some cases this represents only a small percentage of a Department's energy consumption. Some Departments have calculated their performance indicators using partly estimated data.

2. The performance indicators and yardsticks for these offices are expressed in cost terms using average 1990 prices, ie 6p/KWh for electricity and 1·25p/KWh for all fossil fuels.

3. Yardsticks for these offices are as follows:

	April-September £	Annual £
Naturally ventilated offices	2·50/m²	7·70/m²
Air conditioned office	7·00/m²	15·50/m²
Computer suites	70·00/m²	140·00/m²

4. A building's energy consumption is adjusted where applicable for regional variations in climate and annual weather differences, divided by floor area and then divided by the appropriate yardstick to obtain its cost performance indicator. A department's overall Performance Ratio is obtained by adding together all its buildings' performance indicators (which are weighted according to respective consumption).

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what policy considerations will determine whether to proceed with the flotation of the two generating companies in the event of a Gulf war precipitating a stock market fall.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: All relevant factors will be taken into consideration at the appropriate time.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Baltic States

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received regarding actions by the Soviet military in the Baltic states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received more than 50 letters from Members of Parliament on this subject, and a large number of letters and petitions from members of the public and from Baltic emigré groups in the United Kingdom. We have also met the Foreign Ministers of Lithuania and Latvia, who have set out their views on the present situation. We continue to urge all concerned to follow the path of negotiation. In particular, we call on the Soviet authorities to refrain from the use of force or coercion.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken concerning the problems between the Baltic states and the USSR; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made our concern at recent events in the Baltic states very clear. We are pressing the Soviet leadership, both bilaterally and with partners and allies, to refrain from the further use of threats or force. We are urging all involved to undertake serious negotiations. This is the only way to find a lasting solution to this dispute.

Cambodia

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of (a) the trade and aid embargo against Cambodia enacted under United Nations resolution 34/22 (1979), (b) the initiative by the Thai Government in respect of the provision of neutral camps in border areas and (c) the supply of arms through countries bordering Cambodia; and what steps he is taking to promote a ceasefire.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: United Nations General Assembly resolution 34/22 does not refer to a trade and aid embargo against Cambodia. Nor do we operate one. If and when neutral camps in border areas under UN administration are created as part of a comprehensive political settlement, we would be ready to play our part in their establishment. A ceasefire and the cessation of all outside military assistance are integral parts of the draft comprehensive settlement document agreed between the five permanent members of the UN Security Council and the co-chairmen of the Paris conference on Cambodia in November 1990.

Human Rights

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in China about the treatment of pro-democracy demonstrators detained in prison.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's embassy in Peking reports regularly on all aspects of China's domestic politics including the detention and the recent trials of those involved in the 1989 demonstrations. We and our European partners have expressed our concern to the Chinese Government over the fate of the detainees on a number of occasions.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in the Soviet Union about human rights abuses involving people of Latvian and Lithuanian origin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We receive regular reports from Her Majesty's embassy in Moscow about all aspects of the Baltic states, including matters affecting the civil and political rights of the Baltic peoples. On behalf of the Twelve, the Luxembourg presidency has invoked the CDH —conference sur la dimension humaine—mechanism, which enables CSCE countries to raise cases of human rights abuses with other member states.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Chile about human rights abuses in that country.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have had no reports of human rights abuses since the inauguration of the democratically-elected Government of President Aylwin, which is committed to upholding human rights. It has established a commission to investigate past abuses, released most political prisoners, and changed the law to permit the release of others.

Boat People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the numbers of boat people in Hong Kong; and how many there were 12 months ago.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On 24 January 1991 there were 51,871 Vietnamese boat people in Hong Kong. On 30 January 1990 there were 55,533.

Hong Kong

95. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to ensure that any new airport for Hong Kong will be served by a rail link.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This is a matter for the Hong Kong Government.

Scholarships (Eastern Europe)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the Foreign and Commonwealth Office will spend on scholarships for students from eastern Europe during 1991-92.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: For 1991-92, we expect to allocate £1·2 million under the FCO scholarships and awards scheme for the provision of some 300 scholarships to enable students from eastern Europe—not including the Soviet Union—to study in the United Kingdom.

As many as two thirds of these awards will be jointly funded with United Kingdom institutions, private trusts and private sector partners.

BBC World Service

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of the BBC World Service in terms of pounds per output hour, at constant prices, in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is as follows:

Cost per output hour at 1990 prices

Year	£
1980-81	2,117
1981-82	2,078
1982-83	2,076
1983-84	2,118
1984-85	2,207
1985-86	2,185
1986-87	2,079

Year	£
1987-88	2,104
1988-89	2,401
1989-90	2,278

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the hours of output figure per member of staff of the BBC World Service in each year since 1983

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is as follows:

Output hours per member of staff

Year	Hours
1983-84	13·3
1984-85	13·2
1985-86	12·4
1986-87	12·7
1987-88	13·2
1988-89	13·6
1989-90	14·1

In 1986, 71 staff posts were transferred from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the BBC world service.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current shortfall in staffing levels in Foreign and Commonwealth offices overseas posts by grade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There is no such shortfall: it is our policy to fill all posts overseas.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for each of the last five years the number of secondments (a) into and (b) out of his Department; and if he will give details of which Departments were involved.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Tables I to V contain details of inward and outward secondments between other Government Departments and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office over the last five years. Secondments between the Overseas Development Administration and diplomatic wings of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office are shown separately, as are secondments to the Cabinet Office.

In addition to exchanges with other Whitehall Departments, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has an interchange programme with the private sector. Details of these secondments over the last five years are contained in tables VI and VII.

Arabic Broadcasts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any plans exist to use BBC transmitters in Oman and Cyprus for special broadcasts in Arabic to the people of Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There is none. The BBC World Service continues to use the transmitters in Oman and Cyprus for its regular broadcasts in English and Arabic, which can be heard throughout the middle east, including Iraq. Since the crisis began, in August 1990, the BBC has increased the hours of Arabic transmissions from nine to 14 hours a day and those of English broadcasts to 24 hours a day in the region.

Military Aid

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Monklands, West on 21 January, Official Report, column 49, he will list those nations receiving British military aid since 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The nations are Belize, Dominica, the Gambia, Grenada, Guyana, Maldives, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Seychelles and Tonga.

Aid (Eastern Europe)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the assistance given over the past 12 months to (a) Poland, (b) Hungary, (c) Czechoslovakia and (d) Yugoslavia in the (i) food aid, (ii) technical assistance, (iii) trade access, (iv) export credits, (v) investment, (vi) training, (vii) environment and (viii) stabilisation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European Commission, as chairman of the Group of 24 donor countries, publishes a regular "scoreboard" of assistance to eastern European countries. The latest edition, issued on 30 January, will be placed in the Library of the House.

Prisoners of War (Iraq)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received concerning Iraqi treatment of British prisoners of war in Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We need no representations to express our disgust at the Iraqi treatment of allied POWs in Iraq. Iraq has been in breach of her obligations under the third Geneva convention. It has paraded and interrogated captured allied airmen before the television cameras, has announced they would be sent to strategic sites, that some had been wounded and that one was now dead. Specifically, Iraq has breached article 13 which says that POWs must at all times be protected against acts of violence or intimidation and against insults and public curiosity, article 17, as regards interrogation, and article 19 as regards evacuation out of danger. Finally, article 23 states that no POW may at any time be sent or detained in areas where he may be exposed to the fire of the combat zone, nor may his presence be used to render certain points immune for military operations. Using the POWs as a human shield as Iraq claims to have done would be seen as a serious breach under the terms of article 23.

We have been in very close touch with the International Committee of the Red Cross. Our mission in Geneva has drawn each successive report to its attention immediately and asked for verification. Specifically on 29 January, we immediately informed it of Iraqi media reports on the wounding and possible death of an allied POW and asked that it seek confirmation as rapidly as possible. So far Iraq has refused to give access to the ICRC and has not notified it of the capture of any POWs. Representations have been made to the ICRC by other allied countries and by the presidency on behalf of the EC. We have also asked some Governments who may have good contacts with the Iraqis to press them to comply with their obligation. In addition, I have summoned the Iraqi ambassador twice, most recently on 29 January, to whom I made clear Iraq's obligations under the convention. The ambassador in Geneva made representations on humanitarian grounds to his Iraqi counterpart who undertook to pass the demarche to Baghdad. We are exploring what other avenues may be open.

Honorary Consuls

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the duties of honorary consuls; and what remuneration they receive.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under the supervision of a superintending post, honorary consuls can perform most functions of career consuls. Their main role, however, is helping and advising British nationals who find themselves in difficulty in their area.

They provide a valuable and cost-effective service in areas where there is no career post. Honorary consuls are not paid a salary. However, they may receive an honorarium of up to £1,000 per annum in acknowledgement of their services and certain office expenses.

Youth Exchange Centre

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many young people since 1985 have taken part in reciprocal exchanges between the United Kingdom and other countries through the youth exchange centre; and what criteria are used for choosing participants.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since 1985, a total of 91,559 young people have taken part in reciprocal exchanges between the United Kingdom and other countries through the youth exchange centre. Participants are sought from among young people of 15 to 25-years-old who would not otherwise be likely to have the opportunity of any kind of international experience.

Iraq

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many ministerial visits have been made from his Department to Iraq since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There have been seven visits to Iraq by Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers since 1979.

The Gulf

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the actual amount of Japanese financial assistance to the allied war effort in the Gulf up to 24 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The original contribution offered by the Japanese was $2 billion for the multinational forces and $2 billion for economic assistance to Jordan, Egypt and Turkey. On 24 January a further contribution of $9 billion for the multinational forces was announced by the Japanese Government.

TRANSPORT

Inflammable Cargoes

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the amount of inflammable cargo transported by road for each year since 1980.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is in the table. Available road freight statistics do not indicate whether commodities are inflammable. However, figures are provided for petrol and petroleum products. The table shows the amount of petrol and petroleum products and all commodities transported by road. This is shown in tonnes and also in tonne kilometres, the latter taking account of the distances the commodities are moved.

Cycling Facilities

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in descending order the London boroughs by Department of Transport grant-assisted expenditure on cycling facilities in the last three years.

Mr. Chope: Bids from the London boroughs for transport supplementary grant for cycling facilities come into the category of minor works. Support is given on a block grant and none for specific schemes. The information requested is therefore not available.

Orange Badge Parking

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that the orange badge parking scheme for disabled people is recognised by the central London authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Department of Transport officials met officers from the four London authorities currently outside the national scheme, and members of the disabled persons transport advisory committee—DPTAC—in September last year to explore the scope for applying some aspects of the orange badge scheme to central London. All four authorities agreed to consider the possibility of granting some concessions to badge holders subject to the implementation of modifications to the scheme now under consideration and to changes in London boroughs parking enforcement powers as envisaged in part II of the current Road Traffic Bill.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that display of the orange badge by anyone other than the legitimate badge holder is made a criminal offence.

Mr. Chope: We have already agreed in principle to the creation of this new offence, which would require legislation.

Trees, Pickburn

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why his Department cut down trees in Doncaster road, Pickburn, South Yorkshire, that were shielding houses from the effects of traffic on the A1(M); who authorised the action, and on what authority it was carried out; and what recompense will be given to the householders.

Mr. Chope: The work on this boundary hedge to encourage growth near ground level is to prevent children and animals from straying on to the motorway. The work was carried out in accordance with the Department's code of practice for routine maintenance introduced in 1985. No compensation is available to nearby householders in these circumstances.

Railways (Security)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail to discuss increased security on Britain's railways.

Mr. Freeman: I met the chief constable of the British Transport police on 18 January to discuss current security arrangements on the railways and London underground.

A2 Roadworks

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the length of time roadworks have been undertaken on that stretch of the A2 roadway between Falconwood cemetery, Eltham and Pepper Hill, Swanscombe, since 1 January 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 30 January 1991]: The periods during which major roadworks have been undertaken on the A2 between Falconwood cemetery, Eltham and Pepper Hill, Swanscombe, since the beginning of January 1983, are as follows:

	Duration (weeks)
A2 in London Borough of Bexley
May-November 1986	20
March-May 1987	13
October 1987-January 1988	15·5
August-December 1989	13
November 1990—in hand, expected to complete March 1991	(15)
A2 in Kent: County Boundary to Swanscombe
November 1984-January 1985	12
July-December 1985	19
August 1988-February 1989	26
February-May 1989	14
July-September 1990	10
October-November 1990	5
January 1991—in hand, expected to complete February 1991	(5)

The work largely comprises major maintenance, the provision of hard shoulders, lighting and safety fences.

Speed Limits

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he has assessed the possible effect of more stringent enforcement of speed limits on emissions of carbon dioxide and oxides of nitrogen from road traffic;

(2) what would be the effect on emissions of carbon dioxide and oxides of nitrogen from road traffic if speed limits on motorways were (a) increased to 80 mph and (b) reduced to 50 mph.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The precise effect of a change in speed limits or enforcement would depend on the way in which average driving speeds were affected. The available evidence suggests that, typically, reducing average speed from 70 to 50 mph would reduce a car's CO_2 emissions by about 20 per cent. and NOx emissions by about 25 per cent.

The rate of CO_2 emissions would increase proportionately more rapidly from 70 to 80 mph and NOx emissions would also rise.

Red Routes

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what quantifiable criteria have been used to measure the operation of the red route pilot project; and on what days and at what times monitoring has taken place.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 30 January 1991]: The "before" surveys were carried out at a variety of times and on a variety of days during 1990. A full programme of monitoring including "after" surveys is being carried out.

The quantifiable objectives for the pilot scheme are:

- During the working day reduce average journey times—currently 26·5 minutes—and the variation in journey times—presently 15 minutes—thus improving journey reliability along the route.
- Reduce traffic in adjacent rat-runs.
- Improve the reliability of bus services operated so that more run to timetable.
- Reduce casualties along the route and on adjacent roads and thus contribute to meeting the targets for the Boroughs concerned.
- Improve conditions for pedestrians and cyclists and reduce conflicts between them and vehicles.

The aim is to achieve the objectives without encouraging an increase in the number of cars being used for commuting into central London and any adverse impact on shops along the route.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision he has made in the red route pilot project for money to be collected and deposited with banks by security vans.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 30 January 1991]: Although there is no general exemption for security vehicles, arrangements can be made between the police and the operators individually according to the nature and location of deliveries.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the effects of the red route pilot project on traders' businesses along the line of the route; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 30 January 1991]: Since the pilot route opened representations have been received from several businesses. In some cases it has been possible to provide some loading or waiting areas, but in other cases the location of the businesses is such that loading or waiting is not possible without creating congestion or affecting safety. It is too soon to reach conclusions about long-term effects.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) organisations and businesses and (b) members of the public responded to the consultation on the red route pilot project.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 30 January 1991]: A total of 221 responses were made by businesses and 240 by members of the public or organisations. As a result of the consultation, several important changes to the scheme were made, mainly to suit the needs of local business.

Deaths, Edge Hill

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the deaths of three railway workers at Edge Hill railway sidings, Liverpool, on Friday 18 January.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

The three men had been called out at 03.40 to repair faulty points at Edge Hill. They had telephoned the signalman, who had reported the fault, to inform him that they were on the way, but he heard no more from them. Later, the fault cleared and the signalman set a route over the points for an empty train bound for Liverpool Lime Street station.

From the evidence available, it seems most likely that the men had started work on site and were struck by the empty train. The crew of a track maintenance machine that passed over the same line shortly afterwards were the first to notice that an accident had occurred. They alerted the signalman who called the emergency services.

An inspector from the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate visited the site later in the day to carry out an investigation. British Rail's internal inquiry began on Monday 21 January. The inspectorate will, on receipt of British Rail's report, decide whether any further action is necessary.

WALES

Whitchurch Hospital

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons have been detained at Whitchurch hospital because of lack of medium secure accommodation for each of the last five years; what has been the cost involved; and whether South Glamorgan health authority has been compensated for that expenditure.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: District health authorities are responsible for meeting the health care needs of their mentally ill patients, including those who need to be cared for in secure conditions. The records maintained by South Glamorgan health authority do not allow for precise calculations of the number of patients treated in ward west 3 who might have warranted medium secure acommodation over the past five years, but the authority estimates that 15 or 20 might have fallen into this category. In recognition of the special role undertaken by Whitchurch hospital for this group of patients, additional funding has been made available since 1977 for nursing support. This currently amounts to £180,000 a year. The Welsh Office also helps to fund a hospital social worker at the hospital.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons have been accommodated in the locked ward at Whitchurch hospital for each of the last five years; what has been the extra cost involved; and whether South Glamorgan health authority has been compensated for that expenditure.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: South Glamorgan health authority has provided the following breakdown of patients accommodated at ward west 3.

	Number
1986	192
1987	170
1988	166
1989	192
1990	208

No information on extra costs is available. I refer my hon. Friend to my answer earlier today as to additional funding made available by the Welsh Office for Whitchurch hospital's special role.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons detained at Whitchurch hospital have escaped in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Two patients are reported by South Glamorgan health authority to have escaped from ward west 3 over the past five years, in 1987 and 1989. In addition, two patients absconded whilst on authorised parole, both during 1990.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what review he has made of security arrangements at Whitchurch hospital following the escape of Andrew Peter Jones and others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This is a matter for South Glamorgan health authority.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for the provision of medium secure accommodation for persons who are now directed to Whitchurch hospital.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Following my hon. Friend's announcement on 21 February 1990, the all-Wales advisory group on forensic psychiatry is due to report during the spring. In the meantime, work has commenced on an interim secure unit at Glanrhyd hospital in Mid Glamorgan which is likely to take its first patients during 1991.

Cholesterol Tests

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of tests for high cholesterol blood counts carried out, and the corresponding number of such tests requested, for each health authority, for the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is not available centrally.

Departmental Personnel

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by his Department in Cardiff and London; and what were the corresponding figures for the last 10 years.

Mr. David Hunt: The numbers of staff employed by the Welsh Office in Cardiff and London over the last 10 years can be fully disaggregated only at disproportionate cost. Setting aside those employed in the main offices outside these locations gives the following figures for 1 October of each year.

1 October	Number
1990	1,931
1989	1,809
1988	1,739
1987	1,817
1986	1,842
1985	1,835
1984	1,742
1983	1,690
1982	1,722
1981	1,781
1980	1,844

These include small numbers of staff in the Colwyn Bay office and some education division and CADW staff.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numbers of speech therapists employed in each county in Wales for each of the years since 1980; and what was the revenue expenditure on speech therapy services in Wales in each year since 1980.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on speech therapists employed and revenue expenditure on speech therapy by health authorities in Wales is given in the following tables. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will share my pleasure at the substantial improvements made since this Government came into office in 1979.

No information is held centrally on the numbers, if any, of speech therapists employed or revenue expenditure on speech therapy by county councils.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount of cash in real terms has been given in each year, from 1980 onwards, to speech therapy in the NHS and the local education authorities.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Responsibility for the financing and provision of speech therapy services was transferred to the NHS in 1974 at the time of the NHS reorganisation. The level of funding provided for these services is a matter for individual health authorities to determine in the light of their perception of local needs and of available resources. I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer earlier today as to information on outturn expenditure on speech therapy in Wales in real terms since 1980.

Environmental Grants

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) of 22 January, Official Report, column 126, on environmental grants, if he will give the total sum available in the special grants (environmental) programme budget for 1991-92; and whether there is a last date for applications.

Mr. David Hunt: The total sum available under the special grants (environmental) programme for 1991-92 is £144,000. Applications were asked for by 15 November 1990, but subsequent applications will be given full consideration subject to funding being available.

Stroke Victims

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on the provision for stroke victims of (a) speech therapy, and (b) occupational therapy.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The provision of speech and occupational therapy for persons having suffered a stroke is a matter for district health authorities to decide in the light of clinical assessment on individual need and available resources.

Welsh Office circular 24/90, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House, provides advice and guidance to health and other authorities on the development and provision of services for people with physical and/or sensory disabilities. Annex A of the circular draws attention to the particular needs of stroke patients.

Welsh National Opera

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make a statement about the financial position of the Welsh National Opera.

Mr. David Hunt: I am glad that the Arts Council of Great Britain has now agreed to increase its annual grant to the Welsh National Opera by £300,000 with effect from 1991-92 and that this will also be written into the company's baseline for the succeeding two financial years. This additional grant will enable the WNO to fulfil its planned touring commitment in England and undertake a full programme of activity in future years without incurring trading deficits.

I have also been concerned about the drain on the company's resources occasioned by the high level of interest payments on its accumulated deficit. I have, therefore, exceptionally agreed to transfer £842,000 from within my existing provision to the Office of Arts and Libraries so that the Arts Council can be put in a position to eliminate the projected deficit before the end of this financial year.

I have taken this action in recognition of the Welsh National Opera's unique contribution to Wales. Not only has the company received international acclaim for the quality of its work, but it has presented a positive image of Wales abroad and has supported efforts to promote Wales's economic interests.

The management of the Welsh National Opera company is being given an unparalleled opportunity to build on a secure financial base. It is essential that it should take all appropriate steps to ensure that the company is managed effectively, efficiently and economically. There can be no excuse for further deficits.

I welcome the fact that further arrangements are being made for the Arts Council of Great Britain and the Welsh Arts Council to monitor the company's management and financial performance to ensure that effective budgetary controls are in place. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts also intends to keep a close watch on the situation.

HEALTH

NHS Statistics

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the number of nurses employed in the national health service in each year since 1979 and (b) the average number of NHS occupied hospital beds in each year since 1979 for which figures are available; and if he will show, in both cases, the percentage change in each year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The available information is given in the table.

Cancer Deaths

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each regional health authority the number of deaths caused by (a) lung cancer, (b) throat cancer and (c) breast cancer for each of the last 10 years; and if he will show in his answer for (a) and (b) above, by sex.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Salmonella

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the occasions since 1 January 1990 on which the public health laboratory service has identified salmonella in consignments of imported eggs, giving the date of discovery and the country of origin of the consignment; and if he will make a statement on the public health implications.

Gulf Casualties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by regional health authority and by district health authority, the number of pay beds requisitioned for receiving Gulf casualties; how many national health service beds have been requisitioned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Health authorities have not yet been asked to set aside beds for Gulf casualties.

Pay beds are authorised subject only to the statutory requirement that there be no significant disadvantage to NHS patients. Health service managers will ensure that these beds are made available should they be required for Gulf casualties or other priority cases.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average number of beds available within the Doncaster health authority area in 1980, 1985 and 1990; what is the current actual position; and what are the comparable figures for England as a whole.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is shown in the table.

Number of average daily available beds

	1980	1985	1989-90
England	355,979	325,487	270,334
Doncaster	1,772	1,879	1,657

Number of inpatients treated

	Finished hospital stays (Discharges and Deaths)		Finished Consultant Episodes
	1980	1985	1989-90[1]
England	5,670,001	6,353,812	7,476,625
Doncaster	29,828	39,936	47,926

[1] Figures for 1989-90 refer to finished consultant episodes and should not be directly compared with earlier figures (discharges and deaths).

In 1988-89 when data were collected on both bases, finished consultant episodes in Trent exceeded discharges and deaths by 8 per cent.

Red-eared Terrapins

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there is any medical evidence of human health risks from contaminated red-eared terrapins.

Mr. Dorrell: In every outbreak of salmonellosis investigated by the public health laboratory services communicable disease surveillance centre (CDSC) in England and Wales, questions are asked about contact with pets and other animals. CDSC has yet to document an outbreak associated with terrapins.

A number of studies into terrapin associated salmonellosis have been carried out in the United States of America. These studies are mostly 10 or more years old but a study in 1985 showed that 10 out of 60 infant cases in Puerto Rico has a history of exposure to pet turtles. (In this context turtle is the American term for terrapin.) However, the information from this study cannot be extrapolated to all cases in the United States of America, still less to cases in England and Wales.

The salmonella serotypes most commonly associated with terrapins in the United States of America are rare in this country. In 1989 and 1990 there were no reports at all of infection with S Urbana, the serotype most strongly associated with terrapins in American studies. There is no prima facie evidence that terrapins constitute a significant public health problem in England and Wales.

Waltham Forest Health Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details, including the date it was submitted, of the preparatory application by Waltham Forest health service to become a self-governing trust from April 1992.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Waltham Forest health authority originally submitted an expression of interest in becoming an NHS trust in August 1990. A subsequent expression in which Claybury hospital was excluded from the configuration of the proposed trust was submitted on 12 December 1990.

The revised expression of interest was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 14 January this year at column 418.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to finish consultations with local authority associations on sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultations and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Dorrell: Officials concluded consultations with local authority associations on the costs of implementing these sections at the end of last year. The outcome of these consultations is now under consideration and a statement will be made in due course.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he now expects to publish the findings of the Royal College of General Practitioners' study into post-abortion trauma, commissioned in 1976; what work his Department is undertaking into the physical and psychological effects of abortion; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The researchers have recently produced papers for publication and others will follow shortly. All the findings of this study will be considered carefully as will the need for further work in this field.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to respond to the Social Services Select Committee's 10th report of Session 1989-90 on the conscience provisions of the Abortion Act 1967; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are carefully considering the Committee's report and will be publishing our response shortly.

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions over the past 10 years and in respect of which properties his Department has specifically agreed that (a) capital proceeds and (b) revenue arising from the disposal of hospitals for the mentally ill need not be used for the benefit of the mentally ill.

Mr. Dorrell: None.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that (a) the capital proceeds and (b) the revenue arising from the disposal of hospitals for the mentally ill has been used by health authorities for the benefit of the mentally ill, as provided in his Department's handbook "Property Transactions in the NHS"; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he has taken to ensure that health authorities are fully aware of the contents of his Department's handbook "Property Transactions in the NHS"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The handbook "Property Transactions in the NHS" was issued widely throughout the NHS in August 1989. It was issued under cover of a health notice HN(89)13 (a copy of which is available in the Library) which, in its annex, listed those occasions when health authorities were required to refer property transactions to the Department. The Department does not routinely monitor compliance with the requirements of "Property Transactions in the NHS", but we have no reason to think the health authorities are not co-operating.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking as a result of the responses he has received to the consultation paper on the provision of hearing aid services under the national health service.

Mr. Dorrell: Twelve direct referral pilot projects have been established in hospitals throughout England. These projects are being independently evaluated by a team of researchers from the university of Manchester. We do not expect to have the results of the evaluation before spring 1992.

Elderly People

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to local authorities about publicising the availability of alternatives to the institutional care of elderly or disabled people.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: "Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond: Policy Guidance" was published in November 1990 and issued to local and health authorities. A copy is in the Library. It includes guidance on publishing accessible information on the types of community care services available. Local authorities are expected to include in their published care plans the arrangements made in this respect.

The Policy Studies Institute is carrying out on behalf of the Department a study of user information needs in order to provide further guidance to authorities.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital beds have been closed in the Mersey region due to the transfer of elderly patients to private or charitable nursing homes.

Mr. Dorrell: We do not hold this information centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Donald Wilson, the chairman of Mersey regional health authority, for details.

Wakefield Health Authority

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has received from Yorkshire regional health authority regarding the reasons for the current financial position of Wakefield health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: The national health service management executive receives regular reports from regional health authorities which monitor the financial position of their districts. In addition, there is regular contact between the national health service management executive and the regional health authorities at all levels.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps have been taken by Yorkshire regional health authority to monitor the management of Wakefield health authority over the past five years.

Mr. Dorrell: Yorkshire regional health authority has well-established arrangements for monitoring its districts. I suggest the hon. Member contacts Sir Bryan Askew, chairman of the regional health authority, for details.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set up a full and independent inquiry into the management of Wakefield health authority over the past five years.

Mr. Dorrell: No. Management of Wakefield district health authority is the responsibility of Yorkshire regional health authority.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take urgent steps to ensure that the current financial position of Wakefield health authority does not result in further reductions in health care provision within local hospitals or community services.

Mr. Dorrell: It is the responsibility of regional health authorities to allocate finances to the district in the light of local circumstances and priorities.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice his Department is giving to health authorities on the proportion of their budget they should allocate to meeting the costs of extra-contractual referrals.

Mr. Dorrell: District health authorities will need to keep a reserve to cover the costs of expected levels of extra-contractual referrals. These will vary according to local needs and circumstances.

Vinegar

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, over the last 12 months, his officials have met representatives of the vinegar industry to discuss the health implications of the over-consumption of vinegar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: No.

Operating Theatre Sessions

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) for each of the past three years and (b) for each health district (i) the number of scheduled sessions held in operating theatres, (ii) the number of scheduled sessions that were cancelled, (iii) the number of cases operated on in scheduled sessions and (iv) the total number of cases operated on.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested has been collected since the financial year 1987-88 and copies of the summary booklet "NHS Operating Theatres Availability and Use" for 1987-88 and 1988-89 have been placed in the Library. The 1989-90 data are due to be published shortly and a copy will be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Household Incomes

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of households in Scotland have a weekly income of less than £100.

Mr. Lang: It is estimated that in 1989 approximately 25 per cent. of households in Scotland had gross income below £100 per week; just over two thirds of these were one-person households. This is the latest year for which information is available from the family expenditure survey.

M8 (Accidents)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many accidents have occurred on the M8 motorway from the St. James intersection at Glasgow airport to Greenock, in each year since the section was opened.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table provides the number of accidents from the M8 St. James intersection, Glasgow airport to Greenock on the M8, A8 (trunk) and A8 (principal) roads to Greenock, over the last five years 1985 to 1989 and to June 1990. Statistics for the motorway section are available only back to 1979. Statistics for the other sections of the route cannot be made available prior to 1985 except at disproportionate cost. Information prior to 1979 is not available.

Sheep and Cattle

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount of support payments paid out in the Highlands and Islands development board area in the most recent year for which there are figures, in respect of (a) sheep and (b) cattle.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Expenditure on relevant agricultural schemes within the Highlands and Islands development board area is as follows.

	Sheep £'000	Cattle £'000
Hill livestock compensatory allowances[1]	9,471	8,340
Sheep annual premium[1]	9,484	n/a
Suckler cow premium[1]	n/a	5,230

n/a Not available.

The Highlands and Islands development board itself provides some assistance to the livestock sector: in 1989-90 this amounted to £2,212,000.

The sheep and cattle sectors also benefit from intervention market support and the sheep variable premium. It is not possible to disaggregate this support to specific areas.

Urban Programme

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total urban programme budget for Scotland in the financial years 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The total urban programme budget for 1989-90 was £57 million, and for 1990-91 was £68·989 million. These figures include both the central Government and local authority contributions.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the total urban programme budgets available in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 in (a) Strathclyde, (b) Lothian, (c) Central, (d) Fife, (e) Grampian and (f) Tayside, together with (i) the actual expenditure for 1989-90, (ii) the actual expenditure so far for 1990-91, (iii) the total project expenditure for 1990-91 in each case.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The resources of the urban programme are not allocated in the form of regional budgets. However, the table gives details for the urban programme of approved project expenditure aggregated for each of the six regions in question and including approved expenditure by both regional and district councils for 1989-90 and 1990-91. The table also provides corresponding information on actual expenditure which is available only for 1989-90. No information is provided for 1991-92 as decisions have still to be taken about the distribution of a substantial portion of the resources which will be available in that year.

Training Agency

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the actual expenditure of Training Agency budgets in the financial year to date, in each Training Agency area in Scotland;

(2) if he will list the total budgets available to the Training Agency in Scotland in the financial year 1990-91 in each Training Agency area;

(3) if he will publish a table showing the total projected expenditure of Training Agency budgets in the year to date, in each Training Agency area in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is set out in the table, which shows budgets set, actual expenditure to end December 1990, and the latest estimated outturn of expenditure for each Training Agency area office in Scotland. The figures exclude some expenditure incurred centrally by the Training Agency.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the total budgets agreed at the present time in respect of each proposed local enterprise company within the former Scottish Development Agency area;

(2) if he will list the total budgets proposed by each local enterprise company which is being established in Scotland under Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

Mr. Allan Stewart: These are operational matters for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise and I have asked the chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total budgets agreed at the present time in respect of the eight proposed local enterprise companies under Highland Enterprise.

Mr. Allan Stewart: These are operational matters for Highlands and Islands Enterprise and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the total urban programme budgets available in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 in the following district authority areas (a) Clydebank, (b) Clydesdale, (c) Cumbernauld and Kilsyth, (d) Cumnock and Doon Valley, (e) Cunninghame, (f) Dumbarton, (g) East Kilbride, (h) City of Glasgow, (i) Hamilton, (j) Inverclyde, (k) Kilmarnock and Loudoun, (l) Kyle and Carrick, (m) Monklands, (n) Motherwell, (o) Renfrew and (p) Strathkelvin, together with (i) the actual expenditure for 1989-90, (ii) the actual expenditure so far for 1990-91 and (iii) the total projected expenditure for 1990-91, in each case.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The resources of the urban programme are not allocated as budgets for district authority areas. However, the table gives details for the urban programme-approved project expenditure for 1989-90 and 1990-91 for the district councils for the areas in question. These figures do not include approved expenditure by relevant regional councils as this cannot be accurately apportioned to district authority areas without disproportionate difficulty. The table also provides corresponding information on actual expenditure which is available only for 1989-90. No information is provided for 1991-92 as decisions have still to be taken about the distribution of a substantial portion of the resources which will be available in that year.

Highlands and Islands Enterprise

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish total proposed budget figures for Highlands and Islands Enterprise for 1991-92.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The budget for Highlands and Islands Enterprise will be published in the supply estimates.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the actual expenditure of Scottish Development Agency budgets in the financial year to date in each Scottish Development Agency region;

(2) if he will list the total budgets available to the Scottish Development Agency in the financial year 1990-91 in each Scottish Development Agency region of operation;

(3) if he will publish a table showing the total projected expenditure of Scottish Development Agency budgets in the financial year to date in Scotland, in each Scottish Development Agency region.

Mr. Allan Stewart: These are operational matters for the Scottish Development Agency and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Edinburgh Ring Road

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the closure of lanes on the Edinburgh ring route; and whether the cost of repairs will be borne by central Government.

Mr. Lang: The Edinburgh city bypass is a local road. Responsibility for the maintenance of the bypass is consequently a matter for Lothian regional council as the local roads authority.

Natural Heritage

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give further details of the advice sought by management consultants due to report on the location, staffing and organisation options for Scottish Natural Heritage; who the management consultants are; the expected date of the report's publication; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The management consultants, Ernst and Young, consulted a wide range of interests including relevant public bodies, voluntary organisations and the management and trade union sides of the predecessor bodies. The Scottish Office Environment Department has now received the report. The management and trade union sides of the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland and the Countryside Commission for Scotland are being asked for their views.

Baby Units

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much funding was provided for special care baby units in Scotland for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the location of each special care baby unit in Scotland; how many places are available in each unit; and how many patients are redirected from Glasgow special care baby units when places are full.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards meet the capital and revenue costs of special care baby units from within their normal allocations. The table lists the average number of available staffed special care baby unit beds in Scotland at 31 March 1990. Information on the number of redirected patients is not held centrally.

Schools (Advertising)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will specify in respect of the current advertising programme on behalf of the SED and independent schools information service (a) how many adverts are appearing and are scheduled to appear and in which newspapers, (b) whether any television advertising is envisaged, (c) the cost of the campaign and (d) if he will list the statutory provisions which relate to the incurring of expenditure on, or promotion of, such a non-governmental body.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no advertising programme on behalf of the Scottish Office Education Department and the Independent Schools Information Service.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the relevant bodies which were consulted before the appointment of 11 members to the board of the newly formed Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland announced on 13 December 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No formal consultation was undertaken before the appointment of 11 members to the board of the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland. A number of individuals and bodies submitted nominations. These were considered along with other candidates.

Fish Farming Advisory Committee

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions the fish farming advisory committee has met; how many cases have been referred to it; and how many opinions on cases it has delivered.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand from the Crown Estate Commissioners that the inaugural meeting of the advisory committee was held in March 1990. One case has been referred to the committee and it determined its opinion at the second meeting in August 1990.

Homelessness

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new and additional finance is being made available to assist (a) local authorities and (b) voluntary agencies to tackle the problem of homelessness in (i) Strathclyde and (ii) Scotland as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Particular attention is given to homelessness needs in distributing provisional housing capital allocations among local authorities. In 1991-92, in addition to the main allocation, totalling over £414 million on the housing revenue account—HRA—and over £105 million on the non-HRA, my right hon. Friend has made available an extra allocation of £2 million specifically to tackle homelessness in the four Scottish cities, including Glasgow. I shall be announcing the distribution of that total among the cities shortly. In addition to the grants already paid to voluntary organisations concerned with homelessness under section 39 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 and section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, we are currently considering making funds available to voluntary agencies under section 10(1) of the 1968 Act to enable them to provide support to young people at risk of becoming roofless and to make it easier for them to move into settled accommodation in their own area.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new initiatives he is taking to tackle the problem of homelessness in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Problems associated with homelessness play a large part in determining the Government's housing policies, in particular the distribution of capital allocations to local authorities. The statutory responsibility for advising and housing homeless applicants rests with local authorities. Other housing agencies, including Scottish Homes, also give high priority to homelessness.

Besides developing existing policies, the Government have taken a number of specific initiatives against homelessness which will benefit Strathclyde and the rest of Scotland. These include:

- From April 1991 any deficit incurred by a local authority in operating a homelessness hostel will be met by housing support grant, whether or not the authority would otherwise receive grant.
- An additional capital allocation of £2 million is being made for specific projects to tackle homelessness and rooflessness in the four Scottish cities.
- We expect to issue soon a new version of the code of guidance for local authorities on the homelessness legislation, on which consultations took place late last year.
- Costs which local authorities incur in providing a homelessness service using resources other than council-owned housing will in future be charged to the general fund, rather than to the housing revenue account.
- Glasgow university's centre for housing research have been awarded a contract for a study of the role of social work in the management and prevention of homelessness.

We are continuing to encourage local authorities to establish cash incentive schemes as an effective means of releasing council housing for the homeless. I am pleased that several local authorities are now pursuing this option.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, for each of the last 10 years, (a) the number of local authority dwellings built, (b) the number sold, (c) the number built by housing associations, (d) the number of homeless persons and (e) his estimate of the number sleeping on the streets.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of dwellings completed by local authorities and housing associations from 1979 onwards are published quarterly in table 5 of the Scottish Office statistical bulletins on housing trends in Scotland. Copies of these bulletins are sent to all Members representing Scottish constituencies and are available in the House Library. The numbers of dwellings sold by local authorities to sitting tenants are given in table 7 of these publications.

The information held centrally does not enable an estimate of the number of homeless persons and the number sleeping on the streets to be made. Information based on the number of applications received by local authorities under the homelessness legislation was given in a reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Cathcart (Mr. Maxton) on 1 November 1990, at columns 714-15.

Sandeels

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the criteria which will be used to determine whether the proposed closure of the Shetland sandeel fishery will enable sandeel stocks to reach adequate and sustainable levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proposal to keep the Shetland sandeel fishery closed in 1991 is based on the latest scientific advice that the level of spawning stock has continued to decline and that the fishery should be closed until the stock recovers. While the decline in stocks has not been caused by fishing, and is related to natural factors affecting recruitment of young fish to the stock, closure of the fishery would represent the maximum protection available for the stock in its current poor condition. The recovery of the stocks will depend principally on future recruitment levels which cannot be predicted.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will provide capital grants to existing sandeel fishermen to assist them in adapting to the fishing of alternative stocks during the period of closure of the Shetland sandeel fishery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. Those fishing vessels normally involved in the Shetland sandeel fishery already fish for other species.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will maintain the proposed closure of the Shetland sandeel fishery for a period which allows the population of Arctic terns to reach a sustainable level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: While a final decision on the management arrangements for the Shetland sandeel fishery in 1991 is subject to consultation with interested parties, a consultation paper issued in December 1990 proposes that the fishery be closed until sandeel spawning stock levels recover. The future availability of juvenile sandeels to Arctic terns is primarily dependent on recruitment to the stock, which is affected by natural factors outwith our control and not by fishing effort.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which private schools receive support from public funds for the assisted places scheme; and how much each received in the financial year 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 25 January 1991]: The Government do not give direct financial assistance to independent schools. The assisted places scheme provides financial help for parents to send their children to independent schools. It concentrates assistance on low-income families. In the 1989-90 school sesssion 48 per cent. of those benefiting came from families whose total income was less than £8,500.

Operations (Postponements)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many operations due to take place within hospitals under the Lothian health board have been postponed in each month from October 1990 to the most recent available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 29 January 1991]: The number of operations postponed by hospitals in Lothian during the period October-December 1990 was as follows:

	Number
October	16
November	133
December	263
TOTAL	512

The corresponding total for the same period in the previous year was 590.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements are available for the payment of attendance allowance to persons who normally reside in local authority homes but who spend periods away from such homes, staying with relatives or friends, for and during holidays and other periods.

Mr. Scott: If the usual qualifying conditons are met, attendance allowance is payable for daily periods (which must include an overnight absence) spent away from a local authority home. The claimant or his representative should inform the Department of any such periods and the allowance is paid in arrears by payable order.

Poor People

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of Government policies on the economic well-being of the poorest decile of the income distribution.

Mr. Jack: Information on the living standards of people living in the lower half of the income distribution is presented in the series of tables "Households Below Average Income 1981-87", copies of which are available in the Library. The tables show that the incomes of those in the lower income groups—including the lowest decile—rose in real terms during that period.

National Insurance

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether he will announce the outcome of his Department's review of the procedure for allocating national insurance numbers;

(2) whether his Department intends to consult the Commission for Racial Equality and organisations working with refugees in its review of the procedure for allocating national insurance numbers.

Mr. Jack: Following an internal review of procedures, it was decided that when foreign nationals are restricted from seeking work in this country we would no longer inform the Home Office when a national insurance number is issued for benefit purposes only. The Department now accepts a wider range of documents as evidence of identity.

The review took careful account of views expressed by organisations working with refugees.

Poverty

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give his Department's latest official figures for the number of people living in poverty in Scotland.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 30 January 1991.

Backdated Claims

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the benefits for which claimants may backdate claims for proven good cause within a prescribed time.

Mr. Scott: The benefits for which claims may be backdated for proven good cause are as follows:

- Unemployment Benefit
- Sickness Benefit
- Invalidity Benefit
- Severe Disablement Allowance
- Disablement Benefit (including increases of Disablement Benefit)
- Reduced Earnings Allowance
- Income Support
- Housing Benefit
- Community Charge Benefit
- Family Credit
- Social Fund Payments in respect of maternity expenses, funeral expenses and expenses for heating incurred in a period of cold weather.

Concessionary Fuel

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the lump sum payment offered by British Coal to retired concessionaires entitled to cash in lieu of concessionary fuel will be classified as capital; and if it will affect future payments of means-tested benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: Lump sum payments are normally treated as capital in the income-related benefits, and do not affect entitlement to benefit unless they take a person's total capital to over £3,000. However, where the adjudicating authority decides that a person has deprived himself of regular payments of cash in lieu of concessionary coal in exchange for a lump sum payment for the purpose of obtaining benefit, or an increase in benefit, the person will be treated as if he is still receiving that income. We are asking British Coal to advise benefit claimants to seek advice before making a decision.

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to change the definition of non-dependants in relation to the qualification for severe disability premium.

Miss Widdecombe: There are no current plans to do so.

Family Credit Office (Blackpool)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in the Official Report the performance targets for the family credit office at Blackpool indicating which are not yet being achieved.

Mr. Jack: The information is in the table:

Performance target	Achievement
	1988-89	1989-90	[1]1990-91
Clearance rate
Average of 18 working days	21	19	21
Error rate
7·0 per cent.	8·6	8·4	7·9

[1] April-December 1990

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time taken to process a family credit claim by the DSS office at Blackpool.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 16 January at col. 531.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what facilities are made available for telephone contact to be made by members of the public wishing to expedite family credit claims at Blackpool.

Mr. Jack: All claims for family credit are acknowledged by a letter which provides the number of a dedicated telephone inquiry section. This service provides direct contact via 40 telephone lines to a section staffed by experienced assessment clerks with on-line access to the family credit computer system. Claimants are provided with answers to their inquiries from information held on the database. Urgent messages are relayed to the operational sections to expedite claims and call-back arrangements operate to callers who require more detailed information from the assessment officers.

Additional facilities operate for members of the public who visit the local offices of the Department by way of a local office helpdesk service which provides direct contact to an urgent information facility in cases of financial hardship.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the official staff complement necessary for undertaking family credit work at Blackpool; and how many employees are currently employed.

Mr. Jack: The current staffing complement at North Fylde central office to deal with family credit claims is 776. The number of staff employed as at 30 January 1991 was 779.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies his Department has undertaken or commissioned to determine what savings are made in common agricultural policy commodity market support by farmers forestalling increased production by joining the environmentally sensitive areas scheme; and what are the results.

Mr. Curry: The Department has commissioned studies from two universities and private consultants. The results so far received are being evaluated and will be taken into account in the review of environmentally sensitive areas policy.

Statistics

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what differences in the statistical methods used there are between "Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1990", and "Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1989".

Mr. Curry: "Agriculture in the United Kingdom" includes a large number of statistical tables containing figures compiled from a wide range of initial sources. There have been no significant changes in methodology between the 1989 and 1990 issues. However, as indicated in the preface, the figures, and particularly those for the latest (and partly forecast) year, are subject to revision as more information becomes available.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies his Department has undertaken or commissioned to reinforce provision in the set-aside scheme to ensure a wider uptake.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 30 January 1991 at columns 543-44.

Beef Imports

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tonnes of beef have been imported from the Republic of Ireland during the last six months; what are the estimates for the next six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Imports of beef and veal from the Republic of Ireland from May to October 1990 (the most recent six-month period for which figures are available) were 31,793 tonnes, down 7,523 tonnes (19 per cent.) compared with the same period in 1989.

The level of imports from the Republic of Ireland will depend on a large number of factors, including developments in middle eastern markets.

Bananas

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on when the European Commission will publish its proposals about the banana market post-1992; and what steps the Government are taking to encourage the Commission to publish its proposals without delay.

Mr. Curry: We understand that the Commission is working urgently on this issue but has not set a date for publishing its proposals. We have made clear to the Commission the importance we attach to achieving a satisfactory outcome.

Sheep and Cow Subsidies

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the sheep subsidy and hill cow payments will be made; what delays there have been in payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to the reply, 18 January 1991, c. 616]: I am pleased to say that the difficulties referred to in the previous answer concerning the introduction of the new limit of 1·4 livestock units per hectare in the HLCA arrangements have now been resolved. Application forms can now be printed and will be issued to producers as soon as possible.

I expect to announce the rates of HLCA payments shortly.

My right hon. Friends and I shall, of course, do all we can to ensure that payments reach producers quickly just as soon as the necessary arrangements are all in place.

EMPLOYMENT

Approved Training Organisations

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of those employment training providers, including training agents and training managers, who commenced on 5 September 1988 have now achieved ATO status; and when he expects the remainder to do so.

Mr. Jackson: As at 30 December 1990, a total of 940 —97 per cent.—employment training providers had achieved stage one and 415—43 per cent.—had also achieved stage two of the approved training organisation award. As training and enterprise councils are established, they are taking over responsibility for making decisions on the remainder of providers in partnership with my Department. My right hon. and learned Friend said in July that he expected the ATO process to be completed not later than April 1991—Official Report, column 250.

Tourism

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the level of investment in tourism and leisure projects in each of the last five years; and what is his estimate for the next two years' investment.

Mr. Forth: The table gives the latest figures published by the English tourist board of the amount of investment in tourism projects worth £500,000 or more which were completed during each of the last five calendar years. Further projects to a total value of £2,878 million were still under construction on 30 June 1990.

Value of tourism projects completed during the year (England)

Year	£ million
1985	247
1986	452
1987	429
1988	605
1989	972

The English tourist board does not publish forecasts of tourism investment.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement concerning the current position of the British tourist industry.

Mr. Forth: The tourism industry is an important component of our economy. It contributes some £22 billion to the United Kingdom's gross domestic product and provides work directly for nearly 1·5 million people. I am confident that the industry, working with the tourist boards, will be able to reassert its position in the world market once the Gulf crisis is resolved. The Government are determined to sustain international confidence in this country as a tourist destination. We have applied strict security measures at international airports and ports, and the security record of British airlines is first class. If visitors are deterred from travelling, this can only advance the potential terrorist's cause.

Employment Training

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have now secured full-time employment directly after completion of an employment training programme undertaken in Hereford.

Mr. Jackson: Information about the destinations of people leaving ET is not held at the local level requested. The nearest area breakdown would be for the county of Hereford and Worcester. Follow-up results for the period August 1989 to July 1990 indicate that three months after leaving 30 per cent. of leavers were in full-time employment.

Earnings

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average weekly rate of pay in (a) Southport and (b) England.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not available for Southport, but figures of average gross weekly earnings in April 1990 for Merseyside metropolitan county, and for England, are published in part E of the 1990 new earnings survey report, a copy of which is in the Library.

Action for Jobs

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the expenditure on regional events for action for jobs in 1986-87 was spent through the Central Office of Information.

Mr. Jackson: None of the expenditure on Action for Jobs regional events in 1986-87 was spent through the Central Office of Information.

Work Permits

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what changes he is proposing to make in the arrangements for the issue of work permits.

Mr. Howard: In May 1989 the Employment Department published a consultation paper as part of a deregulation review of the work permit scheme. This contained proposals to make the scheme more relevant to changed economic and labour market conditions and to make it more responsive to employers' needs. Those proposals have met with overwhelming support.

The changes I will be making will considerably reduce the formalities for employers who need to bring to the United Kingdom essential staff who are subject to work permit requirements, whilst at the same time maintaining firm immigration control with no relaxation of the conditions required by the immigration rules. Permits will continue to be generally restricted to posts requiring highly qualified and skilled people, where there is no suitable United Kingdom or EC national available and will be for strictly limited duration, related to the essential needs of the employer. Only in exceptional circumstances will permits be given for the four-year period which can qualify an overseas national to apply for indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom.

The main changes to the scheme, which will come into effect as soon as practicable, are as follows:

(i) The evidence required to support an application will be reduced to the necessary minimum. For example, employers will no longer be required to advertise vacancies in the United Kingdom and EC if they can demonstrate that such advertisement would have been inappropriate or unproductive for the post in question.

(ii) Procedures will be simplified to reduce delays and uncertainty when both the Employment Department and the Home Office need to be involved. In future employers will send all applications to the same point of contact in the Employment Department for initial consideration.

(iii) Permits will no longer be resticted to those overseas nationals who have gained their qualifications and experience outside the United Kingdom. It will however remain the case that those admitted as students or for other reasons will not normally be permited to change to employment.

There are a number of other more detailed changes which will simplify the application process for work permits. Full details will be given to those wishing to apply, when revised guidance notes are issued.

The new arrangements will enable the Employment Department to provide a faster, better service taking greater account of the needs of business and resulting in considerable administrative savings for most employers who need to apply for permits. I intend also to recover the costs to the taxpayer of administering the scheme by introducing a service charge for work permit applications. Legislative proposals to allow this will be put forward when a suitable opportunity becomes available.

DEFENCE

Temperature Records

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the (i) maximum and (ii) minimum temperature recorded at each meteorological station in Northern Ireland since 1 December 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The maximum and minimum temperatures reported at stations in Northern Ireland from 1 December 1990 to 26 January 1991 are as follows:

Station	Maximum deg. C	Minimum deg. C
Aldergrove	11·9	−4·1

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average temperature recorded (a) each day and (b) each night at each meteorological station in Northern Ireland since 1 December 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Hourly records are required to produce daily values of the average temperature during (a) the day and (b) the night. Such information in Northern Ireland is available from only one station, Aldergrove.

Gulf Crisis

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether service men and women serving in the Gulf war will be provided with the opportunity to make free telephone calls.

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider the introduction of a system of free telephone calls, limited in number and duration, to the United Kingdom or elsewhere, for service men in the Gulf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today announced that the Ministry of Defence is introducing a concession on telephone calls equivalent to £10 a month for all service personnel in the Gulf.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider methods of subsidising the postage costs of sending food parcels from the families of those forces serving in the Gulf to the troops in the Gulf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Forces' concessionary rates for parcel post to service personnel in the Gulf have been available since September 1990.

Under this economy service, parcels are carried at the United Kingdom inland postage rates, which represent a significant saving over the rates for the Post Office's airmail service. Economy service parcels are being carried to the Gulf by RAF aircraft.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements his Department has made for the repatriation or local burial of United Kingdom troops killed in the Gulf conflict; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We will arrange for temporary local burial close to the battlefield. Once fighting has ceased the next-of-kin will be offered the option of having the body brought back to this country, wherever that is practical. Appropriate religious services will be arranged in accordance with the wishes of the next-of-kin. For those who die at sea, the decision on whether bodies should be taken ashore for later repatriation or buried at sea remains, as is traditional, with the commander of the vessel in the light of operational circumstances.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present estimated accumulated cost of the British presence in the Gulf arising from the invasion of Kuwait.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 30 January at column 558.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he intends to take to enable medical practitioners who have volunteered for RAMC service in the Gulf to obtain personal insurance from private firms or through the Army PAX scheme at non-inflated rates.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is for individual insurance companies and underwriters to set premium levels in the light of the risks they are accepting. Personal insurance arrangements are, of course, a matter for the individual. The Ministry of Defence is, however, in contact with the insurance industry in order to ensure that new cover remains available to service personnel and that premiums remain as low as possible. We are also able to put personnel into contact with brokers who are experienced in meeting service needs. Where personnel are required to pay increased premiums for life insurance or the life element of personal accident insurance as a result of service, or liability for service, in the Gulf, the Ministry of Defence will meet 90 per cent. of the additional cost up to certain limits. These arrangements apply to reserve personnel who are called out as well as regulars. In addition, called-out reservists are eligible for the same generous attributable benefits of the armed forces pension scheme as are regular personnel.

Plutonium

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the research paper on the explosive properties of reactor grade plutonium prepared by Dr. J. Carson Mark, former head of the theoretical division of the Los Alamos national nuclear laboratories, for the Washington DC-based Nuclear Control Institute in August 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent studies have been (a) commissioned and (b) received by his Department on the long-term radiological impact of United Kingdom nuclear tests conducted at the Maralinga and Emu sites in Australia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department commissioned and has recently received a copy of the National Radiological Protection Board report "Assessment of the Potential Radiological Impact of Residual Contamination in the Maralinga and Emu Areas" (NRPB-R237). This was published in November 1990 as part of the report commissioned by the Australian Government of the technical assessment group (TAG) on rehabilitation of the former United Kingdom nuclear weapon test sites in Australia.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply on funding of the atomic weapons establishment of 12 December, Official Report, column 431, he will set out the policy considerations behind the practice of giving details of funding for the chemical defence establishment but not of funding for the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is Government policy to make information available wherever possible without detriment to the public interest. Data on the funding of the atomic weapons establishment would, however, allow judgments to be made on the scale and scope of the United Kingdom nuclear weapons programme which it would not be in the public interest to disclose.

Iraq (Military Exports)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the value of military equipment, technology and training provided by the United Kingdom to Iraq in each year since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) on 30 January, Official Report, Vol. 184, col. 558.

Iraqi Detainees

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Iraqi military personnel have been detained since the outbreak of hostilities; and what they were doing in this country.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Thirty-five Iraqis known or suspected to be military personnel have been detained in this country as prisoners of war under the provisions of the third Geneva convention. All had entered the United Kingdom to study at various colleges.

Aldershot Army Base

Mr. Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on retaining the British Army base at Aldershot.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Until the future size and shape of the Army has been more clearly defined, I am unable to comment on the future of particular locations.

Families for Defence

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what support is provided by his Department to the organisation Families for Defence.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Material explaining the Government's defence policy is made available to any individual or organisation who requests it, including Families for Defence. The Ministry of Defence provides no financial support to the group.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current estimated accumulated cost of British military action following the invasion of the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The accumulated cost of the British military action following the invasion of the Falkland Islands is estimated to be about £3·5 billion at outturn prices, equivalent to £4·9 billion at 1990-91 prices.

Iraq (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ministerial visits have been made by his Department to Iraq since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There have been no visits by Defence Ministers to Iraq since 1979.

Training Courses

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown of the number of places on his Department's training courses allocated to students from foreign and Commonwealth countries, indicating the countries from which these students came, during each of the years 1985 to 1990 inclusive.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following countries have sent personnel for training at United Kingdom service establishments on at least one occasion during each of the years 1985 to 1990 inclusive.

The approximate numbers of United Kingdom military training courses attended by overseas students in each financial year from 1985 to 1990 are as follows:

	Number
1985-86	5,150
1986-87	5,500
1987-88	4,850
1988-89	5,150
1989-90	4,750

Further specific details about numbers trained are generally confidential between Her Majesty's Government and the Government concerned.

Written Answers to Questions

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Political Science

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will include contemporary political issues in the syllabus for 14 to 16-year-olds.

Mr. Eggar: There is nothing to stop schools dealing with contemporary political issues subject to their legal duty to avoid political indoctrination and ensure that any political issues raised are given a balanced treatment of opposing views.

Special Purpose Grants

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out, for the year 1991-92, the value per child (a) in each maintained sector school of the grants for education, support and training and (b) in each grant-maintained school for the special purpose grant (development).

Mr. Eggar: In 1991-92, the grant payable to local authorities under the grants for education support and training programme will represent nationally an average of some £28 per pupil in local education authority maintained schools. Special purpose grant (development) of some £41 per pupil will be available to grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much grant-maintained schools have been allocated for special purpose grant for staff redundancy; how many teaching and non-teaching posts have been removed; and how many teaching and non-teaching staff have been made redundant or taken early retirement.

Mr. Eggar: Up to 31 December 1990 approval had been given for special purpose grant for restructuring (SPG(R)) to be paid in respect of 52 teachers at grant-maintained schools. No approvals have been given in respect of non-teaching staff. Of the 52 teachers three received redundancy payments at a total cost of £29,800. A further three received voluntary severance terms at a total cost of £25,900. The remaining 46 teachers and the three receiving redundancy payments have received or will be receiving premature retirement compensation.

Cash Limits

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any changes to announce to cash limits on votes within his responsibility for 1990-91; and whether there are any proposals to amend his Department's running cost limit for 1990-91.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Subject to parliamentary approval to the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limits for class XI, vote 1, schools, research and miscellaneous services, and class XI, vote 2, higher and further education will be amended. The Department's running cost limit on class XI, vote 4 will also be increased. The cash limit changes are as follows:

Class and vote	Current cash limit £	Change £	Revised cash limit £
XI.1	657,650,000	−1,500,000	656,150,000
XI.2	3,115,983,000	+1,500,000	3,117,483,000

The decrease on class XI, vote 1 results from slippage of certain projects in connection with research, development and implementation of the national curriculum. The token supplementary estimate also takes account of a transfer of provision for grant-in-aid to the Sports Council from the Department of the Environment to my Department.

The increase on class XI, vote 2 is needed to offset reduced receipts to be appropriated in aid of the vote from the Channel Islands and Isle of Man for students attending higher education institutions in the United Kingdom; from the sale of property owned by the Royal College of Art to be reinvested in the college's redevelopment scheme; and from a decline in the proportion of Open university students from Northern Ireland. It also provides additional recurrent funds for the Royal College of Art to pay the rent on temporary accommodation for the school of painting following its move from a building owned by the Victoria and Albert museum.

My Department's running cost limit will be increased by £193,000 from £80,686,000 to £80,879,000.

These changes are within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Know-how Funds

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North regarding access to the know-how fund for local education authorities.

Mrs. Chalker: I replied to the hon. Gentleman's letter of 17 January on 31 January.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the joint assistance unit expects to meet the British Council to discuss the Brackenhurst college submission for support from the know-how fund.

Mrs. Chalker: I am writing to the hon. Member about this case.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in full the current disbursements under the Polish know-how fund.

Mrs. Chalker: The list of activities and their estimated expenditure which are being supported in 1990-91 from the Poland know-how fund is as follows:

Cash Limits

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of Strate for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes have been made in the 1990-91 cash limit for expenditure by the Overseas Development Administration.

Mrs. Chalker: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit on the overseas aid vote (class II, vote 5) will be increased by £1,444,000 from £1,477,509,000 to £1,478,953,000. The increase reflects adjustments to the aid programme including a contribution from the Scottish Office to the costs of the St. Helena ship. The increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Commonwealth Foundation

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Commonwealth Foundation on its activities for 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is represented on the board of governors of the Commonwealth Foundation by the British governor, Dr. John Wood. The board meets regularly to establish the foundation's policy and future activities.

Reforming European Economies

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his overall strategic approach to aid and assistance to the reforming east European and central European economies.

Mrs. Chalker: The main strategic aid is to help in the establishment of a plural democracy and to facilitate the transition from a centrally planned to a free market economy. The know-how fund is our main bilateral instrument for achieving these overall aims. Assistance under the know-how fund is concentrated on help in the financial sector, particularly privatisation, banking and accountancy; in the employment sector; in the development of small businesses; in management training; and in assistance to parliamentarians, the media and legal structures.

ENERGY

Mine Workings

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were the findings of the Government-commissioned Harris research survey into attitudes to British Coal's arrangements for the notification of past and proposed mine workings; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon.Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart), on 20 April 1990 at column 1035.

British Coal intends to introduce on a voluntary basis in February a pilot scheme for individually notifying householders that their property might be affected by subsidence damage as a result of underground mining operations. The intention is that these arrangements will be introduced nationally from June. The recently published Coal Mining Subsidence Bill, once enacted, will make the individual notification of householders a statutory requirement.

Cash Limits

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limits for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made.

The cash limit for class V, vote 2 will be increased by £27,033,000 from £298,562,000 to £325,595,000. This extra provision sought includes £27,141,000 for UKAEA programmes mainly for additional requirements on decommissioning and radioactive waste management operations, together with restructuring costs related to the thermal reactor safety programme and to the closure of the Winfrith reactor. Extra provision of £3,700,000 to meet an increased contribution towards British Coal's topping cycle project and £34,000 to cover residual Oil Pipelines Agency costs is also required. The increases sought will be partially offset by savings of £3,842,000 on class V, vote 2.

The cash limit for class V, vote 3 will be increased by £586,000 from £40,117,000 to £40,703,000. This extra provision is sought to meet an increase of £655,000 on the running costs limit (from £41,970,000 to £42,625,000), including additional costs arising from the implementation of the report of the public inquiry into the Piper Alpha disaster; £81,000 for additional information technology requirements; and £20,000 for increased costs in connection with the Ocean Odyssey fatal accident inquiry. The increases sought will be partially offset by savings of £120,000 together with an increase of £50,000 in appropriations in aid on class V, vote 3.

The increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Geothermal Hot Dry Rock Technology

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends to end the research programme into geothermal hot dry rock technology.

Mr. Moynihan: No, the current phase of work on hot dry rock technology is due to be completed in September 1991. My Department has undertaken a thorough review of the technology with substantial input from the contractors for the present programme, Camborne school of mines (CSM), the RTZ Consultants Limited (RTZC). This has shown that very substantial uncertainties remain about the practicality of extracting energy from hot dry rocks within the United Kingdom and, although the economics are very uncertain, the technology seems unlikely to be competitive with conventional means of generation in the short to medium term.

In the light of this I have concluded that a new direction rather than closure of the programme is needed. The next phase of work (expected to be carried out by CSM and its associates, and RTZC), for which £3·3 million will be provided over the period 1 October 1991 to 31 March 1994, will concentrate less on research in Cornwall and involve greater collaboration with a European programme now under way involving France, Germany and the European Commission. In this way the substantial expertise developed in the United Kingdom can be exploited in a European context and opportunities pursued for transferring the technology to industry. A decision on further major investment in an experimental prototype will be taken in about two years when feasibility work on the different European sites has been completed.

WALES

Births

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many babies were born in Wales in 1990; and what were the corresponding figures for the last 10 years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information for 1990 is not yet available. The available information is given in the following table:

Babies Born in NHS Hospitals in Wales
(Live and Still Births)

Year	Number
1979	34,636
1980	35,741
1981	34,445
1982	34,019
1983	33,998
1984	34,528
1985	35,302
1986	35,552
1987	36,338
1988	37,376
1989	36,713

Welsh Food

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the reasons for his decision to set up the Welsh food promotion to begin operation on 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: While many organisations are involved in the marketing of Welsh food, I was concerned that no single body was in a position to assume a clear lead role and to co-ordinate our efforts.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to promote Welsh food abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: One of the objectives of Welsh Food Promotions Ltd. will be to co-ordinate marketing efforts at home and abroad. I expect the company to work closely with Food From Britain and with other bodies that are engaged in that task.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed in the manufacture of Welsh food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Estimates obtained from the 1987 census of employment indicate that, in Wales, there were 18·4 thousand employees employed in the manufacture of food (standard industrial classification 1980 groups 411 to 423).

Cash Limits

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to make any changes to his Department's cash limits for 1990-91.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes. The cash limit for class XVI, vote 2 is to be reduced by £1,400,000 from £98,998,000 to £97,598,000. This reduction takes account of lower than expected demand for regional enterprise grants and will offset the spring supplementary estimate being sought for class XVI, vote 1 in respect of agricultural grants.

The cash limit for class XVI, vote 5 is to be reduced by £2,987,000 from £325,411,000 to £322,424,000, to offset the following increases:

The WO/UA cash limit will be increased by £2 million from £69,904,000 to £71,904,000 in respect of additional provision for Cardiff Bay development corporation to facilitate additional land acquisition and relocation costs.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, there will be an increase of £145,000 in the provision for class XVI, vote 12 in respect of rate rebates for the disabled.

A sum of £842,000 is being transferred to the Office of Arts and Libraries to cover a payment of that amount to the Welsh National Opera company.

All these changes are within the forecast outturn for the overall planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the autumn statement.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Continuous Stationery plc

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will investigate the compliance by Continuous Stationery plc with paragraphs 50(2) and 50(4) of schedules 4 and 5 of the Companies Act 1985, concerning contingent liabilities, in respect of its most recent published accounts.

Mr. Redwood: If the hon. Member cares to write to me with details of the reasons why he believes the accounts in question warrant investigation, I shall be pleased to consider the matter.

Lyons Maid

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to refer any takeover bid for Lyons Maid by Unilever to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Redwood: If such an offer is made it will be considered by the Director General of Fair Trading under the merger control provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973 to determine whether it qualifies for reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. If it does qualify the Director General will advise my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on the question of reference. Each case is considered by the Director General and my right hon. Friend on its merits. The main criterion for my right hon. Friend in deciding whether or not to make a reference remains the possible effect of a merger on competition in the United Kingdom.

Cash Limits

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash and running cost limits for 1990-91.

Mr. Lilley: The cash limit for class IV, vote 2 (support for industry, international trade, statutory and regulatory work, consumer protection, and administration) will be reduced by £11,308,000 from £801,681,000 to £790,373,000. The running costs limit for the Department of Trade and Industry will be reduced by £3,024,000 from £303,764,000 to £300,740,000.

The reduction in the cash limit covers a reduction of £7,958,000 in grant-in-aid external finance provision for the English Industrial Estates Corporation from £24,758,000 to £16,800,000 reflecting current conditions in the property market, and a reduction of £350,000 for the Government's contribution to a rent subsidy for the International Sugar and Wheat Organisation following the transfer of responsibility to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (class III, vote 4).

The reduction in the running cost limit is due principally to lower-than-expected costs for the restructuring of the National Engineering Laboratory. It also reflects some savings resulting from the reorganisation of certain headquarters divisions announced by my predecessor to the House of Commons on 21 February 1990, Official Report, columns 791-92, and £24,000 in respect of the transfer of some functions from gross running cost control areas to those exempt from gross running cost control.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much stock will be put into the public auction of the Crown Suppliers' ex-stock; and if it will include office and domestic furniture.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

All remaining stock, including new office furniture and fitments, domestic and commercial furniture and household goods.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date a public auction of the Crown Suppliers' ex-stock will be held in the current year.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

The dates are 14 and 15 February 1991.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the estimated value of the Crown Suppliers' ex-stock to be put into a forthcoming public auction.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

The figure is between £3 million and £3·5 million at cost price.

Personal Debt

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the latest estimates of serious personal over-indebtedness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: There is no generally agreed definition of "serious personal over-indebtedness". However, the Policy Studies Institute in its report "Credit and Debt in Britain" which was published in February 1990 estimated that about 3 per cent. of all households (560,000) had serious debts.

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list in the Official Report those measures of assistance to firms under the enterprise initiative which are directed on a regional basis and the regions in which they are currently available;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report those criteria by which firms in the south-east region of England are excluded from measures of assistance under the enterprise initiative;

(3) if he will consider making all measures of assistance to firms under the enterprise initiative available throughout the United Kingdom without regional distinction.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 30 January 1991]: Under the enterprise initiative, there are three measures of assistance which are directed on a regional basis:

Regional selective assistance—available in the assisted areas of Great Britain;

Regional enterprise grants—available in development areas of Great Britain and the intermediate areas of South Yorkshire, Derbyshire, Plymouth and Fife;

The consultancy initiatives—available throughout Great Britain but at a higher rate in assisted areas and urban programme areas.

The only forms of help under the enterprise initiative not available anywhere in the south-east are regional selective assistance and regional enterprise grants. In urban programme areas in the south-east firms can benefit from higher rates of support under the consultancy initiatives.

A wide range of criteria were used in drawing up the current assisted areas map, including unemployment, long-term unemployment, industrial and occupational structure, population density and remoteness from main markets. No areas in the south-east were judged to warrant assisted area status. The designation of urban programme areas is a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment.

We have no intention of extending to the whole of the United Kingdom the additional help available regionally. The Government seek to promote enterprise and growth throughout the country as a whole but within this framework, extra help is needed in certain areas.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mining Subsidence

Mr. Barron: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases in respect of mining subsidence damage were referred to the Lands Tribunal in each of the last five years; and how long each took to be resolved.

The Attorney-General: The number of cases in respect of mining subsidence damage referred to the Lands Tribunal in each of the last five years is given in the table.

Year	Number of cases
1986	23
1987	68
1988	34
1989	26
1990	8

The Lord Chancellor's Department does not keep detailed statistics on the length of time taken to resolve mining subsidence damage cases, but it is estimated that cases are resolved within 12 to 18 months, depending on the length of time it takes the parties to prepare for the hearing.

Entry Clearance Officers

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Attorney-General what qualifications or training (a) entry clearance officers and (b) adjudicators have in order to qualify them for the work they carry out in the Indian sub-continent; how many entry clearance officers and adjudicators are employed; what is the average number of applications dealt with by an entry clearance officer or an adjudicator each month; and to whom they are answerable for the manner in which they perform their duties.

The Attorney-General: The training of entry clearance officers is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. I understand that entry clearance officers on the Indian sub-continent undergo a three-and-a-half week training course in which they are instructed in all areas of the immigration rules. On arrival at post they are given a further period of training varying between two and eight weeks depending on their location. All aspects of their work are closely monitored by line managers, to whom they are immediately answerable. Their ultimate responsibility is to their head of post. There are 82 entry clearance officers on the Indian sub-continent, who each process an average of 320 applications per month.

Adjudicators are appointed by the Lord Chancellor from among lawyers of not less than seven years' standing. Upon appointment, adjudicators are required to attend a two to three-day induction course, to pay visits to officials of the immigration service at ports of entry in the United Kingdom, and to officials of the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service, which represents 50 per cent. of appellants before the adjudicators. Once the adjudicators take up their duties they are required to attend training seminars, which are held on a regular basis.

The number of adjudicators currently sitting at nine hearing centres throughout the United Kingdom is as follows:

1 Chief Adjudicator
11 Full-time Adjudicators
71 Part-time Adjudicators

There are no details of the number of cases from the Indian sub-continent disposed of by individual adjudicators, but in 1990 the average number of cases disposed of each month was 1,377.

Adjudicators are answerable to the chief adjudicator and the Lord Chancellor for their conduct. Appellants dissatisfied with a judicial decision of an adjudicator may appeal on a point of law to the immigration appeal tribunal.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Attorney-General what discretion is available to Ministers to bring forward the timing of the hearing of an appeal against the refusal of an entry permit by an entry clearance officer in the Indian sub-continent; and whether he has discretion to intervene in cases where evidence of an unsound refusal is made available to him.

The Attorney-General: Ministers have no discretion to being forward the timing of immigration appeal hearings by the adjudicators. That is a matter for the immigration appellate authorities, which are independent of Ministers, although responsibility for their administration rests with the Lord Chancellor.

Where further evidence clearly indicates that a decision to refuse entry is unsound, the correspondence unit in the migration and visa department of the Foreign Office will refer the case back to the entry clearance officer for reconsideration.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average time in the Indian sub-continent that elapses between the lodging of an appeal against the decision of an entry clearance officer to grant an entry permit and the hearing of that appeal by an adjudicator; and what are the minimum and maximum times recorded during the past two years.

The Attorney-General: The immigration appellate authorities (IAA) do not record details of the minimum and maximum times for appeals from an Indian sub-continent to be determined by adjudicators. However, it is possible to provide an estimate of the average time taken by the IAA to deal with appeals at each stage of the proceedings, as follows:

(a) From the date of receipt of the notice of appeal and explanatory statement at the IAA's headquarters in London, to the date the case papers are despatched to the parties representatives in this country: 10 to 12 weeks;
(b) From the date on which both parties indicate readiness to proceed to a hearing, to the date of the hearing: two to three months;
(c) From the date of the hearing to the date the Adjudicator's determination is despatched to the parties representatives in this country: one month.

Thus the current estimate of the average time taken by an Adjudicator to deal with a case is five and a half to seven months, to which must be added the time taken by the parties' representatives in the United Kingdom to indicate readiness to proceed after receipt of the case papers from the IAA. This latter period can vary considerably but the current estimate is from two to six months.

In addition, an appeal from a determination by an adjudicator to the immigration appeal tribunal is estimated to take four to six months.

Cash Limits

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Attorney-General whether any changes will be made to the Lord Chancellor's Department's cash limit and running costs limit for 1990-91.

The Attorney-General: Yes, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for the Lord Chancellor's Department, class X, vote 1 will be increased by £2,716,000 from £321,132,000 to £323,848,000.

The supplementary estimate gives effect to an increase of £2,472,000 in the Department's provision for the 1990-91 accommodation charge. The increase arises from the introduction of value added tax on commercial rents.

The supplementary estimate also gives effect to an increase of £254,000 in the Department's provision for estate management which arises from the introduction of value added tax on commercial use of fuel and utilities.

The increase to appropriations in aid of £10,000 is required to give effect to receipts in respect of nursery facilities.

The running costs limit for class X, vote 1 will be increased by £2,726,000 from £280,982,000 to £283,708,000.

The increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Attorney-General whether any changes will be made to the Crown prosecution service's cash limit and running costs limit for 1990-91.

The Attorney-General: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class x, vote 5 will be increased by £3,000,000 from £130,668,000 to £133,668,000. Within this total the Department's running costs limit will be increased by £4,000,000 from £125,107,000 to £129,107,000.

Additional provision is required to enable the Crown prosecution service to meet increased accommodation costs, mostly caused by rent reviews and essential office moves, and the costs of agency support staff to compensate for shortfalls in recruitment particularly in the south-east. The increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Attorney-General whether any changes will be made to the Treasury Solicitor's Department's cash limit and running costs limit for 1990-91.

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class X, vote 9 will be increased by £249,000 from £15,862,000 to £16,111,000. The additional provision is required for capital expenditure for new office accommodation in Taunton and a similar sum will be deducted from the provision allocated for 1991-92.

The increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Attorney-General whether any changes will be made to the Serious Fraud Office's cash limit and running costs limit for 1990-91.

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class X, vote 7 will be increased by £60,000 from £6,567,000 to £6,627,000. The Department's running costs limit will be increased by £60,000 from £6,367,000 to £6,427,000. This increase will enable the Serious Fraud Office to meet additional costs arising from a restructuring of its senior management.

The increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost of holding people in police cells, giving (a) the daily rate and (b) by police authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dogs

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of present legislation to control killer dogs; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Dangerous Dogs Act 1989 increased the powers of the courts under the Dogs Act 1871, particularly as regards the destruction of dangerous dogs. The courts have already used these new powers. Last summer, the Government's consultation paper, "The Control of Dogs", reviewed the legislation on dangerous dogs and set out a number of proposals for further action. We are now considering the responses to this paper.

Glen Parva Remand Centre

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will hold an inquiry into the conditions in Glen Parva remand centre.

Mrs. Rumbold: As part of his normal programme, Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons will be conducting an inspection of Her Majesty's young offender institution Glen Parva in October this year, but I see no reason for an inquiry.

Arab People (Racist Attacks)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what role he is playing in co-ordinating special measures to protect Arab and Muslim people from racist attacks.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend is in close touch with representatives of different Muslim communities and with the police service. They and other agencies with responsibilities for dealing with attacks against law-abiding citizens and their homes and institutions in this country are clear about the priority such incidents deserve.

Cash Limits

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to make any changes to the 1990-91 cash limits within his responsibilities and to his Department's running costs' limit.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [pursuant to my reply, 8 November 1990, column 13]: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit on class IX, vote 2, prisons, England and Wales, will be increased by £50,000,000 from £1,294,715,000 to £1,344,715,000. The additional provision is needed to meet the costs of accommodating prisoners in police cells made necessary as a result of the serious prison disorders which occurred in April 1990 and because of industrial action by prison officers. The cash limit on class IX, vote 3, Home Office administration, immigration and police support services, England and Wales, will be increased by £36,523,000 from £758,668,000 to £795,191,000. The additional provision is necessary mainly to fund grants under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 to local authorities which have to make special provision for the needs of their ethnic minority population and also to meet higher than expected costs of Home Office accommodation.

The Home Office running costs limit will be increased by £18,984,000 from £1,012,417,000 to £1,031,401,000[1].

The increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Furthermore, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class IX, vote 5 (the Charity Commission) will be increased by £221,000 from £14,302,000 to £14,523,000 and the running cost limit will be increased by £419,000 from £13,414,000 to £13,833,000. These increases are to meet the costs of the inquiry under section 6 of the Charities Act 1960 into the charity War on Want. The costs of the inquiry are being met partly by savings in capital expenditure. The increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

[1] This is needed mainly for the greater than expected increase in the cost of accommodation, principally in the rents of offices in London.

ENVIRONMENT

Southampton Buildings, Holborn

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the cladding removed in 1986 from the east wing of Southampton buildings, Holborn will be replaced.

Mr. Yeo: The cladding was removed in 1986 because of serious deterioration following storm damage in that year. Re-cladding was planned to start in December 1989, but this had to be postponed because of funding difficulties and other maintenance priorities. It is unlikely that the position will change during 1991-92, but I can assure the hon. Member that there has been no significant deterioration to the fabric of the building. Periodic inspections will be carried out and the position kept under review.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals exist for Southampton buildings, Holborn, when the Patent Office and British Library vacate the buildings; and if there are any plans to develop the site.

Mr. Yeo: The Patent Office now occupies only a small part of Southampton buildings, having vacated most of its accommodation there in September 1989. The building is expected to be occupied by British Library and others until the mid-1990s, when the opportunity may occur for refurbishment or redevelopment. It is too early to say which option might be adopted.

Disused Barns

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest guidance provided by his Department to local authorities over planning permission for the conversion of disused barns into (a) dwellings and (b) workshops or other use.

Mr. Yeo: DOE circular 8/87, "Historic Buildings and Conservation Areas—Policy and Procedures", states that, finding new uses for buildings such as barns which play an important part in the history and appearance of the countryside, all possible solutions should be explored. It points out that they can make a contribution to the rural economy by providing employment. My Department also provided guidance on the re-use of redundant rural buildings in 1988 in planning policy guidance note 7 (PPG7) on "Rural Enterprise and Development" and PPG2 on "Green Belts". A draft revision of PPG7 was issued for public consultation in December 1989.

Land Compensation Act 1973

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the Land Compensation Act 1973; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Planning and Compensation Bill, introduced in another place, contains a number of major proposals for change to land compensation legislation. These include in particular a substantial widening of eligibility for home loss payments under the 1973 Act and an increase in the level of such payments for owner-occupiers.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table indicating the number of jobs created in each urban development corporation area.

Mr. Portillo: The totals of permanent jobs created or attracted, net of losses, are given in the table:

UDC	Net gain in jobs to March 1990
Black Country	5,734
Bristol	0
Central Manchester	285
Leeds	5,241
London Docklands	29,000
Merseyside	4,200
Sheffield	40
Teesside	2,741
Trafford Park	2,450
Tyne and Wear	1,630
Total	51,321

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of financial resources allocated to (a) the urban programme, (b) urban development corporations and (c) grants for urban development for each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 31 January 1991]: The breakdown of central Government expenditure on the urban programme, urban development corporations and city grant (including urban development grant and urban regeneration grant) for 1986-87 to 1990-91 is as follows:

£ million

	1986-87 outturn	1987-88 outturn	1988-89 outturn	1989-90 outturn	1990-91 forecast outturn

Urban Development Corporations (EFLs)	89·3	133·5	234·4	436·0	553·9
City Grants	23·9	26·8	27·8	39·1	50·6

[1] Includes contributions from DH, DES and DTp but excludes contributions for District Health Authorities.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to increase the number of schemes in any urban programme operating at the present time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 31 January 1991]: Local authorities decide on the number of schemes in their annual urban programmes, according to local priority. The Secretary of State has no present plans to review the list of urban programme authorities.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his current priorities in urban regeneration.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 31 January 1991]: Good progress has already been made on improving the quality of life for people in our inner cities: we aim now to build on that success, working with local government and the private and voluntary sectors.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the standard spending assessment for Stoke-on-Trent and the 10 district authorities closest to it in size, giving figures for five larger ones and five smaller ones, together with the estimated assessment for each, and the percentage increase or decrease in the final figure compared with the estimate for each; and if he will list the criteria which led to changes in the original estimates.

Mr. Portillo: The table lists the standard spending assessment (SSA) for Stoke-on-Trent and the 10 districts closest in size in terms of 1991-92 SSA in £m. The main reasons for change between the provisional figures for 1991-92 SSAs announced on 31 October and the final settlement figures are: that later estimates of credit approvals have been used; that later data on flood defence expenditure have been incorporated; and there have been a number of other small changes to data and service control totals. These effects are shown in columns 5, 6 and 7 respectively of the table.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much it would cost to exempt all those people on income support from paying 20 per cent. of the poll tax.

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

Income-related benefit levels were adjusted in April 1989 to include help towards the 20 per cent. contribution to the community charge at an estimated cost of £500 million.

Assuming that these benefit levels are not reduced, exempting all those on income support from paying the 20 per cent. contribution would cost an estimated £300 million in community charge benefit, at current benefit levels.

ID Investment Development AG

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply on 28 January, what information he has on the connections between ID Investment Development AG to which Heveningham hall was sold and representatives of the Iraqi Government.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has no evidence that any such connections exist.

Employment (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received the final report of the research project by Victor Hausner and Associates into the use of the urban programme in creating employment opportunities for black and ethnic minority communities in the inner cities; and whether he will put a copy of this report in the Libary.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend has not yet received the final report of this research project.

Cash Limits

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there are any proposals to change the 1990-91 running costs limit for Ordnance Survey.

Mr. Baldry: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary token spring supplementary estimate, the running costs limit for Ordnance Survey will be increased by £650,000 from £57,193,000 to £57,843,000. The increase is needed to fund additional expenditure in a number of areas.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits and running costs limits for 1990-91.

Mr. Heseltine: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

(i) The cash limit for class VIII, vote 5 (central environmental services, etc.) will be reduced by £145,000 from £366,400,000 to £366,255,000. There will be a corresponding increase on class VIII, vote 8 (Department of the Environment: administration) to provide for administrative expenditure incurred in setting up the Nature Conservancy Council (England).

(ii) The cash limit for class VIII, vote 8 (Department of the Environment: administration) will be increased by £52,000 from £157,750,000 to £157,802,000. This includes a transfer of £145,000 from class VIII, vote 5 (central environmental services) for expenditure incurred in setting up the Nature Conservancy Council (England). A transfer of £13,000 is being made to the Department of Transport to support a review of first aid arrangements. Further income of £80,000 will accrue to the Building Research Establishment as a result of Property Holdings being charged the full economic cost of services provided to it.

(iii) The cash limit for class VIII, vote 2 (miscellaneous housing administration and grants) will be reduced by £1,000,000 from £110,217,000 to £109,217,000, to reflect a reduction in the level of claims by local authorities for reimbursement of costs incurred on the rent officer service, and a small reduction to the provision for grants for tenant participation schemes.

(iv) The non-voted cash limit for DOE/UA (urban aid and derelict land reclamation) will be increased by £3,675,000 from £904,666,000 to £908,341,000. This is to cover increased grant-in-aid of £3,675,000 to the Bristol development corporation for land acquisitions in connection with the Bristol spine road. This will be offset by a corresponding reduction in the Department of Transport's cash limit for class VII, vote 1. Teesside development corporation will receive further provision of £4,800,000 fully offset by a corresponding decrease in grant-in-aid to Trafford Park development corporation. The provision for the city grant has also been increased by £1,122,000 to meet the higher-than-expected level of claims. There are offsetting savings of £500,000 from the recovery of derelict land grant and £622,000 from a reduction in expected claims for urban development grant.

(v) The non-voted cash limit for DOE/LACAP (local authority capital grants and credit approvals) will be reduced by £27,890,000 from £2,813,060,000 to £2,785,170,000. This provides offsetting savings for spending on specified housing grants not at present included in the cash limit, a transfer of resources to the Department of Social Security and to cover an increase in new towns housing subsidy.

(vi) the running costs limit for the Department of the Environment will be reduced by £13,000 from £157,754,000 to £157,741,000.

(vii) These changes are within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to make any changes to the cash limit on the Property Services Agency services vote in 1990-91.

Mr. Yeo: Yes, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class VIII, vote 13 will be increased by £15,548,000 from £29,658,000 to £45,206,000. This increase is required to finance additional expenditure on severance payments to surplus staff as a result of the restructuring of PSA Services into a viable commercial proposition, and to finance additional and unforseen expenditure on the dilapidation costs relating to the early surrender of a leased property no longer required for use by Government Departments. The increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the autumn statement.

Inner-city Decay

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of expenditure by his Department to tackle inner-city decay for each year since 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 31 January 1991]: My Department supports a wide range of programmes within the Government's current initiatives for the inner cities. Resources for these programmes totalled some £1·3 billion in 1988-89 and £1·4 billion in 1989-90; expenditure during 1990-91 is expected to exceed £1·5 billion.

Global Warming

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a copy of the report of the German parliamentary commission on preventive measures to protect the earth's atmosphere chaired by Bernd Schmidbaver in 1987 to 1989; and what arrangements are in place to obtain for his Department copies of reports produced by Parliaments of European Community member states on global warming and greenhouse gas emissions.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 31 January 1991]: Copies of the German parliamentary commission's report have been obtained by the Department. We receive such reports through British embassies in other member states and through direct contacts with the Governments of member states.

Cash Limits

Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cash and running cost limits for Northern Ireland departmental services and the Northern Ireland Office in 1990-91.

Dr. Mawhinney: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary associated supplementary estimates, it is proposed that the cash limit for the Northern Ireland Office (NIO1) will be increased by £16·5 million from £683·5 million to £700·0 million.

The cash limit for Northern Ireland departmental services (NID1) for 1990-91 will be decreased by £27·8 million from £2,949·3 million to £2,921·5 million. This change reflects increases in respect of VAT compensation (£1·9 million) and running costs carried over from 1989-90 under end-year flexibility arrangements (£2·2 million). It also reflects decreases in respect of transfers to the Northern Ireland Office of some £16 million and technical changes of some £16 million, the majority of which were transfers to non cash-limited areas within Northern Ireland Departments.

The running cost limit for Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments will be increased by £3,818,000 from £592,597,000 to £596,415,000 primarily reflecting the take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement of £2,697,000, as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 25 July 1990, Official Report, column 235-40, and a transfer of £1,079,000 from the Department of Social Security in respect of services operated on an agency basis by the Departments of Health and Social Services. The revised running cost provision is £150,614,000 for the Northern Ireland Office and £445,801,000 for Northern Ireland Departments.

Paymaster General's Office (Cash Limits)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes are proposed to the cash and running costs limits for 1990-91 in respect of the Paymaster General's Office.

Mr. Hanley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for the Paymaster General's Office (class XVIII, vote 12) will be increased by £170,000 from £19,120,000 to £19,290,000 and the running cost limit by £85,000 from £17,573,000 to £17,658,000. The increases in running costs mainly reflects an increase in postal charges. The increase in cash limit also includes a reduction in receipts from the national insurance fund.

These increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

PRIME MINISTER

Katyn Massacre

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library, copies of all official statements made or published by members of the Government on the Katyn massacre since 1 January 1961.

The Prime Minister: The information is not readily available and coud be provided only at disproportionate cost. Ministers have answered many questions in the House about the Katyn massacre. I refer my hon. Friend to the replies given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office to him on 23 and 30 November.

"The Times" Article

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Prime Minister if the article written by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for The Times on 17 January represented Government policy.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Conscription Forms

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to print conscription forms.

The Prime Minister: None.

Gulf Oil Slick

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the co-ordinating arrangements with the Gulf states for dealing with the Gulf oil slick.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom is maintaining close touch through diplomatic channels with the Gulf states affected, who are leading the response to the environmental damage that Iraq is inflicting on the region. The Government have responded promptly and positively to requests received from the Saudi Arabian Government for expert advice on oil pollution control and on the care of oiled birds and stand ready to respond to any further requests. The Government have stated their readiness to help to contribute to the response of the international community through such bodies as the European Communities and the United Nations Environment Programme and have called successfully in the OECD for commitment to action to improve the world's common response for the future to events of this kind.

Cabinet Office (Cash Limits)

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Prime Minister, if there are any proposals to change the 1990-91 running costs limit or cash limit for the Cabinet Office: other services.

The Prime Minister: The running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: other services will be increased by £622,000 from £18,074,000 to £18,696,000. This increase is offset by reductions in the running costs limits of £510,000 for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, £38,000 for the Department of Trade and Industry and £74,000 for Her Majesty's Treasury and reflects the transfer of the responsibility for certain administrative functions. At the same time the cash limit for the Cabinet Office: other services will be reduced by £728,000 from £21,256,000 to £20,528,000. This reflects the reprofiling of the timetable of a major capital project. Expenditure will now fall in later years.

THE ARTS

Cash Limits

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will give details of any proposed changes to the cash limits of his Department's votes in 1990-91.

Mr. Renton: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit of class XIII, vote 2, is being increased from £199,025,000 to £199,867,000 to facilitate the additional provision of £842,000 to the Arts Council of Great Britain. The increase will be met by a corresponding saving on class XVI, vote 5, which is accounted for by the Welsh Office.

This change is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

CIVIL SERVICE

Executive Agencies

Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list the "next steps" agencies created since 1 January 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Since 1 January 1990, 24 "next steps" agencies have been established and these are listed in the table. In total 34 agencies have been set up covering some 80,000 staff. The project is continuing to make excellent progress: we expect there to be about 50 agencies by this summer and by the end of the year we expect that "next steps" will apply to about half the civil service.

Cash Limits

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if there are any proposals to change the 1990-91 running costs limit for the office of the Minister for the Civil Service.

Mr. Renton: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the running costs limit for the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (class XIX, vote 1) will be increased by £155,000 from £33,864,000 to £34,019,000. The increase will be offset by increased appropriations in aid.

The increase is required to meet increased demand for training and occupational health services provided by the Civil Service college and civil service occupational health service, respectively. The supplementary estimate includes a transfer of provision from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to reflect the transfer of responsibility for purchasing certain press summaries.

In addition, the amounts listed in the table will be transferred to the Departments and agencies shown to meet part of the cost of increased management development training under the challenge funding scheme initiated by my Department. This will be met from existing but unallocated public expenditure provision.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if receipt of disability working allowance will entitle a recipient to national insurance credits if their earnings are below the national insurance lower earnings limit.

Mr. Scott: We have given consideration to the representations that we received and have decided, exceptionally, that disability working allowance claimants will be awarded national insurance credits for periods when earnings fall below their lower earnings limit.

Child Benefit

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the change in Exchequer income during the 1991-92 financial year resulting from restoring child benefit, for all children, to its April 1987 value in real terms.

Mr. Jack: It is estimated that benefit expenditure in 1991-92 would increase by about £775 million if the level of child benefit reflected the movements in the index of retail prices which applied to the annual uprating of benefits generally from April 1988.

Income Support Deductions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) on 22 October 1990, Official Report, column 78, on income support deductions.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest count showed that 85 offices had income support cases with a deduction to clear community charge arrears. The number of deductions for each office is shown in the table.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received with regard to good cause backdated claiming within prescribed time for claims of the attendance or mobility component of the disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: We received a large number of comments on the consultation document on disability living allowance of which only a handful commented on the issue of backdating the mobillity and care components of disability living allowance.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the temperatures used to trigger severe weather payments recorded in each of the stations relevant to the city of Nottingham for each day during the last two weeks of 1990 and those weeks in 1991 for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: A weather station will trigger if there has been a period of seven consecutive days, during which the average mean daily temperature is 0 deg C or less.

Watnall weather station, which covers the city of Nottingham, did not trigger on any day during the last two weeks of 1990, nor at any time during 1991 to date.

Full details of average mean daily temperatures recorded at all the weather stations can be found in the Library.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in table form for Nottingham and for the United Kingdom (a) the total number of recipients and (b) the total values of the payments in (i) cash and (ii) constant terms, under the exceptionally severe weather payments in each year from 1980-81 to 1990-91 under the social fund exceptionally cold weather payments.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

[1] No information available.

Note:

The variations in numbers of annual payments made can be attributed to the mild weather experienced in certain years rather than changes in criteria and legislation.

Columns B and C relate to payments made and not to the number of recipients.

Benefits

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in table form his Department's policy in respect of recovery of overpayment of benefit in the case of each benefit for which his Department is responsible.

Mr. Jack: Section 53 of the Social Security Act 1986 applies a common test to the recovery of overpaid social security benefits. The statutory test is whether the overpayment results from "misrepresentation or failure to disclose a material fact".
The independent adjudicating authorities administer this test, deciding whether an overpayment has occurred and whether it is recoverable. If an overpayment is determined to be recoverable the Department on behalf of the Secretary of State is entitled to seek recovery.

Freephone Lines

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many freephone lines are operated by his Department; what trends are evident in the level of provision and use; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The freeline social security service provides general benefits information on 125 lines at 10 centres throughout Great Britain. The service is provided in Punjabi, Urdu and Welsh as well as English. The following specialist freeline services are also provided: social security advice line for employers; family credit freeline; Gulf crisis freeline; benefit advice line for people with disabilities.

The Department's freeline services have been regularly expanded and modernised since their 1984 launch and altogether are now taking more than 2 million calls per year. They are important and successful parts of the Department's information and advice service.

Gulf Crisis

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the differences in benefits that would be payable to those involved or affected by the conflict in the Gulf if the claim arose during (a) an officially declared war or (b) in an engagement in hostilities.

Miss Widdecombe: Entitlement to war pensions and social security benefits administered by the Department is not affected by whether a claim arose during an officially declared war or in an engagement in hostilities.

Severe Disablement Premium

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the implications of the introduction of the severe disablement premium for the financial circumstances of carers who are precluded from claiming invalid care allowance.

Miss Widdecombe: The severe disability premium is intended to focus extra help on those severely disabled people who are most likely to need to buy in care, because they live alone and do not have a carer who is receiving invalid care allowance. A person receiving the severe disability premium who has a carer who is, for whatever reason, precluded from claiming invalid care allowance is, as a result of this premium, in a better position to make some payment to the carer.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of carers who are precluded from claiming invalid care allowance because the person they are caring for is in receipt of severe disablement premium.

Miss Widdecombe: None. The receipt of the severe disability premium by a disabled person does not preclude his carer from claiming invalid care allowance.

Cash Limits

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether there have been any changes in the cash limits or running costs limit of his Department for 1990-91.

Mr. Scott: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate the cash limit for class XIV, vote 7 (administration and miscellaneous services) will be increased by £59,013,000 from £1,706,375,000 to £1,765,388,000. The revision takes account of the transfer of industrial injury benefit from the national insurance fund to the consolidated fund, as provided for in the Social Security Act 1990 (£59,000,000). In addition, running cost changes result from a transfer from the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (class XIX, vote 1), £60,000, a transfer to Scottish Office administration (class XV, vote 21) £42,000, and a transfer to Department of Health (class XIII, vote 3) £5,000. There is also an increase of £23,999,000 to take account of expenditure previously classified as capital now being regarded as running costs. The increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

As a result of these changes the running costs limit of the Department of Social Security is increased by £24,012,000 from £1,931,176,000 to £1,955,188,000.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table which sets out, for a two-child family on (a) half, (b) three quarters, (c) full, (d) one and a half times, (e) twice, (f) five times and (g) ten times average earnings, the increase in net income to be derived from (i) a one pence cut in the standard rate of income tax in the 1991-92 financial year, (ii) an increase in personal allowances, over the above indexation, which incurred the same cost as a one pence cut in the standard rate income tax, (iii) an increase in child benefit which incurred the same cost as a one pence cut in standard rate income tax, both assuming and not assuming similar increases in the income support and family credit children's rates separately and (iv) the introduction of reduced rate tax bands of (1) 20 per cent. and (2) 15 per cent. at the same cost as a one pence cut in standard rate income tax, showing what band of income the reduced rate would cover.

Mr. Maude: The effects of the various changes to income tax and child benefit on a married man with two children are shown in the table. In a full year each of the changes would cost about £1·95 billion which is the cost of a 1p cut in the basic rate of income tax. Estimates are based on projections of the 1988-89 survey of personal incomes in line with forecasts in the autumn statement.

Holiday Homes

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations took place with representatives of the tourism industry before the decision was taken to impose value added tax on the purchase of holiday homes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The change in VAT liability referred to was one of a number of VAT coverage changes made in the Finance Act 1989. The position was made clear to the main trade association concerned in May 1989. The provision imposing the standard rate on holiday homes was subsequently found to be defective in a recent decision in a VAT tribunal. The statutory instrument was designed to return the legal position largely to what was intended in 1989. Before it was debated by the Standing Committee, I met representatives of the British Holiday and Home Parks Association and explained to them that, as tourist services, with the exception of public transport, are liable to VAT I saw no compelling case for a special relief for new, restricted occupancy holiday homes.

VAT (Animals)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what value added tax rate is payable on the sale of (a) pedigree cattle, (b) pigs, (c) goats, (d) rabbits and (e) shire, show and draught horses;

(2) what rate of value added tax applies to (a) bloodstock race horses and (b) other types of horse.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Live animals of a kind generally used as, or yielding or producing food for human consumption, including cattle, pigs, goats and rabbits, are zero-rated for VAT. Other animals, including horses of all types, are taxable at the standard rate of 15 per cent.

Unitary Taxation

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government's review of the situation on unitary taxation with the United States Treasury referred to by the then Financial Secretary to the Treasury on 18 December 1989 at column 176, has now been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lamont: The review has been extended to take account of the outcome of the case of Barclays Bank International Ltd. v. Franchise Tax Board of the State of California in the Californian appeal court. A decision has now been given in this case and it is hoped to complete the report in the near future.

Endangered Species

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of articles relating to rare and endangered species seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in the last complete year for which statistics are held.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In the year to 31 March 1990 Customs seized 1,546 live animals and birds, 188 plants and 7,148 parts and derivatives (such as elephant tusks, stuffed animals and birds and goods made from ivory or reptile leather) because their importation or exportation contravened the restrictions imposed by the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976 or Council regulation No. 3626/82.

Cigarettes

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in the tax take on cigarettes in real terms since 1987.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In the year to September 1990 estimated real receipts from excise duty and value added tax on cigarettes were 8 per cent. lower than in 1987.

Cash Limits

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed in the cash limit and running cost limit for 1990-91 for Customs and Excise.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVIII, vote 6 will be increased by £23,438,000 from £647,862,000 to £671,300,000 and the running costs limit by £1,380,000 from £575,799,000 to £577,179,000. The increase in the running costs limit arises from the need to enforce sanctions against trade with Iraq and for extra costs associated with a survey for the Central Statistical Office and a centrally organised telecommunications system project. The increase in the cash limit otherwise is almost wholly accounted for by the need to pay interest on large refunds of VAT being made as a result of recent legal decisions in both United Kingdom and European Community courts. There is also a predicted shortfall in receipts due mainly to a lower-than-expected number of requests by traders for out of hours attendance by officers.

The increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any changes are proposed in the cash limit and running cost limit for 1990-91 for the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Maude: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate the cash limit for class XVIII, vote 7 will be increased by £4,167,000 from £1,403,945,000 to £1,408,112,000 and the Department's running cost limit by £182,000 from £1,327,395,000 to £1,327,577,000. The change in the running costs limit arises from a transfer from the Cabinet Office (Office of the Minister for the Civil Service) for challenge funding (class XX, vote 1). The change in cash limit also includes the full take-up of the capital end-year flexibility entitlement announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 25 July 1990. The increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Mr. Moate: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there will be any changes to the Treasury's cash and running costs limits in 1990-91.

Mr. Mellor: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit for class XVIII, vote 1 will be increased by £407,000 from £77,531,000 to £77,938,000.

The cash limit increase reflects the take-up of £509,000 of the entitlement to carry forward capital underspends announced by my predecessor on 25 July 1990, Official Report, columns 235-38, offset by a net reduction of £102,000 in provision for running costs expenditure in the light of reduced requirements. The increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

A token supplementary estimate will be sought for class XVIII, vote 3, reflecting higher running costs and other expenditure by the Civil Service Catering Organisation in the light of increased trading activity fully offset by an increase in receipts from their customers. The increase in running costs expenditure partly reflects the take-up of the full entitlement of £377,000 to carry forward running costs underspends announced on 25 July 1990.

As a result of these changes, the running costs limit of Her Majesty's Treasury will be increased by £1,988,000 from £83,147,000 to £85,135,000.

Mr. Moss: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is proposing any change to the Central Statistical Office's running cost limit for 1990-91.

Mr. Maples: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary token supplementary estimate, the running cost limit for class XVIII, vote 13 will be increased by £26,000 from £22,457,000 to £22,483,000. The increase reflects the measures planned, in response to the 34th report, Session 1989-90, of the Committee of Public Accounts (Cmnd 1323), to improve the quality of price collection for the retail prices index. The increase in provision for these measures is offset by savings in the capital provision on the same vote.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he proposes to make to the cash and running cost limits for 1990-91 for the National Investment and Loans Office.

Mr. Maples: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVIII, vote 11 will be increased by £249,000 from £1,000 to £250,000. The additional provision is required to cover a shortfall in fees payable on loans to local authorities. The increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement. The running costs limit will be reduced by £169,000 from £1,369,000 to £1,200,000.

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The ECOFIN Council met in Brussels on 28 January. The inter-governmental conference on economic and monetary union met later the same day. I represented the United Kingdom at both meetings.

The meeting began with a discussion of the economic situation in member states as part of the multilateral surveillance under stage 1 of economic and monetary union. It was generally agreed that strict monetary policy was essential, and that structural improvements were needed, particularly in the employment market and that saving and investment needed to be increased and budget deficits reduced.

The presidency introduced its work programme on VAT and excise questions which was endorsed by the Council. I also made a statement emphasising the importance of the recent report on export refunds by the European Court of Auditors, which highlighted the need for improvements in the management of this significant area of the Community budget, in part to reduce the risk of fraud. It was agreed that progress in meeting the court's recommendations should be carefully monitored.

On the basis of a report that the Commission had received pledges of $500 million from non EC members of the G24 and others for a loan to Czechoslovakia, the Council agreed that the Community would contribute a further $500 million and that the necessary legal texts should be adopted as soon as possible. The Council also agreed that the Community would pledge a 50 per cent. contribution, up to $250 million, to a loan by the G24 to Hungary.

Over lunch, I also raised the question of burden-sharing by other countries for the costs of the war in the Gulf, and emphasised the substantial contribution being made to the allied operations by the United Kingdom.

A balance of payments loan to Greece of the order of 2·2 billion ecu (about £1½ billion) was agreed in principle. The first tranche will consist of the order of 1 billion ecu, but the release of further tranches will be decided by the Commission in consultation with the Council in the light of the Greek Government's performance in implementing its programme of economic reform. The formal decision will set out the precise conditions for the granting of this loan and will be taken at the next meeting of the Council on 25 February.

The meeting of the intergovernmental conference focused on procedure, endorsing a proposal by the Presidency that the IGC should concentrate on drafting treaty texts and agreeing, in broad terms the work programme of the next meetings of the IGC. France and Spain introduced proposals on economic and monetary union. The next meeting of the IGC at ministerial level will be on 25 February.

HEALTH

Psychiatric Patients

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of patients from psychiatric institutions who were released into the community and who have been readmitted to psychiatric institutions over the last 10 years.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Baby Care Units

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding was provided for special care baby units for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Medicine Labelling

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation for the mandatory labelling of medicines in large print and braille; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to do so. All medicines labelling has to be clearly printed but the provision of braille labelling presents technical difficulties, not least being the lack of space available in which to carry the information required. I understand that some work has been done on this and that the Royal Pharmaceutical Society is having discussions with industry.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether leukaemia sufferers are exempted from prescription charges.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Leukaemia sufferers are not automatically entitled to free NHS prescriptions. Those in financial need will qualify for help. There are extensive general exemption arrangements designed to protect those who are likely to have difficulty in paying. Prescription pre-payment certificates are also available for anyone who does not qualify for exemption but who needs a lot of medication, and these can lead to considerable savings. As a result of the present exemption arrangements and pre-payment certificate scheme, a prescription charge is paid on less than one item in five dispensed.

OPCS Cash Limits

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any changes to the cash limits for the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for 1990-91.

Mr. Dorrell: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XIII, vote 6 (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys) will be increased by £220,000 from £48,878,000 to £49,098,000. This reflects an increase of £220,000 in capital provision towards the fitting out of the 1991 census regional processing office at Hillington in Glasgow (this represents a timing change within the overall 1991 census expenditure); an increase of £272,000 in the social survey area exempt from gross running cost control for development work on the enlarged labour force survey. This latter cost will be met from within the existing resource of the Department of Employment (class VI, vote 2) and will be financed by an equivalent increase in appropriations in aid. The increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's current spending on research into myalgic encephalomyelitis; and whether he has plans to increase this in the next financial year.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave to the hon. member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 15 October 1990 at column 659.

Census

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he has decided to obtain independent advice on the confidentiality arrangements for samples of anonymised records from the 1991 census.

Mr. Dorrell: The president of the Royal Statistical Society, having been consulted about the best procedure, has nominated Professor D. Holt, deputy vice chancellor of the University of Southampton, as technical assessor. I am pleased to be able to announce that Professor Holt has agreed to act in this capacity. He will consider the confidentiality arrangements for the samples of anonymised records (SARs) requested from the 1991 census of Great Britain by the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC), and will assess whether or not the arrangements ensure that any risk of inadvertent disclosure of census information about identifiable individuals is minimised. He will advise the registrars general both on the confidentiality measures included in draft specifications of the SARs and on the proposals for their subsequent use. Once the draft specifications have been revised (if appropriate) as a result of his advice, he will prepare a report for Ministers on the proposed confidentiality arrangements. That report will be considered before any final approval is given for the production and supply of the SARs.

Cash Limits

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any changes will be made to the cash limits and running cost limits of his Department in 1990-91.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 1 (Hospital and community health services, family health services (part) and other services, England) will be reduced by £1,250,000 from £14,194,789,000 to £14,193,539,000. This reduction represents a transfer to class XIII, vote 3.

The cash limits for class XIII, vote 3 (Department of Health administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England) will be increased by £43,255,000 from £691,253,000 to £734,508,000. This provides an additional £42,000,000 for grants to haemophiliacs infected with HIV; £1,250,000 transferred from class XIII, vote 1 following a reapportionment of family health service funds and £5,000 from class XIV, vote 7 for revised manpower costs. The Department's running cost limit is reduced by £4,356,000 from £202,049,000 to £197,693,000.

The increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Wakefield Health Authority

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on how many occasions over the last five years the finances of Wakefield health authority have been examined by his Department's director of audit;

(2) if he will direct the Audit Commission to conduct an inquiry into the financial management of Wakefield health authority;

(3) on how many occasions over the past five years his Department's director of audit has drawn matters of concern regarding the financial management of Wakefield health authority to the attention of (a) the Yorkshire regional health authority, (b) the Wakefield health authority and (c) other bodies; and what were the matters in question in each instance.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 31 January 1991]: In common with the arrangements for all health authorities, staff of the Department's director of audit will have made the necessary visits to Wakefield health authority in order to carry out the statutory audit of its annual accounts entailing related examination of its financial systems and procedures.

Matters arising from audits are routinely raised with local management although auditors at their discretion may include subjects in their audit reports which are directed to the Secretary of State for Health but on which resolution is delegated to regional health authorities, who are expected to ensure that remedial action is taken in liaison with the Department.

During the last five years the audit reports on the Wakefield health authority included one such item recommending the complete vacation and disposal of a hospital site which had already been closed for patient care. The Yorkshire regional health authority was involved in resolving this matter.

Responsibility for the statutory audit of the national health service now lies with the Audit Commission. It is for the Audit Commission itself to decide what inquiries are appropriate.

Health Authority Functions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the functions which have been passed from health authorities to local authorities since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 24 January 1991]: The development and growth of community care over the last 12 years has reshaped the boundary between health and social care, not least by the reduction in the number of children and adults permanently resident in hospital. There has, however, been no transfer of statutory functions in this period.

SCOTLAND

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the date of incorporation and the operational commencement date for the local enterprise company for Argyll, Arran and the Cumbraes;

(2) if he will list (a) the dates of incorporation and (b) the operational commencement dates of each local enterprise company operating in the area formerly covered by the Scottish Development Agency in 1991-92.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The local enterprise company for Argyll, Bute, Arran and the Cumbraes was incorporated on 6 August 1990; the remainder of the information requested about incorporation dates is set out in the table.

Local enterprise company	Date of incorporation
Borders	30 July 1990
Central	25 May 1990
Grampian	16 May 1989
Lanarkshire	27 April 1990
Lothian	30 April 1990
Moray, Badenoch and Strathspey[1]	1 March 1990
Tayside	22 August 1990

[1] Straddles the Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise boundaries.

Operational commencement is not readily linked to a single date. Local enterprise companies' operations have commenced in all cases, with the business planning process, and they are increasingly involved in operational decisions both about individual projects and about matters such as the agreement of new contracts with training providers. The next stage will be for detailed operational contracts to be awarded to companies by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. In general, these contracts will be awarded over the next few weeks and will result in local enterprise companies becoming fully operational on 1 April, the same date as Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise take over full operational responsibility from their predecessor bodies.

Cash Limits

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to make any changes to the cash limits for 1990-91 within his responsibility.

Mr. Lang: Yes, I intend to make changes to eight of the cash limits within my responsibility as follows.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XV, vote 3, regional and general industrial support, will be increased by £10,460,000 from £140,716,000 to £151,176,000. The increase is to provide for a special payment of grant in aid to the Scottish Development Agency to extinguish the residual public dividend capital and national loans fund debt prior to the establishment of Scottish Enterprise; this has no net effect on public expenditure.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XV, vote 8, housing, Scotland will be increased by £8,957,000 from £316,364,000 to £325,321,000. The increase to Scottish Homes grant in aid will provide for the acquisition of stock from local authorities and new towns and for publicising the extension of the rents to mortgages scheme. The increases are partially offset by a reduced requirement for housing support grant due to lower interest rates.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XV, vote 11, administration of justice, Scotland will be increased by £659,000 from £42,790,000 to £43,449,000. This increase reflects a partial take up of capital end year flexibility entitlement announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 25 July 1990 to meet expenditure on Aberdeen sheriff court delayed from last year.

The cash limit for class XV, vote 15, education, arts, libraries and social work, Scotland will be reduced by £900,000 from £233,975,000 to £233,075,000. This reduction will partially offset the requirement for increased expenditure of £1,517,149 on the St. Helena ship being provided by the Overseas Development Administration. The remainder will be offset by further cash limits reductions of £617,149 to be announced in due course.

The cash limit for class XV, vote 19, general register office for Scotland will be reduced by £200,000 from £7,621,000 to £7,421,000 and the running costs limit reduced by £200,000 from £8,391,000 to £8,191,000.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XV, vote 20, Department of the Registers of Scotland will be increased by £1,560,000 from £1,000 to £1,561,000 to cover a shortfall in receipts. In addition, funds available for surrender to the consolidated fund as extra receipts will be reduced from £372,000 to zero. These changes will be partially offset by further cash limit reductions totalling £414,851 to be announced in due course.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XV, vote 21, Scottish Office administration will be increased by £217,000 from £130,152,000 to £130,369,000. Increased provision is required to reduce the backlog of regional medical service reference work and to meet extraordinary legal expenses. The additional expenditure will, however, be partially offset by a reduction in the cash limits for class XIV, vote 7. Increased provision is also required for expenditure on outward seconded staff but this will be offset by a corresponding increase in receipts. As a result of changes relating to the regional medical service and the running costs provision within class XV, vote 14 the running costs limit for the Scottish Office will be increased by £442,000 from £222,597,000 to £223,039,000.

The non-voted cash limit SOLA2 will be reduced by £10,510,000 from £347,987,000 to £337,468,000. This is required to provide for the acquisition of stock by Scottish Homes from local authorities and new town development corporations.

These changes are within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Abortions

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of abortions performed in (a) Scotland and (b) each of the health board areas in each of the past 10 years; what percentage they represent of all categories; and how many of the abortions were carried out after (i) 20 weeks, (ii) 24 weeks and (iii) 28 weeks.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about abortions in Scotland by health board of treatment and area of residence, and the statutory grounds under which they were carried out, is published annually in "Scottish Health Statistics", a copy of which is in the Library. The following table shows the numbers of abortions by gestational age for the period 1980-89.

Estimated period of gestation (weeks)	Year of Termination
	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
20-23	92	84	69	65	51	41	51	53	44	26
24-27	10	6	5	6	7	5	5	6	5	3
28+	—	1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—

Roodlands Hospital, Haddington

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if the announcement by his predecessor, the right hon. and learned Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind), of 6 September 1990, concerning the provision of a 24-hour treatment service at the casualty unit at Roodlands hospital, Haddington, remains Government policy;

(2) whether a 24-hour treatment service is provided at the casualty unit at Roodlands hospital, Haddington; when he intends to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for East Lothian dated 21 December 1990 on that subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I replied on 28 January to the letter of 21 December. My letter explained the full circumstances of the 24-hour casualty service which Lothian health board is providing in Haddington.

Scottish Food

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are employed in the manufacture of Scottish food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There were an estimated 43,200 people employed in firms employing more than 10 workers in Scotland in 1989 in the manufacture of food. The food manufacturing industry remains an important industry in Scotland employing more than one in 10 of all manufacturing employees.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to promote Scottish food abroad; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what were the reasons for the withdrawal of funds from Scottish Food Promotion; who will carry out its functions in future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Scottish Food Promotion Ltd. was established in 1987 with support from the Scottish milk marketing board, Scottish salmon board, Scotch Quality Beef and Lamb Association, and the Scottish Development Agency and Highlands and Islands development board. Support from the two development agencies was made on a reducing basis over a three-year period, with the expectation that funding from the private sector would eventually replace public support.

I understand that the SFP board decided to wind up the company when it was unable to attract funding for its new business plan. The promotion of sales by Scottish food and drink companies is primarily a matter for the companies themselves. The Government do provide support through Food From Britain and the Department of Trade and Industry. I understand that the SDA is considering what further public support is needed for Scottish companies and that it will maintain a Scottish presence at major food and drink trade shows.

Registers (Financial Control)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the financial control arrangements for the registers of Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The registers of Scotland (ROS) was approved for exemption from gross running costs control from 1989-90 on the basis of meeting certain management, performance and financial targets, in particular that it should recover the full costs of its services each year. ROS has been unable to meet the cost recovery target this year and will require supplementary substantive provision for 1990-91.

Exemption has therefore been suspended for the remainder of 1990-91 with the result that changes in ROS gross expenditure and its funding have been subject to full Treasury scrutiny.

Net control (the successor to exemption) will resume from April 1991, subject to ROS making good the shortfall in income for 1990-91 in 1991-92.

Crown Office (Cash Limits)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Lord Advocate proposes any changes to the Crown Office's cash and running costs limits for 1990-91.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class X, vote 13, will be increased by £1,365,000 from £28,369,000 to £29,734,000. The Department's running costs limit will be increased by £1,378,000 from £21,701,000 to £23,079,000. This increase will enable the Crown Office to meet additional costs relating to an increase in staff numbers, higher than expected salary increases and the costs of a high level review of the Department recommended by the Public Accounts Committee. The increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Grant-aided Colleges

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has determined the allocations of grant-in-aid for recurrent expenditure to grant-aided colleges in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The allocations are as follows:

	Offer 1991-92 £m
Craigie College of Education	1·198
Duncan of Jordanstone College of Art	3·419
Dundee Institute of Technology	6·540
Edinburgh College of Art	3·126
Glasgow Polytechnic	14·525
Glasgow School of Art	2·993
Jordanhill College of Education	8·301
Moray House College of Education	6·259
Napier Polytechnic of Edinburgh	17·799
Northern College of Education	4·618
Paisley College of Technology	9·757
Queen's College, Glasgow	3·918
Queen Margaret College	4·413
Robert Gordon Institute of Technology	11·154
RSAMD	2·314
St. Andrew's College of Education	2·914
Scottish College of Textiles	2·107

The offers, which are conditional on parliamentary approval of the supply estimates, take account of the substantial increases in the tuition fees which colleges will receive for undergraduate students under the student awards system.

The system of determining grant-in-aid allocations distributes the funds available by reference to a funded number of students for each college, weighted by subject group. Some modifications in the funding system have been made for 1991-92 following consultation with the colleges, notably to transfer from grant-in-aid into aggregate external finance for local authorities most of the resources for in-service training of teachers at colleges of education; and also to reflect more closely colleges' past performance in attracting and retaining students. In addition there are substantial inward transfers from other providers of courses in professions allied to medicine and the built environment. Not counting these transfers, the number of students for whom grant-in-aid provision has been made has been increased by about 7 per cent. in 1991-92 in recognition of the success of the sector in attracting additional students.

The grant allocations take account of the further substantial increases in the level of the publicly-funded undergraduate tuition fees to be paid to colleges as from September 1991 and, after adjusting for transfers, the allocations represent an increase in Government funding of about £20 million; or 14 per cent. compared with the current year if colleges achieve their funded student enrolments. The table shows how grant-in-aid plus estimated tuition fees for funded students will change for individual colleges.

Year-on-year comparison of grant-in-aid and tuition fees

	Grant-in-aid plus estimated tuition fees for funded students (£ million) 1990-91	1991-92	Change Per cent.
Craigie College of Education	1·634	1·850	+13·2
Duncan of Jordanstone	4·994	5·797	+16·1
Dundee Institute of Technology	9·472	10·469	+10·5
Edinburgh College of Art	5·045	5·494	+8·9
Glasgow Polytechnic	16·659	20·105	+20·7
Glasgow School of Art	4·532	5·005	+10·4
Jordanhill College of Education	10·765	11·892	+10·5
Moray House College of Education	8·059	9·119	+13·2
Napier Polytechnic of Edinburgh	23·783	27·251	+14·6
Northern College of Education	6·070	6·833	+12·6
Paisley College of Technology	13·751	15·611	+13·5
Queen's College, Glasgow	4·113	4·782	+16·3
Queen Margaret College	6·061	7·109	+17·3
Robert Gordon Institute of Technology	15·360	17·814	+16·0
RSAMD	2·924	3·100	+6·0
St. Andrew's College of Education	3·759	4·460	+18·6
Scottish College of Textiles	3·117	3·363	+7·9
All colleges	140·098	160·054	+14·2

Note: The inward transfers of resources for building courses and courses for professions allied to medicine from other sectors, and outward transfers of resources for in-service training of teachers are excluded from the figures.

The allocations reflect the high priority which the Government are continuing to give to higher education. The funding levels will adequately cover cost increases and will also enable the colleges to continue to contribute to the rising participation in higher education of recent years. Colleges are free to recruit students above the levels on which grant-in-aid is based and can thus benefit from the increased tuition fee levels to be paid from public funds for those students who are entitled to students' awards.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table indicating current unemployment levels in each urban development corporation area.

Mr. Jackson: Urban development corporation (UDC) boundaries do not correspond to areas for which unemployment figures are available. Unemployment figures for the travel-to-work areas which include the UDCs, for December 1990, are contained in the following table.

Urban development corporation	TTWA	Total unemployed	[1] Rate
London Docklands	London	230,694	5·8
Black Country	Walsall	12,307	7·3
	Wolverhampton	12,994	8·7

Sheltered Placement Scheme

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement regarding his decision to stop the expansion of the sheltered placement scheme in 1990-91.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 31 January 1991]: The sheltered placement scheme (SPS) is part of my Department's sheltered employment programme. Since 1985 the scheme has been extremely successful in offering people with severe disabilities a wide choice of employment opportunities.

In 1990-91 my Department is making available to local authorities and voluntary organisations £4·2 million more than the previous year to support jobs for people with severe disabilities. Our first priority in using this additional money has been to help maintain the jobs of existing SPS workers by increasing the grants paid to sponsors to assist in meeting their rising wage bills and administrative costs. In 1990-91 the scheme will support an average of 6,700 sheltered placement jobs throughout the country at an estimated cost of £15·7 million. Whilst there has been no increase in the number of SPS places in 1990-91, previous patterns of turnover indicate that some 1,000 existing places nationally are likely to become vacant to allow new entrants to join the scheme.

Cash Limits

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether any change will be made to his Department's cash limits or running costs limits for 1990-91.

Mr. Jackson [pursuant to his reply, 8 November 1990, c. 10]: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following further changes will be made:

The cash limit for class VI, vote 1 (training and enterprise programmes) will be reduced by £152,233,000 from £2,452,338,000 to £2,300,105,000. Of this reduction, £145,000,000 will be transferred to class VI, vote 2 to offset a £132,400,000 increase in European social fund payments to third parties and a number of other minor changes. In addition £4,217,000 is transferred to class VI, vote 5 for the sale of the STA. Further transfers result in a net decrease of £3,016,000.

The cash limit for class VI, vote 2 (other programmes and central services), will be increased by £10,830,000 from £214,197,000 to £225,027,000. This increase is offset by a reduction on the class VI, vote 1 cash limit.

The cash limit for class VI, vote 3 (employment service), will be increased by £24,000 from £415,304,000 to £415,328,000. This increase is offset by reductions on class VI, vote 1. The changes include the transfer of £658,000 from class VI, vote 1 in connection with the transfer of the employment rehabilitation service and increased provision of £93,000 for additional statistical work on the RPI. These increases are partly offset by receipts from the CSO and increased receipts as a result of the employment service revenue generation scheme.

The cash limit for class VI, vote 4 (Health and Safety Commission and Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service), will increase by £1,242,000 from £137,211,000 to £138,453,000. This increase is offset by a reduction of the cash limit on class VI, vote 1. The main changes relate to a transfer of £1,500,000 from class VI, vote 1 to pay for higher staff relocation costs and the effects of the transfer of the railway inspectorate. These increases are partly offset by higher receipts.

The cash limit for class VI, vote 5 (Sale of Skills Training Agency), will increase by £4,217,000 from a token £1,000 to £4,218,000. This increase is offset by reductions in the cash limit on class VI, vote 1. The increase is to fund the main sale expenditure of the Skills Training Agency, and to reflect a reduction in receipts due to delays in the sale of properties and leases.

As a result of these changes, the DE group cash limits will fall by £135,920,000. However, public expenditure will reduce by only £3,520,000 because the £132,400,000 increase in ESF payments to third parties shown on class VI, vote 2 is due to its receipts which do not score in DE's cash limits but are included in public expenditure totals.

The running costs limit for the Department of Employment (Votes 1,2,3 and 5) will be increased by £25,726,000 from £916,267,000 to £941,993,000.

The running costs limit for the Health and Safety Commission will increase by £1,680,000 from £100,621,000 fo £102,301,000.

These increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

DEFENCE

Gulf War (Pay)

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the comparative rates of pay of reservist troops and regular troops, by rank, serving in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All regulars and reservists serving in the Gulf receive the same basic rates of pay. However, reservists are entitled to a taxable supplement of up to 20 per cent. of service pay (and more in special cases) to help make up any loss of civilian earnings up to a maximum total ceiling, including service pay, of £55,000.

Territorial Army Reservists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 16 November to the hon. Member for Don Valley, Official Report, column 228, if he will make it his practice to keep central records of individual casualties among Territorial Army reservists.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Gulf War (Costs)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current estimated daily cost of the British presence in the Gulf arising from the invasion of Kuwait.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current full daily operating cost of the British presence in the Gulf arising from the invasion of Kuwait is estimated to be over £4 million per day.

Gulf Oil Spills

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what protection is available to the United Nations Environment Programme global environment monitoring system studying oil spills in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom has received no request for any form of protection for UNEP global environment monitoring system personnel in the Gulf.

Prisoners of War

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the areas of Iraq that are sufficiently far from military action to constitute safe areas for prisoners of war under article 14 of the Geneva convention.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The targets being attacked by the coalition are sites which could pose a threat to allied forces or facilities supporting Iraq's occupation of Kuwait. Article 23 of the third Geneva convention states that no prisoner of war may at any time be sent to, or detained in areas where he may be exposed to the fire of the combat zone, nor may his presence be used to render certain points or areas immune from military operations. Iraq has not yet provided any information to the International Committee of the Red Cross on the personnel being held or their location, nor permitted the ICRC to satisfy itself that they are being held in accordance with Iraq's obligations.

Cash Limits

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any changes to the defence cash limits and running costs limits for 1990-91.

Mr. Tom King: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary spring supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

(1) Defence Cash Limits

£'000s

Class and Vote	Current Cash Limit	Change	Revised Cash Limit
I, 1	9,108,295	+100,000	9,208,295
I, 2	8,944,597	+196,728	9,141,325
I, 3	1,407,570	+10,975	1,418,545
I, 4	1,930,960	−87,901	1,843,059
I, 5	494,027	+40,000	534,027

These changes, which increase the block Defence cash limit by £259,802,000 from £21,885,449,000 to £22,145,251,000, are principally to cover costs arising from the deployments of British forces to the Gulf area. The changes also take account of a number of minor transfers between the Ministry of Defence and other Government Departments. They are consistent with the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

(2) Running Costs Limit

Within the block Defence cash limit the running costs limit for the Department will be increased by £66,011,000 from £5,362,678,000 to £5,428,689,000. This is mainly for additional running costs being incurred on the Defence budget as a result of the crisis in the Gulf area.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Environmental Protection

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he made to Commissioner Ray MacSharry to seek to ensure that environmental protection measures are linked closely with production and budgetary reforms to the common agricultural policy being discussed by European Commissioners.

Mr. Curry: As my right hon. Friend the Minister made clear in his reply to the hon. Member for Bosworth on 23 January at column 247, we did not have the opportunity at the last meeting of the Agricultural Council to give our views on the EC Commission's ideas for reforming the common agricultural policy, but at next week's Council we intend to argue for the closer integration of agricultural and environmental policies.

Tourism

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations took place with representatives of the tourism industry before the abolition of capital grants for the provision of tourist accommodation under the farm diversification scheme.

Mr. Curry: In reaching a decision the Ministry took into account a range of views and considerations including those of the tourism industry.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the European Commission to raise the levels of reimbursement for payments made in environmentally sensitive areas in objective 1 and 5b areas of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: None, since any increase would be bound to apply to other member states. A general rise would increase the overall cost of existing schemes to the United Kingdom Exchequer without any direct benefit to United Kingdom farmers.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish a consultation paper on reforms to bring about more explicit environmental benefits from the hill livestock compensatory allowances system.

Mr. Curry: I plan to consult interested parties as soon as we have specific proposals to present on how the existing environmental benefits afforded by hill livestock compensatory allowances might be made more specific.

Drift-net Fishing

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken to protect fish stocks in waters for which Britain is responsible from the activities of drift-net fishing.

Mr. Curry: The small-scale drift net fisheries found in United Kingdom waters are considered to be relatively selective in operation, targeting certain fish species reasonably effectively. Various restrictions including minimum mesh size controls may be applied in these fisheries, and those for salmon and trout in particular are tightly regulated.

Food From Britain

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what percentage of funding through Food From Britain was spent promoting Scottish food; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what percentage of funding through Food From Britain was spent promoting Welsh food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The information is not available in the form requested. Food From Britain has the task of promoting British foodstuffs from all parts of the United Kingdom, and offers services to food companies without regard to their geographical location.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to promote (a) English food abroad and (b) British food abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Government are fully committed to the promotion of food from the United Kingdom both at home and abroad. We provide substantial financial support to the national food marketing organisation, Food From Britain, so that its resources and expertise can be drawn upon by British food producers, manufacturers and traders in increasing the sales of British food to the consumers of the world.

Cash Limits

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to make any changes to his Department's cash limits for 1990-91.

Mr. Gummer: Yes. The non-voted cash limit MAFF/LACAP (supplementary credit approvals for flood defence and coast protection) will be increased by £2,300,000 from £13,230,000 to £15,530,000, to enable local authorities to devote additional resources to coast protection work following the severe winter storms at the beginning of 1990.

The cash limit for class III, vote 5 (departmental research, advisory services and administration) will be reduced by £2,000,000, from £285,096,000 to £283,096,000, reflecting a predicted shortfall in spending on capital works.

The net increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the autumn statement.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Missile Technology Control Regime

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries that are currently members of the missile technology control regime and the date on which they became members.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The missile technology control regime was established in 1987 by Canada, France, the FRG, Italy, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States. In 1989 Spain also adhered to the MTCR guidelines. In 1990 six further countries, Australia, Belgium, Denmark, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Norway, also announced their adherence to the MTCR.

Weapons

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest list of weapons outlawed by international law; and what efforts the United Kingdom is making to extend that list.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no international agreed list of outlawed weapons. However, restrictions on certain types of weapon are included in a variety of international agreements. Such restrictions apply only to countries which are parties to the agreement.

Iraq (Muslim Holy Sites)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report his letter of 28 January to the hon. Member for Linlithgow concerning damage to Muslim holy sites in Iraq.

Mr. Hurd: I am arranging for a copy of my letter of 28 January to the hon. Member to be placed in the Library of the House.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 4 and 5 February. Ministers will discuss the situation in the Soviet Union and the consequences of events in the Baltic states for the EC's aid proposals. They will also discuss food aid for Romania and Bulgaria and the extension of European Investment bank lending to Czechoslovakia, Romania and Bulgaria. The Council may review progress towards the resumption of negotiations on GATT, and will consider EC/United States trade in aircraft. Political co-operation issues will also be discussed. The ministerial meeting of the inter-governmental Conference on political union on 4 February will consider progress made by Ministers' personal representatives.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 4 and 5 February and will discuss the development of the common agriculture policy, the agriculture aspect of the GATT Uruguay round and EC quality standards for fresh and frozen sheep carcases.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 25 February to consider financial assistance to central and eastern Europe and aid to the USSR. The abolition of fiscal frontiers appears on the agenda but no substantive discussion is expected. The ministerial meeting of the inter-governmental conference on economic and monetary union on 25 February will hold a general discussion on progress made to date by Ministers' personal representatives.

Prisoners of War

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken by the United Kingdom and other countries to ensure that prisoners of war held by Iraq are being treated in accordance with the Geneva convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 31 January at column 605.

Falkland Islands (Fishing)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on Japanese drift-net fishing in the vicinity of the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Falkland Islands Government, who manage the Falkland Islands interim conservation and management zone and the Falklands outer conservation zone, are not aware of any drift net fishing in the vicinity of the Falkland Islands.

Taiwan

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Taiwanese authorities regarding drift-net fishing; and if he will make it his policy to ban all Taiwanese fishing in waters for which Britain is responsible until the Taiwanese end the use of drift-nets.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no dealings with the authorities in Taiwan. We welcomed the decision of the authorities in Taiwan in September last year to comply in principle with the resolution on large-scale pelagic drift net fishing adopted by the 44th General Assembly of the United Nations. We also welcomed the additional measures undertaken by the authorities in Taiwan such as a ban on the building of new drift net vessels and a ban on the operation of drift net fishing in the Atlantic. We do not propose to take action against Taiwan fishing vessels.

British Overseas Territories (Fishing)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which countries licences have been granted for fishing operations in the economic exclusion zone waters of British overseas territories.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Dependent territories of the United Kingdom do not have exclusive economic zones, but a number of them have fisheries jurisdictions. Licences have been issued to vessels and associations from a number of countries; it is not normal practice to enter into licence agreements with foreign Governments.

Cash Limits

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he proposes to make any changes in his Department's diplomatic wing cash limits and running costs limits for 1990-91.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made: The cash limit for class II, vote 1 (overseas representation) will be increased by £18,058,000 from £534,722,000 to £552,780,000. In addition, the running costs limit on vote 1 will be increased by £14,986,000 from £477,103,000 to £492,089,000. These changes reflect increased costs due to the Gulf crisis; construction of buildings and adverse effect of overseas price movements.

The cash limit for class II, vote 2 (other external relations) will increase by £11,402,000 from £176,019,000 to £187,421,000. This takes account of increased costs on Vietnamese boat people; international conferences; FCO scholarships; military assistance; consular expenditure in the middle east as a result of the Gulf crisis and higher than forecast expenditure on our contributions to international organisations due to the adverse effect of overseas price movements.

The cash limit for class II, vote 3 (external broadcasting and monitoring) will increase by £4,760,000 from £142,685,000 to £147,445,000 to take account of increased rental for Bush house and increased costs as a result of the Gulf crisis.

The cash limit for class II, vote 4 (the British Council) will increase by £2,076,000 from £76,233,000 to £78,309,000 to take account of the adverse effect of overseas price movements. These increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Saudi Arabia

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being given to British nationals to leave Saudi Arabia following the cessation of civilian flights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have arranged for British nationals to leave Saudi Arabia on Kuwait Airways flights from Dhahran. Only about 230 British nationals have taken up this opportunity. The last of these flights left on 30 January.

Saudia Airlines is operating a service of three flights a week between Jedda and the United Kingdom and a daily shuttle service between Jedda and Riyadh. British Airways will provide a similar service between London and Jedda from 31 January. It continues to be possible to travel without difficulty by road between Dhahran, Riyadh and Jedda.

The American military have also offered seats on their aircraft to British nationals.

TRANSPORT

Boom Equipment

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultation has taken place, and what advice has been received, from local authorities as to the adequacy of the scale, type and amount of boom equipment stationed in Scotland for use in an oil pollution incident.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department's marine pollution control unit (MPCU) keeps local authorities fully informed of the content of its stockpiles of beach protection and cleaning equipment and is always ready to consider any suggestion they might make about the amount or type of equipment it keeps. However, there have been no formal consultations with, or advice from, local authorities as to the adequacy of the scale, type and amount of boom equipment stationed in Scotland for use in an oil spill incident.

As I explained in my answer of 4 July at col. 563 the MPCU's stocks of highly mobile resources, including booms, are on short notice stand-by at various locations around the United Kingdom from where they can be quickly deployed to the west coast of Scotland, or any other part of the United Kingdom which may be threatened by a major oil spill.

The adequacy of these resources is kept under constant review and following the Rosebay incident off the south Devon coast in May of last year, the MPCU has taken steps to enhance substantially its stockpiles, including the one at Cambusbarron in Scotland, by improving its stocks of booms, shoreline barriers, skimmers and other equipment.

Prestwick Airport

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to encourage an increase in freight and passenger traffic using Prestwick airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is for airlines to decide whether they wish to mount services using Prestwick, and for BAA plc, as the owner of the airport, to encourage them to do so. Proposals put forward for new services by foreign airlines will be considered as quickly as possible within the framework of the appropriate air service agreements, and account will be taken of the Government's wish to see effective use of Prestwick.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give, for Great Britain as a whole and for Scotland, the total rail route length, and the percentage which is electrified, including projects approved or under construction.

Mr. Freeman: At 31 March 1990 British Rail had 10,307 route miles in Great Britain of which some 28 per cent. are electrified or will be electrified by projects approved or under construction. British Rail has some 1,700 route miles in Scotland, 10 per cent. of which are or will be electrified.

Rail Crossings

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the railway inspectorate's review of footpath crossings announced in his answer to the hon. Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape) on 9 July at column 96 has been completed; and if he intends to place a copy of the review's findings in the Library when it is completed.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate is reviewing the warning and layout arrangements at footpath and bridleway crossings and the criteria for their application. Its findings will be published in due course as an additional chapter to the railway construction and operation requirements for level crossings. A copy will be placed in the Library at that time.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of British Rail's review of all the footpath and bridleway crossings of the east coast main line and proposals for bridges or underpasses at, or stopping-up or diversion of, those crossings.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is a matter for British Rail. Proposals to stop up certain level crossings on the east coast main line railway are contained in British Rail's East Coast Main Line (Safety) Bill. If this Bill is given a Second Reading, it will be for the Committee appointed to consider it to take evidence on the case for British Rail's proposals.

Disabled People

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance his Department issues to local authorities with regard to the reinstatement of existing provision for disabled people, such as dropped kerbs and tactile pavements when roads are being repaired and reinstated.

Mr. Freeman: Highway authorities are required under the Disabled Persons Act 1981 to have regard to disabled persons when considering the provisions of ramps at appropriate places between carriageways and footpaths. The Department of Transport's advice on these provisions, including such features as dropped kerbs and tactile pavements, is contained in departmental advice notes TA 52/87 "Design Considerations for Pelican and Zebra Crossings" and TA 57/87 "Roadside Features", and in the Department's disability unit circular 1/86. Where provisions are in place we would recommend that they are retained when roads are repaired and reinstated.

Cycling Accidents

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, in descending order by borough, the number of cycling accidents in each London borough in the last three years.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is as follows.

Cycling

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress towards implementing the 1,000-mile cycle lane network in London.

Mr. Chope: In 1990 the London planning advisory committee consulted all London highway authorities on the proposals for a 1,000-mile strategic cycle network. Replies are being co-ordinated by the London Cycling Forum. Results are expected later this year.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the availability of finance to local authorities for the provision of cycling facilities.

Mr. Chope: Transport supplementary grant (TSG) and credit approvals for local authority capital expenditure on highways are allocated in the light of information included in authorities' annual transport policies and programme (TPP) submissions.

The Department's circular inviting TPP submissions for 1991-92 said that expenditure on provision for cyclists will be considered for TSG where it is integral to a highway or traffic management scheme which meets the criteria for TSG accepted expenditure. Specific cycling schemes, in addition to those which form or are part of a local safety scheme, can also qualify for TSG support if they are intended to reduce accidents on roads of more than local importance. This can involve not only the construction of facilities on main roads (such as cycle lanes and cycle crossings) but also the development of cycle routes on minor roads which attract significant numbers of cyclists away from roads of more than local importance.

Most expenditure on cycling facilities is likely to take the form of "minor works" for which authorities are given a block allocation of accepted expenditure. Other expenditure on cycling, as on all other categories of expenditure, may be funded from within authorities, approved levels of borrowing, from capital receipts or from revenue.

There is no predetermined share of the total resources available reserved for cycling facilities, and it is for individual authorities to decide how much of their overall allocations to devote to them.

Child Safety Belts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he can now announce the date at which rear seat belts for children in cars will become mandatory.

Mr. Chope: Regulations requiring children under 14 years of age to be restrained when travelling in the rear seats of cars, where appropriate restraints exist and are available, came into force on 1 September 1989.

The European Commission is currently discussing a proposal for a directive on child restraint construction which is expected to include requirements on installation involving both restraint and vehicle manufacturers.

Road Repairs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give an estimate of the cost of maintenance and repairs for motorways and roads for 1990.

Mr. Chope: The latest forecast of expenditure on maintenance of motorways and trunk roads in England in 1990-91 is £543·8 million.

This includes £419·5 million of capital expenditure on the renewal of roads and the renewal and strengthening of bridges (including the Severn bridge) and £124·3 million of current expenditure on roads and bridges.

A19 Improvement Study

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make available sufficient funding to enable the recommendations contained within the A19 improvement study prepared by consultants Bullen and Partners on behalf of the northern regional office of the Department of Transport to be implemented in full.

Mr. Chope: The consultant's report listed recommendations for improvements to the A19 in an order of priority. The scheme with top priority, Testo's roundabout improvement, is currently under way.

The other improvements recommended will be processed within the annual programmes of regional improvements as funds permit.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes to make to the cash limit and running costs limit for his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limits in class VII will be changed as follows:

Class and Vote	Current cash limit	Changes	£ thousand revised cash limit
VII
1	1,798,862	[1]4,027	1,802,889
2	259,693	[2]9,037	268,730
4	135,796	[3]13,500	149,296
5	267,519	[4]1	267,520

[1] Take up in part of entitlement to end year flexibility announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 25 July 1990 (Official Report, cols. 235-40). There is a transfer of £100,000 from the Department of Environment (class VIII, vote 6) consequent upon the decision to pay grant direct to English Heritage and a token provision to enable certain payments in respect of the construction and maintenance of roads.

[2] There are increases of £8,900,000 transferred from class VII, vote 1, for the relocation of part of my Department and for additional accommodation costs and capital equipment, £20,000 in respect of first aid work and OMCS challenge funding allocations and £288,000 shortfall in appropriations in aid offset by a reduction of £171,000 resulting from the transfer of railways inspectorate to the Department of Employment (class VI, vote 4).

[3] Increases to cover shortfall in appropriations in aid of £13,500,000 in respect of the sale of marks scheme.

[4] Token. Provision has been made to enable increased expenditure on urban traffic control which will be recovered from local authorities.

The running costs limit of the Department of Transport has been increased by £2,847,000 from £322,416,000 to £325,263,000 as a consequence of running costs increases on two Votes. The bulk of this increase comprises the transfer of £2,700,000 from programme expenditure on class VII vote 4.

The increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total published today in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

The Gulf (Pollution Control)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response he has made to the Saudi Government's request for the loan of small numbers of skilled pollution control experts and advisers.

Mr. McLoughlin: Two pollution control experts, one from the Department's marine pollution control unit and the other from the DTI's Warren Spring laboratory, arrived in the Gulf yesterday.

Both have considerable experience in dealing with pollution arising from oil spills dating back to the Torrey Canyon incident off the Scilly isles in 1969 and both have been involved in clean-up operations in the Gulf on previous occasions.

Their role will be to advise the Saudi Government on response techniques and any possible needs for additional equipment.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his meeting with EEC colleagues on 29 January about the standing task force of national experts on oil pollution going to the Gulf; and if he will give a breakdown of the numbers and experience of such a task force.

Mr. McLoughlin: The meeting held on 29 January at official level was of a technical nature aimed at assessing the situation in the light of available knowledge, considering possible response strategies and determining the extent to which the Community might be able to help if requested to do so by the Saudi Government.

Member states expressed a willingness to help and it is clear that much equipment and expertise is available if required. However, I am also aware that considerable counter-pollution resources already exist in the Gulf area as a result of existing contingency plans to deal with spillages of oil from tanker casualties and other sources. It is important therefore not to mobilise European resources until it is clear that they would be needed and not simply hinder the operation.

The EC task force has no specific number of personnel. It is drawn from member states in response to specific requests to the EC for assistance and its composition will vary from incident to incident depending on the type of help and advice being sought.

Rail Technology

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to examine the new European rail technology being developed by Powell Duffryn Standard Limited.

Mr. Freeman: BR plans to use low-platform wagon technology for channel tunnel freight services, and I am taking a close interest in the development of this new rolling stock. My hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) visited Powell Duffryn in Cardiff last September, and I hope to visit their recently acquired French operation in April.

Dartford Tunnel

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on forthcoming closures of the Dartford tunnels for carriageway repairs.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 31 January 1991]: Investigations into the condition of the existing tunnels at Dartford are continuing. Until they are complete and have been evaluated, no forecast can be given of the extent and timing of any closures. If closure of one of the tunnels does become necessary, it will not happen until some time after the opening of the new bridge at the end of this summer. The increased capacity would then provide three lanes of traffic in each direction during any closure, 50 per cent. more than at present.

Speed Limits (Essex)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer on 7 December 1990, Official Report, column 254, if he has determined Essex county council's highway committee's application of October 1988 to extend the 30 mph and 40 mph speed limit zone in Dembury; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 31 January 1991]: Approval in principle was given to Essex county council on 27 December 1990. I now await their application for confirmation of this order. I understand this is likely to be submitted sometime early in March.

Road Links

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the names of the consultants appointed by his Department to examine a possible new road link between Exeter and Plymouth and a second Tamar road bridge; what was the date they were appointed; what is the proposed timetable and their terms of reference; and what are the organisations from whom evidence will be taken.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 25 January 1991]: Consultants have still to be appointed for the assessment of the needs of the A38 between Exeter and Plymouth which was announced in "Roads for Prosperity". The assessment is likely to take about 12 months.

The proposal for a second Tamar crossing was one of the six projects on which the private sector were invited to express views on the suitability for private finance in June 1990. The responses are under consideration and an announcement will be made as soon as possible.

The Department is joining with the local authorities in a traffic study of Plymouth and its environs; this should be complete by the end of 1991.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 184

SESSION 1990–91

21st January—1st February, 1991

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
